Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Eugene L. Gonzales, a minor, by Maria Gonzales, his guardian ad litem, against Kenneth M. Davis. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Robert P. Troy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jesse H. Steinhart, John J. Goldberg, and Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered after an order granting a motion for nonsuit in an action wherein the plaintiff, a minor of the age of five years, acting through his guardian ad litem, sues the defendant for the recovery of damages for injuries suffered by said plaintiff by being struck by the defendant's automobile operated by himself at the intersection of Taylor and Pacific streets in the city of San Francisco. The plaintiff alleges that his injuries were received on the 28th day of December, 1921, at said place and in the following manner: "That at said time and place while said plaintiff was walking across Pacific street at the point of its intersection with Taylor street said defendant carelessly, negligently and recklessly ran said automobile without warning signal or notice of any kind against and upon said plaintiff with great force and violence while said automobile was caused by said defendant to run and operate at a high and unlawful rate of speed, to wit, at the rate of about 35 miles per hour, whereby and wherewith said defendant knocked said plaintiff down upon the roadway of said Pacific street," and thereby caused him to sustain the detailed injuries complained of. The answer of the defendant does not deny that he was operating his said automobile upon said streets and at the intersection thereof at said time, but denies that he was doing so negligently, carelessly, or recklessly, or that while so operating his automobile he ran the same without warning, signal, or notice against or upon the plaintiff with great or any force or violence. He denies that he was operating his automobile in other than a careful and prudent manner, and denies that he was operating the same at any rate of speed in excess of 15 miles per hour. For want of information he denies that the plaintiff sustained the specific injuries complained of or that he has been damaged in any sum whatever. In a sepa-

GONZALES v. DAVIS. (S. F. 10779.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1925.)

1. Trial §165—On motion for nonsuit, evidence considered most favorably to plaintiff.

On motion for nonsuit, trial court must assume truth of all evidence educed in support of plaintiff's case and adopt inferences fairly deducible therefrom favorable to plaintiff.

2. Negligence §85(3)—Contributory negligence not imputed to child five years old.

Contributory negligence is not as a rule imputed as a matter of law to a child five years old.

3. Municipal corporations §705(1)—Automobile driver held chargeable with duty of having observations fixed on street intersection.

Automobile driver, approaching intersection on admittedly crowded and busy thoroughfare, held, under Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 22, subd. (b), chargeable with duty of having his observation fixed on intersection used by pedestrians, notwithstanding section 12 did not require sounding of horn or warning signal.

4. Municipal corporations §706(6)—Automobile driver's negligence at street intersection held for jury.

Evidence held sufficient to go to jury and support finding of culpable negligence of automobile driver, in action for injuries to child at street intersection.

5. Municipal corporations §706(6)—Statement of automobile driver immediately after injury to child held for jury.

Interpretation to be placed on defendant's statement immediately after accident, "If any-rate answer and defense the defendant pleads that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; and in a further separate and affirmative defense the defendant alleges that Pacific street "was and is a busy and crowded thoroughfare, traversed by vehicles of all kinds, and was at all times a dangerous place for children of the plaintiff's age to play; and that, while said minor was playing there, he carelessly and negligently ran against the side of the automobile driven by defendant, and thereby suffered the injuries complained of." The cause went to trial before a jury upon the issues as thus framed. The plaintiff and several other persons who witnessed the accident were sworn and testified. Certain other witnesses were also sworn and testified as to the statements made by the defendant both immediately after the accident and at a later time upon the same day in the presence of members of the plaintiff's family. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved the trial court to grant a nonsuit, which motion was granted, and the judgment which is herein appealed from followed.

[1] It is the contention of the plaintiff and appellant that the trial court was in error in granting said nonsuit. We think this contention must be sustained. It is a well-settled rule applicable to motions for nonsuit that the trial court in passing upon such motions is to assume the truth of all of the evidence adduced in support of the plaintiff's case without regard to the conflicts, if any, appearing therein, and to adopt only those inferences reasonably and fairly deducible therefrom as are most favorable to the plaintiff. Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 340, 208 P. 125, and cases cited. Applying this rule to the evidence presented in this case, we find it to be substantially as follows: That in the afternoon of December 28, 1921, the plaintiff, then a small boy of the age of five years, with two other boys, one seven and the other nine years of age, was upon Taylor street at or near its intersection with Pacific street, or avenue, in said city, and was about to cross the latter thoroughfare at the place used by pedestrians on the western line of such intersection. The two elder boys testified that they ran ahead of the younger, the plaintiff, and had reached the sidewalk upon the other side of Pacific street, when, looking back, they saw the plaintiff on the crossing and in the middle of Pacific street at the moment of his being struck and knocked down by the plaintiff's automobile which had come down Pacific street. Both of the elder boys testified that they heard no sound of horn or gong or signal of any kind before the impact. The plaintiff also testified that he was in the middle of said street when he was struck by the defendant's automobile, and that he did not see the automobile nor hear any gong or signal before he was struck by it. The evidence as to the injuries sustained by the boy was in accord with the averments of the complaint. Evidence was also given by one of the witnesses for the plaintiff that a few moments after the collision he held a conversation with the defendant wherein the latter made the statement that, "if anything was wrong with the boy, he would be responsible for everything that happened to him." Certain members of the plaintiff's family also testified that the defendant came to their home and that of the boy upon the evening of the accident, and several hours thereafter, and testified to certain conversations which occurred there, and in the course of which the defendant stated that the boy was not at fault, and he, the defendant, was not at fault, and that, "if something happen to the boy, he pay himself; if the insurance company is not responsible, he is."

[2] Another witness to the same conversation stated that the defendant blamed the boy, saying, "The boy should not have been in the way." The foregoing is substantially all of the evidence offered in support of the plaintiff's case. In considering the same, it is at the outset to be remembered that contributory negligence is not as a rule imputed as a matter of law to a child of the plaintiff's tender years. Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co., 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A. L. R. 401. It is also to be noted that, while it is true that the Motor Vehicle Act as it read at the time of this accident (section 12, Motor Vehicle Act 1915 [St. 1915, p. 405]), did not in terms require that the driver of an automobile should sound his horn or give other warning signal upon his approach to a street intersection or crossing, it is also true that said Motor Vehicle Act then in force also provided (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 22, subd. [b] [St. 1915, p. 409]) that "every person operating or driving a motor or other vehicle on the public highways of this state shall operate or drive the same in a careful and prudent manner * * * having regard to the traffic and use of the highway." In the instant case the defendant in his answer affirmatively alleged that Pacific street at the point in question "was and is a crowded and busy thoroughfare," and further alleged that said street "was at all times and is a dangerous place for children of said age to play." These affirmative admissions would seem to bring this case fully within the rule declared in Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., supra, wherein this court, in commenting upon the foregoing provision of the Motor Vehicle Act, used this language:

"Drivers or operators of vehicles, and more particularly motor vehicles, must be specially watchful in anticipation of the presence of others at places where other vehicles are constantly passing and where men, women, and children are liable to be crossing, such as corners at the intersections of streets or other similar places or situations, where people are likely to fail to observe an approaching automobile."

[3-5] In the presence of this rule it would seem to be undeniable that it was the duty of the defendant as he approached the intersection of Taylor street with the "crowded and busy thoroughfare" down which he was moving to have his observation fixed upon the intersection of said streets used by pedestrians and which he was about to pass. The evidence in the case affirmatively shows that but a moment before the instant of his collision with the plaintiff herein two other small boys, the latter's companions, had crossed Pacific street upon this very crossing, and that the plaintiff, following them, was in the middle thereof and of Pacific street when he was struck by the defendant's automobile. It would seem to be an almost irresistible conclusion that, if the defendant had been keeping that sharp lookout ahead which the law requires of him when approaching such a crossing, he would have observed these boys, or at least the latter of them, in the act of essaying this crossing just ahead of his on-coming machine, and the inference would seem to be a most reasonable one that, since he did not, as he admitted, see the injured boy before the impact, and no sound of horn or bell or other warning was heard by any of the witnesses to the collision, the defendant was not exercising that degree of prudence and of watchfulness which the law under such circumstances requires. It was the province of the jury to draw such an inference, and, if so drawn, it would have sufficed to support a finding of culpable negligence on the part of the defendant, with a resultant verdict in the plaintiff's favor. The trial court by granting the defendant's motion for nonsuit took from the plaintiff the right to have the jury pass upon this question, and, we think, committed reversible error in so doing. There was also introduced in the course of plaintiff's case a statement to one of his witnesses by the defendant within a few moments after the accident occurred that, "if anything was wrong with the boy, he would be responsible for everything that happened to him." It is the respondent's contention, approved by the trial court in granting the motion for nonsuit, that this language on the part of the defendant involved no suggestion or admission of liability for the accident and consequent injuries to the child; but we are of the opinion that it was for the jury to determine what interpretation should be placed upon the words and acts of the defendant immediately after the collision. In McPhee v. Lavin, 183 Cal. 264, 191 P. 23, it was held that the "defendant's declaration to the plaintiff immediately after the accident that he carried accident insurance that would provide for plaintiff if he had suffered injury, was properly admitted as tending to show an acknowledgment of responsibility by the defendant for the collision"; and in Scheuermann v. Kuetemeyer, 186 Cal. 225, 227, 199 P. 13, the statement by the defendant on the day following the accident that she "wanted 'to make right what is right'" was considered by this court as going with other evidence to make a prima facie case of negligence in the operation of the defendant's machine which should be submitted to the jury. In the case of Hammond v. Hazard, 40 Cal. App. 49, 180 P. 46, a statement by a defendant at the time of the accident that "I will settle all damages," taken in connection with certain other conduct on her part at the time, evoked the comment of the appellate court that "her conduct in thus busy-ing herself with the names of witnesses, and her statements about 'my car,' and that 'I will settle all damages,' clearly evidence the interest of one who is conscious of liability as the owner of the car." (Italics added.) We are of the opinion that the jury, had this cause been permitted to be submitted to it, would have been entitled to draw the inference from the defendant's language immediately after the accident that his use thereof arose from a consciousness of his liability for whatever injuries the plaintiff had sustained. The fact that the defendant several hours after the accident, and after a full opportunity for reflection, had in repeating said statement to members of the plaintiff's family coupled with it the statement that he was not to blame for the boy's injuries would not suffice to justify the taking from the jury the right to determine which statement of the defendant was to be credited and what inferences were to be drawn from his unqualified utterances immediately after the accident occurred. We are satisfied that this matter, taken in connection with the other testimony given in support of the plaintiff's case and above commented upon, was sufficient to make out a prima facie case in the plaintiff's favor which should have been submitted to the jury.

The order of the trial court granting a nonsuit was therefore erroneous, and hence its judgment based thereon must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: LAWLOR, J., Acting C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; HOUSER, Justice pro tem.

BARLOW v. SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1925.)Records ¶9(4)—Land granted with mining reservation is "fee simple" capable of being registered.

Land granted, reserving all mineral and rights relative thereto, held "fee simple" capable of being registered under St. 1915, p. 1932, since section 5 thereof provides for registration of any estate legal or equitable and is "fee simple" as required in section 7; "fee simple" meaning that interest of given estate inheritable and not subject to conditions or collateral determination.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fee Simple.]

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Petition by Charles Henry Barlow and others for registration of title, wherein the Security Trust & Savings Bank interposes answer to petition of plaintiff named. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff named appeals. Reversed.

Jas. W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, Justice pro tem. The facts herein are not in dispute. It appears that certain lands were granted to one Charles Henry Barlow, from which were reserved to the grantor, and excepted from the grant, all minerals and rights in relation thereto, including "all oil, petroleum, asphaltum, and like substances, and the right to mine, dig, or bore for the same, and also all convenient rights of way and of storage over and within the surface of said lands." Such property rights, as were thus reserved by the grantor, were subsequently conveyed to the Security Trust & Savings Bank.

Under the provisions of the Land Registration Act (Stats. 1915, p. 1932), Barlow joined with several other alleged owners of real property in the filing of a petition with the clerk of the superior court of Los Angeles county, wherein, pursuant to the provisions contained in said act, an order of the superior court was sought to be directed to the registrar of titles of said county to register, among other lands, those described in said petition as being the property of said Barlow. The Security Trust & Savings Bank filed an answer to the petition so far as it affected the lands in which said bank was interested as aforesaid, by which said bank opposed such proposed registration. Judgment on the issues raised by the petition and the answer was rendered in favor of the Security Trust & Savings Bank, and Barlow has appealed therefrom.

Section 7 of the Land Registration Act provides, in part, that:

"No mortgage, lien, charge, or lesser estate than a fee simple shall be registered unless the fee simple to the same land is first registered."

The basis of respondent's objection to the registration of Barlow's land was that his title, being subject to the mineral rights of the respondent and, in the language of the Registration Act, being a "lesser estate than a fee simple," could not be registered.

In the case of Wallace v. Harmstead, 44 Pa. 492, may be found an exhaustive treatment of the general subject of tenures, wherein it is held, even as affecting lands in Pennsylvania, that the tenure is allodial and not feudal and in the early case of Matthews v. Ward (1839) 10 Gill & J. (Md.), 443, it is laid down (syllabus) that:

"After the Revolution, lands in this state [Maryland] became allodial, subject to no tenure, nor to any services incident thereto. * * *

Notwithstanding such rule, it may be both argued by counsel and assumed by this court that the intention of the people in adopting by initiative the act in question was to follow the early English system of tenure and thereby to appropriate to the use and the construction of the statute the English terminology respecting the manner of acquiring and holding lands. By so doing it becomes necessary to inquire into the meaning of the term "fee simple," and to determine its effect upon the act here under consideration.

In Bouv. Law Dict. "fee simple" is defined as—"An estate of inheritance. Co. Litt. 1 b; 2 Bla. Com. 106. The word simple adds no meaning to the word fee standing by itself. But it excludes all qualification or restriction as to the persons who may inherit it as heirs, thus distinguishing it from a fee tail, as well as from an estate which, though inheritable, is subject to conditions or collateral determination. 1 Washb. R. P. 51; Wright, Ten. 146; 1 Prest. Est. 420; Littleton, § 1."

"Fee simple" therefore merely means that the interest of a given estate is inheritable and not subject to "conditions or collateral determination." Nor is the inheritable quality of the estate at all affected by the nature thereof. In 1 Cooley's Blackstone (4th Ed.) p. 514, after defining what is meant by the term "tenant in fee simple," it is said:

"Taking, therefore, fee for the future, unless where otherwise explained in this its secondary sense, as a state of inheritance, it is applicable to, and may be had in, any kind of hereditaments either corporeal or incorporeal. * * *

"The dominicum or property is frequently in one man, while the appendage or service is in another. Thus Gaius may be seised as of fee of a way leading over the land, of which Titius is seised in his demesne as of fee.

"The fee simple or inheritance of lands and tenements is generally vested and resides in some person or other; though divers inferior estates may be carved out of it. As if one grants a lease for twenty-one years, or for one or two lives, the fee simple remains vested in him and his heirs; and after the determination of those years or lives, the land reverts to the grantor or his heirs, who shall hold it again in fee simple. Yet sometimes the fee may be in abeyance, that is (as the word signifies) in expectation, remembrance, and contemplation in law."

It thus appears that by the common law of England, as applied to the land here in question, the estate held by Barlow being unquestionably inheritable and not subject to any restriction as to heirs, etc. (as in fee tail), was fee simple in its nature, and the fact that some rights of entry thereon for the purpose of mining in presumably all of its varied branches were possessed by another, to wit, the Security Trust & Savings Bank, had no effect upon the inheritable quality of the estate remaining in Barlow.

It may be noted that, as heretofore indicated, the fee-simple estate of early England was never considered as absolute, as were lands in allodium, but were subject to some superior on condition of rendering him service, and in which superior the ultimate ownership of the land resided. 1 Cooley's Blackstone (4th Ed.) p. 512. One of the incidents to such property rights in the sovereign was that of the privilege of taking as his own any mines of gold or silver discovered thereon. 1 Plowd. 310; 2 Coke, Institutes, 577; 3 Kent's Com. 378n; 1 Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) p. 7; Hicks v. Bell, 3 Cal. 219; Stoakes v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 36; Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 199, 222, 79 Am. Dec. 123. As an independent proposition, and but remotely connected with the solution of the question here involved, it has been held, overruling the case of Hicks v. Bell, 3 Cal. 219, that the mines of gold and silver found in public lands of this state are not the property of the state by virtue of her sovereignty. See, also, Doran v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 24 Cal. 245; Fremont v. Seals, 18 Cal. 433; Ah Hee v. Crippen, 19 Cal. 491.

In 1 Thomson on Real Property, § 87, it is said:

"Since minerals in place are part of the land, the owner of the fee in the land has the absolute right of property in the mines and quarries beneath the surface (citing cases), and all the mineral substances, while thus in place, are things of a real, and not a personal character (citing cases). As we have seen, that part of the land consisting of minerals, or specified minerals, may become the subject of separate ownership by grant of the minerals by the owner of the land, or by a grant of the land with an exception of the minerals, and in either case an estate in fee simple is created in the minerals, as corporeal hereditaments. (Citing cases.)"

It follows that, with reference to the respective rights of the parties litigant to the lands in question, each was the owner of a fee-simple estate.

So far as the term "fee simple" may be considered, as connected with the tenure of the lands in question, the conclusion here intended to be reached is that lands originally held in fee simple, according to the common law of England, and consequently inheritable, were nevertheless subject to an independent and wholly detached right existing in another person, to wit, the sovereign, to mine such lands, at least for gold and silver, and that the exercise of such right by the sovereign in no way affected the fee-simple title of the owner of the surface of the land. And so in the instant case, a "fee-simple" title may exist in Barlow as to the surface of the lands in question, without in any manner being affected by the right of the Security Trust & Savings Bank (analogous to that of the early English sovereign with respect to English lands) to "mine, dig or bore" for mineral substances thereon and therein.

By section 5 of the statute here under consideration, it is provided that, "all land may be brought under the operation of this act by the owner or owners of any estate or interest therein, whether legal or equitable. * * * " And in section 7 of the act, immediately following the provision heretofore quoted herein, to the effect that "no * * * lesser estate than a fee simple shall be registered unless the fee simple * * * is first registered," the language of the statute is that "It shall not be an objection to bringing land under this act, that the estate or interest of the applicant is subject to any outstanding lesser estate, mortgage, lien, or charge; but every such lesser estate, mortgage, lien or charge shall be noted upon the certificate of title and the duplicate thereof. * * * "

It appearing that the estate held by Barlow is in fact "fee simple," it was entitled to registration under the precise terms of the act.

The judgment is reversed.

In re WELLINGS' ESTATE.

MICHIGAN TRUST CO. v. BRONSON et al.

(L. A. 8247.)

1. Wills ⚡681(2)—Testamentary trustee is devisee, and devise vests on death of testatrix.

Trust company, to which testatrix devised residue and remainder of estate in trust, held a devisee under law, to take as trustee under the will at death of testatrix.

2. Constitutional law ⚡93(1)—Testamentary disposition to foreign trust company vested on testatrix's death, and it could not be divested by subsequent act of Legislature nor company prevented from executing trust.

Where testatrix made devise to foreign trust company as testamentary trustee, such estate vested in trust company immediately upon death of testatrix, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1341, 1342, and trust company could not be divested of such estate by subsequent act of Legislature (St. 1923, p. 169), withdrawing and abrogating right of foreign corporations to act as trustees.

3. Executors and administrators ⚡314(12)—Order for distribution, made while appeal pending from order denying distribution of estate to trust company, void.

Where appeal from order denying distribution of estate to trust company was pending, order distributing estate to granddaughters of deceased was void; appeal from order of distribution suspending execution of decree.

4. Wills ⚡672(2)—Word "bargain," as used by testatrix in creating trust, held to be used in sense of selling property for cash or on terms and not to trade or exchange property.

Where testatrix, in creating trust, provided that trustee might "bargain," sell, and convert property into money, held that word "bargain" was used in sense of selling property for cash, or on terms, as against contention that word was used in sense of trading or exchanging, and without legal purposes of trust, provided in Civ. Code, § 857.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bargain.]

5. Wills ⚡672(2)—Trust providing trustee might bargain, sell, and convert estate with all powers and authority deceased would have, if living, held valid.

A trust providing that trustee might bargain, sell, and convert estate with all powers deceased would have possessed, if living, held valid, as against contention that trust must be imperative and not discretionary, and contention is that such authority was not contemplated by Civ. Code, § 857.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Myra Josephine Wellings, deceased. From orders of the probate court by which the estate was distributed to Marion Frances Bronson and Ruth Doris Bronson, and an order denying distribution of the estate to the Michigan Trust Company, as trustee, under the will, the trustee appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628.

Flint & MacKay and Robert B. Jackson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leland J. Allen, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, Justice pro tem. This appeal involves two separate orders made by the probate court in the course of final distribution of the assets of the estate of Myra Josephine Wellings, deceased.

The first of the two orders from which an appeal is taken is that entitled, "Order settling final account and distributing the property under the will," and the second thereof was an order denying distribution of said estate to the Michigan Trust Company as trustee under the provisions of the will.

The facts material to this inquiry are that, following the death of her husband, Mrs. Wellings also died, leaving a will, by the third paragraph of which it was provided:

"If my husband shall not survive me, then I give, devise and bequeath all the said rest, residue and remainder of my estate unto the Michigan Trust Company, organized and existing under the laws of the state of Michigan, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, in trust, however, for the following purposes. * * *

In connection with the said trust, the will contained appropriate directions regarding the payment of the income to be derived from the assets of the estate to Marion Frances Bronson and Ruth Doris Bronson, granddaughters of the testatrix, and finally, after a lapse of several years, the payment to the same persons of the "residue and remainder" of the estate.

In the due course of administration, a petition was presented to the probate court praying for the settlement of the final account of the administrator with the will annexed and for distribution of the estate to the said granddaughters of the testatrix, the effect of which petition was to except the Michigan Trust Company from said distribution. Between the time of the death of the testatrix and the date of filing the petition for distribution of the estate, the Michigan Trust Company had fully qualified for the purpose of acting as trustee, as provided by the terms of said will. Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628.

Thereafter the Michigan Trust Company filed its objections to the said petition for distribution, and prayed that the said estate be distributed to it, as trustee of said estate under the said will; following which, objections were filed by the said granddaughters of decedent to the appointment of said Michigan Trust Company as trustee, etc. Thereupon an order of said probate court was made denying distribution to the Michigan Trust Company (but without making any order of distribution to the said granddaughters), from which order the Michigan Trust Company appealed to this court, and which appeal resulted in an order reversing the said order of the probate court, the language used by this court in the course of its opinion thereon being:

"Appellant [Michigan Trust Company], having complied with the laws of this jurisdiction governing the right of foreign corporations to do business in this state, and being a devisee under the will, it was entitled to have distribution of the estate made to it pursuant to the terms of the will of the deceased testatrix. Estate of Rawitzer, 175 Cal. 585, 593 [166 P. 581]."

While said appeal was pending and undetermined, and about six weeks before the rendering of the decision therein, the administrator with the will annexed of said estate filed a supplemental account and again prayed for distribution "of all said estate to the persons entitled thereto"; whereupon "the order settling final account and for distribution under will" was made by the court, by which it was decreed that the estate be distributed to the said granddaughters of the testatrix.

Within approximately three weeks after this court had decided that the Michigan Trust Company was "entitled to have distribution of said estate, made to it pursuant to the terms of the will of the deceased testatrix," the Michigan Trust Company made application to said probate court to vacate and set aside its said order of distribution, and which application was by said court denied. Thereafter the Michigan Trust Company again petitioned said court for distribution of said estate to it in accordance with the provisions of said will of said testatrix, which petition was likewise denied by said court.

As heretofore stated, this appeal applies, first, to the order by the probate court by which the estate was distributed to the granddaughters of the testatrix, and, secondly, to the order which denied distribution of the estate to the Michigan Trust Company, as trustee under the provisions of the will. A decision by this court as to one of such orders is necessarily conclusive as to the other.

The Michigan Trust Company is now and at all times mentioned herein was a corporation organized and authorized to transact a trust business under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Michigan. It was therefore, so far as the state of California was concerned, a foreign corporation. The decision by this court to which reference herein has been had (Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 521, 221 P. 628), that under the terms of the will of the deceased testatrix said Michigan Trust Company was entitled "to have distribution of the estate made to it," was rendered on December 11, 1923, notwithstanding the fact that on May 2, 1923, which date preceded by several months the date of the filing of the said opinion by this court (December 11, 1923), by an act of the Legislature (Stats. 1923, p. 169), the right theretofore existing of foreign corporations to act as trustees of wills in this state (Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628) was withdrawn and abrogated. On the petition to this court for rehearing in said case it was suggested by the petitioner:

"That the opinion, we think, failed to take into consideration the fact that the Legislature of the state has recognized the injustice of permitting foreign corporations to act as trustees under wills in this state and have repealed those very portions of the Bank Act which this court now holds are constitutional."

With full knowledge, therefore, on the part of this court that the law authorizing foreign corporations to transact in this state a trust business of the nature herein involved had been repealed by legislative enactment, the petition for rehearing was denied. Nevertheless respondent here urges that because of such last-mentioned act the Michigan Trust Company is not an aggrieved party, and hence not entitled to maintain this appeal, for the reason that, since the taking effect of said act said corporation cannot qualify as a trustee under the will in question.

The argument made by respondent to the effect that the execution of the said trust by the foreign corporation, Michigan Trust Company, would constitute "doing business in this state" is conceded by appellant to be unanswerable (Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628), as is also respondent's further contention that a foreign corporation may be entirely excluded from the state, or, having been once granted the right of transacting business therein, may thereafter have such privilege denied it. With so much being admitted, the primary question or questions to be solved are, first, whether the right of the appellant to act as a trustee was "vested," and, if so, secondly, whether subsequent legislation may impair it.

On the former appeal (Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 510, 221 P. 628, 630), this court, in dealing with the question of the rights of the appellant therein and herein, used the following language:

"An executor appointed by will has the right to act unless there is some express provision of law disqualifying him. Bauquier's Estate, 88 Cal. 302, 309, 26 P. 178 [532]. A trustee under a will has even a more substantial right to be recognized by the court. He does not become a trustee by virtue alone of the decree of distribution, although his fuller and more complete powers and duties are thus devolved upon him. A testamentary trustee is a devisee under the will, and takes as trustee under the will at the death of the testator. Civ. Code, § 1341; Estate of O'Connor, 2 Cal. App. 470, 475, 84 P. 317; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Duffill, 191 Cal. 629, 218 P. 14. He does not derive title from the decree of distribution, which merely declares the title that accrued under and by the will, but from the will itself. Western Pac. Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 166 Cal. 346, 349, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 825, 136 P. 284."

Section 1341 of the Civil Code provides:

"Testamentary dispositions, including devises and bequests to a person on attaining majority, are presumed to vest at the testator's death."

Section 1342 of the Civil Code contains the following provision:

"A testamentary disposition, when vested, cannot be divested unless upon the occurrence of the precise contingency prescribed by the testator for that purpose."

Beginning with the case of Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 179, and reiterated, in principle, at least, in Estate of Packer, 125 Cal. 396, 58 P. 59, 73 Am. St. Rep. 58, Smith v. Olmstead, 88 Cal. 582, 26 P. 521, 12 L. R. A. 46, 22 Am. St. Rep. 336, Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 173, 38 P. 715, and Estate of Patterson, 155 Cal. 626, 102 P. 941, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 132 Am. St. Rep. 116, 18 Ann. Cas. 625, the rule is announced that upon the death of the ancestor the heir becomes vested at once with the property, and his estate is indefeasible excepting only as to liens thereon, if any, then existing. In some of the same cases, notably Estate of Patterson, 155 Cal. 626, 102 P. 941, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 132 Am. St. Rep. 116, 18 Ann. Cas. 625, the law is said to be that—

"There can be no doubt of the rule that if the estate once vested in the heirs the Legislature had no power thereafter by a subsequent law to divest it."

In 5 Cal. Jur. 751, the law on the question is stated as follows:

"The power of the Legislature to repeal such vested rights as are protected by constitutional guaranties has been repeatedly denied by the court."

See, also, People v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., 155 Cal. 373, 103 P. 207; 5 Cal. Jur. 752, 754; James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 785, 103 P. 1082.

In considering a statute, the effect of which, like the statute herein referred to (Stats. 1923, p. 169), might be to impair the obligation of contractual or "vested" rights, it is said, in volume 8 of Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations, § 5757, that—

"If a state has permitted a foreign corporation to make contracts or acquire property within its limits, a statute subsequently enacted cannot impair the corporation's right to enforce such contracts or deprive it of its right to the property. To give the statute such an operation would render it unconstitutional"—citing cases.

[1, 2] From the authorities heretofore cited herein, it would seem indisputable that the Michigan Trust Company was "entitled to have distribution of the estate made to it"; that, as a testamentary trustee, it was a devisee under the law, and took as trustee under the will at the death of the testatrix (Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 510, 221 P. 628); that such estate was consequently vested in the Michigan Trust Company as such trustee; and that it could not be divested of such estate by the subsequent act of the Legislature, nor prevented from executing the trust.

[3] A point is raised as to the legal propriety of the lower court making the order for distribution of the estate to the granddaughters of the decedent at a time when the former appeal from the order denying distribution of the estate to the Michigan Trust Company was pending. Regarding such asserted authority of the lower court to make such order of distribution, the cases of Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 186, 53 P. 560, Estate of Garraud, 36 Cal. 277, and In re Schedel, 69 Cal. 241, 10 P. 334, in principle hold that an appeal from an order of distribution of an estate has the effect of suspending the execution of the decree.

In Estate of Garraud, 36 Cal. 277, the ruling is (syllabus):

"A final decree of the probate court making distribution of an entire estate is, until reversed or modified on appeal, an investiture of the absolute right and title to the same in the distributees; and a further order of the court making a different disposition of a portion of the estate, made pending an appeal which was perfected from said final decree, is void."

And in Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 186, 190, 53 P. 560, 561, it is said:

"In the decree of distribution of November 27, 1893, the court allowed the sum of $3,500 for the services of the plaintiff to the executors up to the date of that decree, and refused to make to the executors any allowance for extraordinary services in the administration of the estate. The appeal by the widow from this decree suspended its execution, and until the determination of that appeal the executors were not only precluded from distributing the estate in accordance with its terms, but were required to retain the property in their care and custody."

But if, in ruling on the principal issue herein, it be determined that the court was without authority to order distribution of the estate to the granddaughters of the testatrix, the question as to the time when such order was made becomes immaterial. This court decided, in Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628, that the Michigan Trust Company was entitled to have the estate distributed to it, and that decision is here affirmed. Under the terms of the will, the Michigan Trust Company, and not the granddaughters of the testatrix, was entitled to the distribution of the estate.

[4] It is contended by the respondents that the trust itself is invalid, because the will provides, among other things, that the Michigan Trust Company shall hold the property of the decedent in trust for the following purposes:

"(a) To care for, manage and control the same, to (Myra Josephine Wellings) bargain, sell and convert into money any part or all thereof and to invest and reinvest the same, or the proceeds thereof, in such interest-bearing or income-producing securities or properties as to said trustee, in the exercise of its discretion, may seem best, with all the powers and authority I would possess if living."

Attention is particularly directed to the word "bargain," occurring in the declaration of the purposes of the trust, as well as to the words, "with all the powers and authority I would possess if living."

In another paragraph of the will the following provision appears:

"Giving and granting unto my said trustee full power and authority to bargain, sell, transfer, and convey, and in any manner dispose of my estate, real or personal, or any part thereof. * * *

It is urged by the respondents that by the use of the word "bargain" the trustee is authorized to trade or exchange the property of the estate for other property, contrary to the provisions of section 857 of the Civil Code, which limits the purposes for which a trust may be created, and which purposes do not in terms include the right to make exchanges with the trust property. But assuming, without deciding, that if there were a clear expression within the terms of the trust instrument, giving to the trustee the power to exchange the trust property, such power would be without the legal purposes of a trust, as provided by section 857 of the Civil Code, it is not certain that the testatrix of the will here in question intended to confer any such powers on the trustee of her will. The word "bargain" is commonly used in conveying property in connection with the word "sell." The ordinary bargain and sale deed contains the phrase that the grantor "does by these presents grant, bargain, sell and convey," etc.; and which words from a practical standpoint mean nothing more than that a sale of the described property is made for cash, or on such terms as may have been agreed upon by the parties to the transfer. In 1 Words and Phrases, First Series, p. 706, the authorities are collected with reference to the use of the word "bargain," expressed singly, also to its use with the word "sale." As there stated:

"A bargain is a contract or agreement between two parties, the one to sell goods or land, and the other to buy them. Hunt v. Adams, 5 Mass. 358, 360, 4 Am. Dec. 68."

Under the heading "Bargain and Sale" it is said:

"A 'bargain and sale' is the transfer and delivery of personal or real property, or chose in action by one person to another, for a consideration agreed on between them as the value of the property sold. Brittin v. Freeman, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 191, 231. It is a real contract, for a valuable consideration, for passing the title of land from one to another.' Clairborne v. Henderson (Va.) 3 Hen. & M. 322, 349. It is a real contract, upon a valuable consideration, for passing lands by deed indented. 2d Inst. 672. Guest v. Farley, 19 Mo. 147, 150. As defined by Blackstone, it is a real contract whereby a person contracts to convey land. Cruise says that it is 'where a contract is made by which a person conveys his lands to another for a pecuniary consideration, in consequence of which a use arises to the bargainee.' Perry v. Price, 1 Mo. 553, 554. Bargain and sale is a method of conveyance founded on the statute of uses. 'The bargainor contracts to sell the land, and receives the purchase money. After this he is, in equity, considered as seised of the land to the use of the bargainee, and the statute unites the possession to the use, so that the very instant the use is raised the possession is joined to it, and the bargainee becomes seised of the land. The words of transfer applicable to this conveyance are 'bargain and sell,' but they are by no means necessary nor material to its operation. There must be a pecuniary consideration; but, if a man for such a consideration covenants to stand seised to the use of another person, a use is thereby raised, which the statute will execute.' French v. French, 3 N. H. 234, 261."

It would therefore seem apparent that the testatrix in making the will in question and in providing therein that the trustee might "bargain, sell and convert into money any part" of the estate, or, as provided in a subsequent part of the will, that he might "bargain, sell, transfer and convey, and in any manner dispose of my estate," used the word "bargain" and the other words in connection therewith in the sense of selling the property for cash, or on terms, rather than in the sense of trading or exchanging such property.

The other words to which objection is made, to wit, "with all the powers and authority I would possess if living," clearly refer to the words which precede them, which, as heretofore indicated regarding the word "bargain," apply merely to the right of making sales of the property belonging to the estate.

[5] Other objections by the respondents to the form of the trust as affecting the powers conferred upon the trustee, such, for example, that a trust "for the purpose of sale must be imperative, not merely discretionary," are answered, not only by the language of the will itself with reference to the powers of sale, but as well by the indicated rulings by this court in Estate of Heywood, 148 Cal. 184, 82 P. 755, Estate of Aldersley, 174 Cal. 366, 163 P. 206, and Aldersley v. McCloud, 35 Cal. App. 17, 168 P. 1153.

In the case entitled Estate of Heywood, 148 Cal. 184, 82 P. 755, it appears that the will provided:

"In case it may be necessary or in case it may be deemed advisable by my trustees * * * they are hereby authorized to sell at any time the said * * * property * * * and to re-invest the proceeds in income-paying real estate or other safe income-paying securities to the end that my wishes herein expressed may be carried out for the maintenance and protection of my said wife and my adopted daughter."

In deciding in that case that the will was valid, no great attention was devoted by the court to the particular point here under consideration. Nevertheless, among other things, the court said:

"In construing testamentary dispositions of property it is a cardinal rule that a liberal construction should be given to them and all reasonable intendments indulged in, with a view of sustaining the purpose which it is disclosed the testator had in view. No particular form of expression is necessary to constitute a valid trust. It is sufficient that from the language used the intention of the testator is apparent, and that the disposition in trust which he endeavors to make of his estate is consistent with the rules of law. The intent of the testator is the matter for primary consideration, and it is immaterial what method of expression is employed as long as that intention can be ascertained. As said in Hill on Trustees (p. 101), 'It is one of the fixed rules of equitable construction that there is no magic in particular words'; and this court has said that, 'Of course, it is a fundamental principle that a construction of a will favorable to testacy will always obtain when the language used reasonably admits of such construction, and that it will not be held to contain a void trust, unless the invalidity of the trust is beyond question * * * and cannot be reasonably construed otherwise.' Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315."

In the case of Aldersley v. McCloud, 35 Cal. App. 17, 168 P. 1153, a trust provision in a will similar to that here being considered was held valid.

It is suggested by respondents that, under the clause of the will whereby the trustee is given "all" the powers and authority that the decedent would have if living, the trustee might make "extensive and substantial improvements" on the trust property, which authority is not contemplated by the provisions of section 857 of the Civil Code. No authorities are cited by respondents to sustain their contention in this regard. Section 857 of the Civil Code does not purport to enumerate the various rights which a trustee may possess under a general authority such as may be provided in a will creating a trust like that here under consideration. A similar question was presented in the case of Estate of Heywood, 148 Cal. 184, 82 P. 755. With reference thereto, the court disposed of the question in the following manner:

"In order to give countenance to the contention of appellant it would be necessary to interpolate language into the subdivision directing the trustees to do what confessedly the subdivision does not directly prescribe they shall do, and having made the interpolation then declare the trust invalid as a trust 'to divide.' This a court will never do. It is only when the language actually used by the testator will admit of no other reasonable construction than that it creates an invalid trust that a court will declare this to be its effect."

And see generally, in this connection, with reference to the validity of the trust, Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315.

It follows that each of the orders from which an appeal is taken herein should be reversed. It is so ordered.

FROST et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (L. A. 8473.)(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1925.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 29, 1925.)

1. Carriers ⚡5—Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act held applicable to transportation company engaged in business of transportation as private carrier on public highways between fixed points, as well as common carriers.

Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act is not limited in its application to common carriers, in view of section 1 thereof, as amended by St. 1919, p. 458, § 2, but is applicable as well to transportation company engaged in "business of transportation" for compensation between fixed points on public highway, though such one is operating solely under private contract.

2. Carriers ⚡5—"Transportation company," though private carrier, held subject to regulations of Railroad Commission as to rates, facilities, and service.

Under Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act defining "transportation companies" as including private carriers, it follows that such carrier, in view of Const. art. 12, §§ 20-22, must first secure consent of Railroad Commission to change rates, cannot discriminate in according facilities, and cannot render transportation service at less rates than named in tariff rates established by commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Transportation Company.]

3. Carriers ⚡5—When private carrier subject to disabilities and limitations circumscribing common carrier stated.

A private carrier is at least subjected to disabilities and limitations circumscribing a public or common carrier when it is required to file schedule of rates with Railroad Commission, compelled to render transportation service of kind required by commission, and is disabled to enter into contract for transportation at rates other than prescribed rate.

4. Carriers ⚡1—State has no power to transmute a private utility into a public utility or private carrier into a public carrier.

A state has no power by mere legislative act, or even by constitutional enactment, to transmute a private utility into a public utility or a private carrier into a public carrier.

5. Carriers ⚡8—Right of carrier to use public highways not a vested or natural right, but a privilege or license, which Legislature may grant or withhold in its discretion.

Right of a private or common carrier to use the public highways for the conduct of its business is not a vested or natural right, but a mere privilege or license, which the Legislature may grant or withhold in its discretion or grant upon such conditions as it sees fit.

6. Carriers ⚡8—State, in granting use of special privileges in highways to private carrier, has power to impose such conditions as it sees fit.

In granting special privilege of use of highways to private carrier, state has power to demand in consideration therefor a reasonable quid pro quo to the public, and in effect this was done in and by St. 1919, p. 457, amending Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, in requiring a certificate of convenience and necessity.

7. Carriers ⚡2—Constitutional grant of authority to Legislature to confer additional powers on Railroad Commission limited to such additional powers as are cognate and germane to regulation of railroads and other transportation companies.

Under Const. art. 12, § 22, granting authority to Legislature to confer additional powers on Railroad Commission, such additional powers are limited to those as are cognate and germane to the regulation of railroads and other transportation companies.

8. Carriers ⚡5—Regulation of private carrier, when engaged in business of transportation as described in statute, held cognate and germane to regulation of common carriers engaged in like business.

The regulation of private carriers, when engaged in the business of transportation described in Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, § 1, as amended by St. 1919, p. 458, § 2, is cognate and germane to the regulation of common carriers engaged in like business, for, the primary purpose of regulating common carriers being conceded to be to secure reliability, regularity of service, and reasonable rates, it follows that to permit private carriers to engage in same business without responsibilities of common carriers would defeat purpose of Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act.

9. Evidence ⚡20(1)—Common knowledge that unregulated transportation companies interfere seriously with revenues of controlled public utilities.

It is common knowledge that unregulated motor transportation companies interfere seriously with the revenues of those carriers which are under public control.

10. Carriers ⚡5—Fact that Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act adopts by reference procedural provisions of Public Utilities Act does not render former inapplicable to private carriers.

The fact that Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, § 7, adopts by reference procedural provisions in Public Utilities Act does not render former inapplicable to private carriers.

11. Carriers ⚡8—Constitutional law ⚡235, 292—Eminent domain ⚡2(11)—Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act not a regulation of use of highways, but a conditional offer of special privilege.

Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act regulating transportation companies, including private carriers, is not in fact a regulation of the use of the highways, nor does it take private property for public use without compensation in violation of Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, nor does it violate the due process clause; but what the act does, in effect, is to make a conditional offer of a special privilege.

12. Carriers ⇐8—Conditional offer of special privilege in Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act requires that offeree shall in return submit himself to conditions, regulations, and restrictions specified therein.

Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, which makes a conditional offer of highways, requires that offeree shall, in consideration for such special privilege, submit himself to conditions, regulations, and restrictions specified in the act.

Application by Marion L. Frost and Wesley H. Frost, copartners doing business under the name and style of Frost & Frost Trucking Company, for a writ of certiorari to review an order of the Railroad Commission commanding petitioners to desist from transportation of property by auto truck over a certain route. Writ denied.

Rehearing denied; Shenk, J., dissenting.

Leonard, Surr & Hellyer, of San Bernardino, and Thelen & Marrin, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Carl I. Wheat and Woodward M. Taylor, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

MYERS, C. J. Review to annul a decision and order of the respondent commission commanding petitioners to desist from the transportation of property by auto truck over a regular route and between fixed termini upon the public highways of the state for compensation unless and until they shall obtain a certificate of public convenience and necessity so to do from the respondent commission.

[1] Petitioners were engaged in the transportation of citrus fruits belonging to the Redlands Orange Growers' Association, a corporation, between the city of Redlands and Los Angeles harbor in this state, pursuant to a contract with said association. Petitioners were brought regularly before the commission to answer to a complaint of a competing carrier, who was engaged in the transportation of property between those points as a common carrier under a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the commission, and who alleged that the business of transportation being carried on by petitioners under their contract with the Redlands Orange Growers' Association, without the issuance of a certificate of public convenience and necessity, was in violation of the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (Stats. 1917, p. 330), as amended (Stats. 1919, p. 457). There is no dispute as to any of the facts herein. All of the essential facts are conceded to be correctly set forth in the allegations of the petition and the exhibits attached thereto. Petitioners had entered into a purported contract of lease with the Redlands Orange Growers' Association whereby petitioners purported to lease to the association certain auto trucks owned by petitioners to be used by the association in the transportation of its fruit from Redlands to Los Angeles harbor, but which trucks were to be operated in such transportation by petitioners. The commission, after an analysis of the provisions of the purported lease, found and determined, correctly as we think, that the same did not constitute a lease and that the real contract between the parties was a contract for transportation whereby petitioners undertook and agreed to transport the fruit of the association between Redlands and Los Angeles harbor during the period of time and for the compensation therein specified. The correctness of this conclusion of the respondent commission is not seriously questioned by petitioners herein, and the question is therefore, whether one who is engaged as a business in the transportation of property by auto truck for compensation over the public highways of the state between fixed termini and over a regular route, but operating solely under a private contract, is subject to the provisions of the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, supra, as amended. Section 1 of the act defines the term "transportation company" as used therein to include:

Every person "operating * * * any automobile, jitney bus, auto truck, stage or auto stage used in the business of transportation of persons or property, or as a common carrier, for compensation, over any public highway in this state between fixed termini or over a regular route, * * *" (with certain exceptions not pertinent herein).

The italicized words "business of" and "or" were added to the section by the amendment of 1919, St. 1919, p. 458, § 2. Petitioners would have us in construing this section read the phrase "or as a common carrier" as if it were "and as a common carrier," substituting the conjunctive "and" in place of the disjunctive "or," and thus conclude that the act as amended is applicable only to those who are engaged in such business of transportation as common carriers. We are unable to adopt this conclusion. To so hold would be to say, in effect, that the Legislature accomplished nothing and intended nothing by this amendment. The definition of "transportation companies" contained in this section of the act as originally enacted plainly and unmistakably limited the same to common carriers. If any meaning or purpose whatsoever is to be ascribed to the amendment of 1919, it can be only the meaning and purpose of extending the act to make it applicable also to private carriers of the sort there described.

The question then arises whether under the provisions of the state and federal Constitutions the act is valid in its application to such private carriers. Various points relating to this question are ably discussed by counsel and by amici curiæ, who have filed briefs herein. It is contended in behalf of petitioners that this act in its application to private carriers has the effect of transforming them into public carriers by legislative fiat. Counsel for respondents vigorously deny that such is the effect, but it cannot be denied that the provisions of the act as applied to private carriers do closely approximate this result.

Section 2 provides that no transportation company may operate "except in accordance with the provisions of this act."

Section 3 forbids such operation unless a permit has first been secured as therein provided, and requires the applicant for such permit to specify the highways and the route over which the applicant intends to operate, and furnish description of each vehicle which applicant intends to use, including the seating capacity thereof, if for passenger traffic, or the tonnage, if for freight traffic, together with a schedule or tariff showing the passenger fares or freight rates to be charged. It provides that such permit may be issued or refused, or issued upon such terms and conditions as in the judgment of the commission the public convenience and necessity may require. It provides further that no permit so issued may be assigned or transferred without the consent of the granting authority.

Section 4 empowers the Railroad Commission to supervise and regulate every such transportation company, to fix its rates, fares, charges, classifications, rules, and regulations, to regulate its accounts, service, and safety of operations, to require the filing of annual and other reports, and to supervise and regulate transportation companies "in all other matters affecting the relationship between such companies and the traveling and shipping public."

Section 5 forbids operation even under a franchise or permit granted by any incorporated city or town, city and county, or county, without first having obtained from the Railroad Commission a certificate declaring that public convenience and necessity require the exercise of such right or privilege, and provides further that the commission may attach to the exercise of the rights granted by such certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require.

Section 6 forbids the issuance of any stock, stock certificate, or bond by such transportation company except pursuant to an order first secured from the Railroad Commission.

Section 7 provides that as to applications and complaints and procedure subsequent thereto all transportation companies will be subject to regulation by the commission "under the conditions and subject to the limitations and with the effect specified in the public utilities act."

Section 8 makes the violation of any of the provisions of the act or of any order, decision, rule, regulation, or direction of the commission a misdemeanor and prescribes the punishment therefor.

[2-4] Furthermore, if the Legislature is competent to thus define "transportation companies" to include private carriers, it follows that they cannot raise any charge or rate without first securing the consent of the Railroad Commission (Const. art. 12, § 20), cannot accord to one person any rate or facility different from that accorded to any other person (Const. art. 12, § 21), and cannot render a transportation service for any rate or charge less than that named in the tariff rates established by the commission (Const. art. 12, § 22). A carrier who files with the Railroad Commission a schedule of his routes, tariffs, and charges, who is under compulsion to render transportation service of the kind, character, and quality prescribed by the commission, who is disabled to enter into a contract for the rendition of transportation service of any kind, quality, or character different from that prescribed, or for a rate of compensation either greater or less than the prescribed rate, is at least subjected to the disabilities and limitations which circumscribe a public or common carrier. 10 C. J. 37 et seq. It is conceded that the state has no power by mere legislative fiat, or even by constitutional enactment, to transmute a private utility into a public utility, or a private carrier into a public carrier. Producers' Transportation Co. v. R. R. Comm., 176 Cal. 499, 169 P. 59; Associated Pipe Line Co. v. R. R. Comm., 176 Cal. 518, 169 P. 62, L. R. A. 1918C, 849; Van Hoosear v. R. R. Comm., 184 Cal. 553, 194 P. 1003; Allen v. R. R. Comm., 179 Cal. 68, 175 P. 466, 8 A. L. R. 249; Stratton v. R. R. Comm., 186 Cal. 119, 198 P. 1051; McCullagh v. R. R. Comm., 190 Cal. 13, 210 P. 264; Richardson v. R. R. Comm., 191 Cal. 716, 218 P. 418; Klatt v. R. R. Comm., 192 Cal. 689, 221 P. 926; Producers' Transportation Co. v. R. R. Comm., 251 U. S. 228, 40 S. Ct. 131, 64 L. Ed. 239. It is argued by respondents, however, that the state does have the power either to grant to or withhold from its citizens the privilege of using its public highways for the purpose of transacting their private business thereon. As was said by the Supreme Court of West Virginia (Ex parte Dickey, 76 W. Va. 576, 85 S. E. 781, L. R. A. 1915F, 840):

"The right of a citizen to travel upon the highway and transport his property thereon, in the ordinary course of life and business, differs radically and obviously from that of one who makes the highway his place of business and uses it for private gain, in the running of a stage coach or omnibus. The former is the usual and ordinary right of a citizen, a common right, a right common to all; while the latter is special, unusual and extraordinary. As to the former, the extent of legislative power is that of regulation; but, as to the latter, its power is broader, the right may be wholly denied, or it may be permitted to some and denied to others, because of its extraordinary nature. This distinction, elementary and fundamental in character, is recognized by all the authorities."

[5] The argument is that the privilege of using the public highways as a place for the transaction of private business is not a vested right but a privilege which the state may grant or withhold at its pleasure; that, having the right to withhold such privilege, it may grant the same upon such terms and conditions as it may see fit to impose; that it may say in effect to the applicant for such special privilege:

"I will grant you the privilege of using the public highways for private gain in the transaction of your business upon the condition that you in turn shall dedicate the property used by you in such business to the public use of public transportation."

There is much force in this contention. It has been repeatedly decided that the right of a common carrier to use the public highways for the conduct of his business as such is not a vested or natural right, but is a mere privilege or license, which the Legislature may grant or withhold in its discretion or which it may grant upon such conditions as it may see fit to impose. Ex parte Lee, 28 Cal. The Supreme Court of Washington said in Hadfield v. Lundin, supra:

"If any proposition may be said to be established by authority, the right of the state, in the exercise of its police power, to prohibit the use of the streets as a place of private business or as the chief instrumentality in conducting such business, must be held so established. Nor can it be questioned that the power to prohibit includes the power to regulate, even to the extent that the regulation under given conditions may be tantamount to a prohibition. Where the power to prohibit exists, the reasonableness of any regulation is palpably a legislative question, pure and simple."

[6] The foregoing cases all had to do with the right of common carriers. Whether the same rule should apply with equal force to private carriers engaged in using the streets as a place of private business or as the chief instrumentality in conducting such business has not been directly passed upon in any case which has come to our notice except as it may be said to have been impliedly adjudged in State v. Price, 122 Wash. 421, 210 P. 787. Upon principle, however, we perceive no reason why the rule should not apply with equal force to the case of a private carrier who proposes to use the street as a place of private business or as the chief instrumentality thereof. The rule does not rest upon the circumstance alone that the carrier is engaged in operating a public utility and that his business is therefore affected with a public interest, but it rests equally upon the circumstance that he is using the public highways as the chief instrumentality of a private business conducted for private gain. In other words, he is enjoying a special privilege in the highways which are constructed and maintained at public expense and designed for the common use of all. Many of the cases expressly rest their decisions upon this latter ground. We are of the opinion that the state has the right in the granting of such special privileges in its public highways to require that the recipient thereof in consideration therefor return a reasonable quid pro quo to the public and that such in effect is what was done in and by the 1919 amendment to the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act. The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Michigan Public Utilities Commission v. Duke, 266 U. S. 570, 45 S. Ct. 191, 69 L. Ed. 445, 36 A. L. R. 1105, seems at first blush to be at variance with this conclusion, but we think that upon analysis it will be found not to conflict therewith. The Michigan statute is essentially similar to our Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act in its relation to the questions here under consideration, except that it expressly provides what is claimed to be the necessary implication of our own statute, namely:

"Any and all persons * * * engaged * * * in the transportation of persons or property for hire by motor vehicle, upon or over the public highways of this state [between fixed termini or over a regular route] shall be common carriers. * * *" Pub. Acts Mich. 1923, No. 209, § 3.

It also prohibits the engaging in the business of such transportation without a permit from the Public Utilities Commission, which shall be issued in accordance with the public convenience and necessity, and requires the payment of fees, the carrying of insurance, and the furnishing of an indemnity bond. Duke was engaged in the transportation by auto truck of automobile bodies from Detroit, Mich., to Toledo, Ohio, under three private contracts with the manufacturers thereof. He had been doing such hauling for some years and had a large investment in property used exclusively for that purpose, was engaged in no other business, and did not hold himself out as a carrier for the public. The court held that the requirements and limitations of the statute as applied to him would impose an unlawful burden upon interstate commerce. It also said:

"Moreover, it is beyond the power of the state by legislative fiat to convert property used exclusively in the business of a private carrier into a public utility, or to make the owner a public carrier, for that would be taking private property for public use without just compensation, which no state can do consistently with the due process of law clause of the Fourteenth Amendment"—citing cases.

The essential difference between that case and this rests in the fact that Duke was operating under contracts subsisting before and at the time of the enactment of the Michigan statute, which contracts remained in part unperformed. The statute afforded to him no liberty of choice. It required him to devote his property at once to public transportation and thus would have disabled him to perform his subsisting contracts. To give it effect in its application to his situation would have been to impair the obligation of those contracts. If the contracts under which petitioners herein are operating had been entered into prior to the enactment of the 1919 amendment to our statute, and had been then subsisting and unperformed, petitioners would have been in position to invoke the authority of the Duke Case. But petitioners' contract was not made until 1923, and they were under no compulsion to enter into it. They were free to elect as to whether they would engage in the business of transportation upon the public highways between fixed termini or over a regular route and thus subject themselves to the conditions and limitations of the statute, or whether they would refrain from so doing and thus retain their status of unregulated private carriers. They voluntarily chose the former course and thereby subjected themselves to the regulations imposed by the statute. The following language from the opinion in Le Blanc v. City of New Orleans, supra, is pertinent in this connection:

"The streets of the cities and towns in Louisiana being among the things that are 'public' and 'for the common use,' no individual can have a property right in such use for the purposes of his private business, unless, speaking generally, that business being in the nature of a public service or convenience, such as would authorize the grant, the right has been granted by the state, which alone has the power to make or authorize it, or, by the particular city or town, acting under the authority of the state, and in such case the right can be exercised only in accordance with the conditions of the grant; that is to say, an individual seeking, but not possessing, a right of that kind, may accept the grant, with the conditions imposed by the offer, in which case he becomes bound by the conditions, or he may refuse to accept the conditions, in which case there is no grant, and without the grant so offered, or some other, from the authority competent to make it, he can never acquire the right to make use of a street as his place of business."

Aside from the foregoing considerations, it would seem that the fact that petitioners' business is of necessity carried on almost wholly upon the public highways would of itself cause such business to be so affected with a public interest as to subject it to governmental regulation, but, as this point has not been discussed by counsel, we do not pursue it further.

[7] It is contended that the Constitution does not, and the Legislature cannot, confer upon the Railroad Commission jurisdiction or authority to supervise or regulate a private act of the nature involved herein or the business of a private carrier. The Constitution provides (article 12, § 22):

"Said commission shall have the power to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroads and other transportation companies."

In the case of Western Association of Short Line Railroads v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 802, 162 P. 391, 1 A. L. R. 1455, it was held that this section of the Constitution was self-executing to the extent that it conferred upon the Commission regulatory powers over companies transporting freight or passengers as common carriers for hire on the public highways by means of motor trucks and automobile stages. It is insisted that the phrase "other transportation companies" must be taken to mean other like transportation companies; that is to say, other transportation companies which like railroads operate as common carriers. Section 22 of article 12 also provides that—

"No provision of this Constitution shall be construed as a limitation upon the authority of the Legislature to confer upon the Railroad Commission additional powers of the same kind or different from those conferred herein which are not inconsistent with the powers conferred upon the Railroad Commission in this Constitution, and the authority of the Legislature to confer such additional powers is expressly declared to be plenary and unlimited by any provision of this Constitution."

It must be taken as settled that this grant of authority to confer additional powers is limited (so far as applicable to the question here under consideration) to such additional powers as are cognate and germane to the regulation of railroads and other transportation companies. Pac. Telephone, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 P. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822; City of Pasadena v. R. R. Comm., 183 Cal. 526, 192 P. 25, 10 A. L. R. 1425; City of San Bernardino v. R. R. Comm., 190 Cal. 562, 213 P. 980.

[8] The question thus presented is whether the regulation of the business of a private carrier engaged in the business of transporting property for hire upon the public highways between fixed termini or over a regular route is cognate and germane to the regulation of the business of a common carrier who is engaged in like transportation. We think this question must be answered in the affirmative. It is at once apparent that the private carrier is or at least may be in direct competition with the public carrier, who is operating over the same route, and whose business it is the duty of the commission to supervise and regulate. The primary purpose of such regulation is to secure the adequacy, regularity, and reliability of service and the reasonableness of rates and charges therefor. Franchise Motor Freight Ass'n v. Seavey (Cal. Sup.) 235 P. 1000. To accomplish this end there must of necessity be some restriction upon competition. As was said by the Supreme Court of Washington:

"The purpose of the Transportation Act * * * is to permit the establishment of regular and dependable service wherever public necessity and convenience requires. No adequate service can be given without proper equipment. * * * An income must be earned which will cover operating costs and depreciation and give some return on the investment or the service cannot be long continued. In the case of Public Utilities Commission of Utah v. Garviloch, 54 Utah, 406, 181 P. 272, the Supreme Court of Utah said: 'The granting of a certificate of convenience and necessity by the commission to Chandler, therefore, was in the nature of a limited franchise which authorized him to operate his automobile stage line over the route designated in the certificate for the time and under the conditions therein specified. The certificate, therefore, not only confers authority to operate the stage line, but it necessarily also affords him protection against any one who unlawfully interferes with the right thereby conferred. If such is not the legal effect of the certificate, then the operation of utilities may easily become detrimental rather than beneficial to the public and thus result in a farce.'" Davis v. Nickell, 126 Wash. 421, 218 P. 198.

[9] If petitioners, while engaged in transportation business of the kind and character described in the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, may exempt themselves from all of the limitations and conditions of that act by the simple device of entering into a special contract for such transportation, there is no limit to the extent to which they may avail themselves of such device. If they may make one such contract, they may with equal right make a dozen or hundred. By this means they could take away from their competitor, who is operating as a common carrier under the restrictions and limitations imposed by the act, all of the most profitable and least burdensome of his business, leaving him obligated to carry the unprofitable remainder thereof, and thus disable him to render the service which the public interest requires. Transportation companies could thus secure all of the special privileges afforded to common carriers without assuming any of their duties or obligations. This would, of course, defeat in large measure the purpose not only of the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, but of the constitutional provision conferring jurisdiction upon the Railroad Commission to regulate transportation companies. The language of this court in the case of Western Association, etc., v. Railroad Commission, supra, while used in a different connection is, nevertheless, pertinent to the present consideration. It was there said:

"* * * It is not only a matter of common knowledge, but is presented in these cases, that in many instances these unregulated companies interfere seriously with the revenues of controlled public utilities, a percentage of whose revenues goes by way of taxes to the support of the state."

We are satisfied that the regulation of private carriers, when engaged in the business of transportation described in section 1 of the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, is cognate and germane to the regulation of common carriers engaged in like business. This conclusion is suggested, though not decided, in the case of City of Pasadena v. R. R. Comm., supra, wherein it was said:

"Considering all these circumstances, the only reasonable conclusion is that the authority intended to be given to the Legislature by this section to confer powers upon the Railroad Commission must be limited to the subject of powers over common carriers and transportation and the control and regulation thereof by the commission, and such other things as may be necessary or convenient for the proper and effectual exercise of such powers of regulation and control." (Italics added.)

[10] The fact that the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, in section 7 thereof, adopts by reference the procedural provisions of the Public Utilities Act (St. 1915, p. 115), does not have the effect of rendering the former act inapplicable to private carriers. The fact, for example, that section 869 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in title 11 thereof relating to justices' courts, adopts by reference certain provisions of title 7 relating to superior courts, does not have the effect of making justices' courts courts of record. It is conceded that the Public Utilities Act applies only to public utilities and does not of its own force apply to any private carrier, but this fact does not disable the Legislature to extend its procedural provisions by subsequent legislation so as to make them applicable to other subjects.

[11] We agree with amici curiæ for the petitioners that the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act does not purport to be and is not in fact a regulation of the use of the highways. Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 45 S. Ct. 324, 69 L. Ed. 623; People v. Yahne (Cal. Sup.) 235 P. 50. This renders it unnecessary to discuss the various contentions of amici curiæ based upon the hypothesis that the act might be so construed. The contentions that the act takes private property for public use without compensation in violation of section 13 of article 1 of the state Constitution and of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, and that it violates the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, are based upon the predicate that the effect of the act is to transmute a private carrier into a public carrier against his will by legislative fiat. As we have indicated above, our view is that the act does not and cannot have this effect. What the act does, in effect, is to make a conditional offer of a special privilege. The offeree is not entitled to this privilege as a matter of right and therefore in order to obtain it he must submit to the conditions attached to the offer. He is not compelled to submit to these conditions, but if he does not do so he cannot avail himself of the privilege. If he does avail himself of the privilege under these circumstances, he is deemed to have thereby consented to the conditions. An analogous situation is presented by the provisions of article 1, section 14, of our Constitution, which provides:

That the taking of private property for a logging or lumbering railroad "shall be deemed a taking for a public use, and any person, firm, company or corporation taking private property under the law of eminent domain for such purposes shall thereupon and thereby become a common carrier."

This is simply an offer of a special privilege to an offeree who is not otherwise entitled to it upon condition that he return the quid pro quo specified therein. If the owner of a private logging railroad should avail himself of this offered privilege by exercising the right of eminent domain, it cannot be seriously doubted that he would thereby become a public carrier. In such case it could not be said that his property had been taken for public use without compensation, but rather it should be said that he had voluntarily dedicated it to the public use, or quasi public use, of common carriage, and that his compensation therefor was the special privilege which he obtained thereby and to which he was not otherwise entitled. Having voluntarily elected to accept this privilege as compensation, he would not be heard thereafter to assert that it was not adequate compensation.

[12] By the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act the state offers the special privilege of using the public highways for the transaction of private business, a privilege to which no one is entitled as a right. But the offer is conditional that the offeree shall return a consideration therefor by dedicating his property to the quasi public use of public transportation, or, at least, by submitting himself to the conditions, regulations, and restrictions specified in the act. The offeree is not compelled to submit himself to those conditions, regulations, and restrictions, but, if he does not, he is not entitled to the privilege offered. If he does avail himself of the offered privilege, he must be deemed to have accepted the conditions of the offer.

The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the order to show cause is discharged.

MCCORMICK SAELTZER CO. v. GRIZZLY CREEK LUMBER CO.

REDDING FEED CO. v. SAME.

(Civ. 2659, 2660.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 31, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 29, 1925.)

1. Corporations ⇐432(12)—Evidence held sufficient to support finding that parties signed agreement as agents of corporation.

In action to recover obligations assumed by corporation in purchase of sawmill, evidence held sufficient to support finding that parties signing agreement acted as agents for corporation, of which they were directors, binding it to pay obligations as specified in agreement.

2. Corporations ⇐432(6)—Unsigned document held properly excluded as no evidence on issue whether persons purchasing assets of corporation were agents of defendant corporation.

In action against corporation to enforce obligations of another company, whose entire assets it purchased, the refusal to admit an unsigned document in evidence on the issue of whether persons who made purchase were defendant's agents held not error.

3. Corporations ⇐406(1)—Contracts of controlling majority of directors binding on company.

The conduct, actions, and promises of corporate directors constituting controlling majority of board will bind corporation to contracts made in furtherance of its business, as corporation will be deemed to have knowledge of their acts.

4. Corporations ⚡425(5)—Corporation taking possession of property under contract is estopped from denying obligations under same.

Where corporation under contract made by directors had taken possession of principal assets of another corporation, it was estopped from denying obligation to pay debts assumed under same contract, in view of Civ. Code, § 1589.

5. Corporations ⚡306—Not particular in determining as to whether one who owns all stock in corporation signs contract for corporation or in individual capacity.

Law is not particular in discriminating between contracts of one who practically owns all the stock of corporation and controls its affairs as to whether he executed contract relating to corporate business in individual or corporate capacity.

6. Appeal and error ⚡926(2)—On failure to include in transcript document excluded by trial court, Supreme Court must assume exclusion was proper.

Where appellant permitted settlement of transcript on appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, without including document excluded from evidence by trial court, Supreme Court must assume that action of trial court was right, in absence of any showing to the contrary.

7. Evidence ⚡161(1)—Evidence as to contents of document before court inadmissible.

Refusal to admit evidence as to contents of document which was before court was proper, since document itself was best evidence.

Appeals from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Separate actions by the McCormick Saeltzler Company and the Redding Feed Company against the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Barnett, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. These are actions tried jointly upon an alleged promise of defendant Grizzly Creek Lumber Company to pay the indebtedness of Shasta Mill & Lumber Company to the respective plaintiffs for goods and merchandise sold and delivered. By stipulation both cases were submitted on the same evidence. The defendant Shasta Mill & Lumber Company defaulted. Both plaintiffs had judgment as prayed for. For convenience the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company will be referred to as defendant.

The Shasta Mill & Lumber Company was operating a lumber mill in Shasta county. It was indebted to plaintiff McCormick Saeltzler Company in the sum of $982.69, and to plaintiff Redding Feed Company in the sum of $598.71 for merchandise sold and delivered. The evidence disclosed but one other outstanding debt to Miles & Westover for $3,500 for stumpage. The defendant Grizzly Creek Lumber Company was incorporated March 26, 1920. This corporation was promoted by J. T. Reed and W. L. Whitaker. They were also the principal stockholders. The others were mere nominal stockholders. Reed became president and Whitaker secretary. John F. Barnett was their attorney; also attorney for the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company, as well as vice president and director. Mr. Barnett was practically the only material witness for defendant at the trial. Much of his evidence was hearsay and incompetent, and admitted over the objection of plaintiff, as the trial court said, because there was no jury. It must be assumed the trial court disregarded this hearsay evidence.

Harry E. Scott was the president of the Shasta Mill Lumber Company. April 1, 1920, negotiations began between the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company and the Shasta Mill & Lumber Company for the purchase of the latter corporation and equipment. April 7th a majority of the members of the boards of directors of both corporations met at the office of Elmer E. Robinson, attorney for Shasta Mill & Lumber Company. In a conference at this office an oral agreement was entered into between the respective parties for the purchase and sale of the entire milling business, stock, and equipment of the Shasta Mill & Lumber Company for a consideration of $2,500 cash; the defendant agreeing to assume and pay, in addition thereto, the outstanding indebtedness of the Shasta Company in an aggregate sum not to exceed $5,000. Mr. Scott maintains that throughout these negotiations Reed and Whitaker held themselves out as the representatives of the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. The sale was consummated on or about the 12th of April, according to the terms mentioned. The capital stock, stumpage contracts, equipment, and all property of the Shasta Company was thereupon transferred to Reed and Whitaker. Mr. Scott was given $1,000 in cash and three promissory notes of $500 each, signed by Reed and Whitaker. The Shasta Company board of directors then resigned, and Reed, Whitaker, and Barnett were immediately elected directors of that corporation, and assumed control thereof. Reed and Whitaker then immediately agreed to transfer all the property of the Shasta Company to the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company, including stumpage contracts with Miles and Westover, in consideration of $85,300. They were to receive $75,000 in capital stock of the Grizzly Creek Company and $10,300 in cash. This was done. Shortly thereafter all the property of the Shasta Mill & Lumber Company was assigned and transferred to the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. At this time Reed, Whitaker, and Barnett were all officers and directors of both corporations.

Subsequently the Oregon Pine Lumber & Box Company entered into a contract with the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company for the purchase of its output of lumber. Mr. W. H. Pyburn, president of this Oregon Pine Lumber Company, testified that they advanced upon this contract the sum of $1,000, which was the initial sum paid upon the purchase of the Shasta Lumber Company. The Grizzly Creek Lumber Company did not prosper. The debts of the Shasta Company were not paid, and these suits were therefore prosecuted.

The defendant maintains that the evidence does not support the findings of the court to the effect that in the purchase of the property of the Shasta Company, and the promise to assume and pay its debts, Reed and Whitaker were acting as the representatives of the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company; that a certain written proposed agreement of sale referred to in the evidence, but which was never signed or accepted by the parties, was wrongfully excluded from the evidence; and that the evidence of Harry E. Scott respecting the agency of Reed and Whitaker was conflicting and not worthy of credit.

Mr. Scott, the former president of the Shasta Mill & Lumber Company, testified respecting the agency of Reed and Whitaker to bind the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company to assume and pay the outstanding debts of the former corporation as follows:

"We started negotiations with the Grizzly Creek or with Reed and Whitaker about the 1st of April, 1920, to make a sale of the stock and holdings of the Shasta Mill & Lumber Company. * * * Mr. Reed and Whitaker and Barnett, the attorney, were present. * * * The consideration was $2,500 in cash, of which $1,000 was to be paid at that time, and that the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company was to assume and pay all indebtedness against the Shasta Mill & Lumber Company. * * * There was $1,000 paid at that time, and three notes of $500 each given. * * * Mr. Reed was the president of the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company at that time, * * * and Mr. Whitaker was secretary. * * * And that was the consideration for the agreement just described. * * * It embraced the accounts owing to the McCormick Saeltzler Company, * * * and the Redding Feed Company. * * * We would never have turned it over had we realized that there was going to be any trouble about these bills, because that was the main object we had in turning it over, was to get our indebtedness paid up. * * * The goods were delivered to the Shasta Mill & Lumber Company."

On cross-examination Mr. Scott further testified:

"Q. Are you correct in stating that a sale was made to the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company? A. I am correct to this extent, that J.

A. Reed and Mr. Whitaker who represented the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company—

"Q. (Interrupting) You say they represented that company. * * * Isn't it a fact that you were dealing with these men personally, in their personal capacity? A. Mr. Reed and Mr. Whitaker were the parties with whom we were negotiating.

"Q. Is it not a fact that nobody ever said to you during those negotiations that Reed and Whitaker were representing the Grizzly Creek Company? A. That is a fact.

"Q. You just jumped at the conclusion. A. No; they represented themselves as the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. * * * We recognized them as representing the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. * * * My dealings were with J. T. Reed and Whitaker representing themselves to be the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. * * * This company was supposed to have a mill in Humboldt county, and Mr. Reed represented to me, and to Mr. Thomas and Robinson, that they could not get their mill started, and they wanted to get immediate action, and were looking for a mill like Shasta ready to operate, and, when we entered into negotiations with them, we supposed we were doing business with a going concern, and Reed and Whitaker were supposed to represent that concern. * * * There is no question in my mind but that they represented themselves as the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. * * * The capital stock was made over to the names of Reed and Whitaker."

It was admitted that at the time of these negotiations the Grizzly Creek Lumber Corporation was already incorporated, and that Reed was its president and Whitaker its secretary. All the Shasta property and assets were immediately transferred to the Grizzly Creek Company, and the initial payment of $1,000 was made by the Grizzly Creek Company from money advanced on contracts for output of lumber paid to it by the Oregon Pine Lumber Company.

[1, 2] The testimony of Scott is not conflicting, but seems entirely consistent. It is also in harmony with the conduct of the parties in the entire transaction. Neither Reed nor Whitaker was called to contradict these statements. If it be a fact that some one had drawn a tentative agreement of sale, which was never signed or accepted by the parties, in which the names of Reed and Whitaker appeared as purchasers, that would not be conclusive. For Reed and Whitaker did in fact take the capital stock in their own names, but immediately transferred all property over to the Grizzly Creek Company. They were the promoters of that company. The evidence taken as a whole is sufficient to support the findings to the effect that Reed and Whitaker acted as agents for the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company, and bound it in their promise to pay the obligations of the Shasta Company. Nor was there error in excluding the document which was neither signed nor accepted by any of the parties.

[3, 4] It appears from the evidence, and chiefly from the admissions of Mr. Barnett, that Reed and Whitaker were the promoters of the Grizzly Creek Lumber Company. They owned practically all the stock; 7,500 shares having been issued to them. The other stockholders were mere nominal ones, holding not more than one to five shares, merely to comply with the law and qualify them as directors. They employed Mr. Barnett, the attorney, and dominated the affairs of the corporation. Reed, Whitaker and Barnett held the principal offices of the corporation; namely, president, vice president, and secretary. All three were present at the time the agreement to assume the obligations of the Shasta Company was made. They became the directors and controlling factors of both corporations. They planned and executed the transfer of property. While strictly speaking, this corporation may not be said to be what the law calls a "one-man corporation," evidently it was a two-man corporation. The principle is the same. Under such circumstances the conduct, actions, and promises of these officers, constituting a controlling majority of the board of directors, will bind the corporation. The corporation will be deemed to have knowledge of their conduct and contracts. Having obtained and held the property constituting a material part of the contract of purchase, the corporation will be estopped from denying its obligation to pay the debts, which was a material part of the agreement. Having accepted the fruits of the contract, it may not refute the burdens. Civ. Code, § 1589; 3 Cook on Corporations, No. 712, p. 2237, and No. 716, p. 2290; 14A C. J. No. 2228, p. 368, and No. 2241, p. 387; 10 Fletcher on Corporations, No. 2199, No. 2207, p. 370.

In Goodwin v. Central Broadway Building Co., 21 Cal. App. 376, 131 P. 896, it is said:

"Where, with full knowledge of all the facts involved, a principal reaps the fruits of the unauthorized contract of his agent, and for some time yields acquiescence to its provisions, he will be deemed to have ratified it, and will be estopped * * * from repudiating it to the injury of the latter. And this doctrine applies to corporations equally with individuals." Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 102 [100] Cal. 71, [34 P. 529]; Clarke on Corporations, p. 278.

[5] The appellant contends that the corporate entity of the defendant, in contemplation of law, is separate and distinct from that of the individual officers, or stockholders, and that therefore it cannot be held responsible for their acts or promises. In Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 200 P. 641, it is said:

"While it is the general rule that a corporation is an entity separate and distinct from its stockholders, it is also equally well-settled that both law and equity will, when necessary to circumvent fraud, protect the rights of third persons, and accomplish justice, disregard this distinct existence and treat them as identical * * *"

In order to cast aside this legal fiction, "the law is not scrupulously particular in discriminating between the contracts of one who practically owns all the stock of a corporation and controls its affairs, as to whether he executes a contract relating to the corporate business in his individual or in the corporate capacity." Swartz v. Burr, 43 Cal. App. 445, 185 P. 411.

[6] The exclusion of the tentative agreement was not error. It appears that it was not signed by any of the parties. It appears to have been rejected by Reed, Whitaker, and Barnett. The contents of the instrument do not appear in evidence. The court permitted it to be marked for identification, and yet it does not appear in the record on appeal. There was no application to supply it by diminution of the record or otherwise. It was negligence on the part of appellant to have permitted the settlement of the transcript on appeal under the alternative method provided by section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, without including this document, if he wished to use it on appeal. Espinosa v. Gould, 47 Cal. App. 316, 190 P. 481. Since it is not included in the transcript, and the contents of the document are not before this court, it is impossible to determine whether it was competent or not. Therefore, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, this court must assume that the ruling of the trial court in excluding the document was proper. Espinosa v. Gould, supra; 2 Cal. Jur. No. 395, p. 689, and No. 401, p. 697; Beck v. Schmidt, 13 Cal. App. 448, 110 P. 455; S. F. Commercial Agency v. Hogan, 6 Cal. App. 408, 92 P. 312.

Nor was it error to sustain an objection to the following questions with relation to that written document which was before the court, to wit:

"Q. Now, what is the subject of that agreement; that is an agreement of sale, is it not?"

And:

"Q. What is dealt with in that agreement as a subject of sale?"

[7] The instrument itself was the best evidence of the subject-matter and of its contents. The objection was sustained on that ground. This ruling was correct.

The judgments are therefore affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Claude F. Purkett, Judge.

H. N. Mitchell was convicted of embezzlement, and from an order granting him a new trial the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

Clarence W. Morris, of San Francisco, and George E. Foote, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was held under two informations, each charging him with the crime of embezzlement. The cases were consolidated and tried together, resulting in convictions on both charges. The defendant moved for a new trial and his motion was granted as to both charges. This appeal is from the order granting a new trial. No brief has been filed in behalf of respondent, and the cause was ordered submitted for decision upon the appellant's opening brief.

The first information alleges that the defendant was president of the Modern Laundry Company, a corporation; that there came into his possession as such officer the sum of $550 "of the personal property of said Modern Laundry"; and that on the — day of September, 1922, he "did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and fraudulently appropriate said money and personal property to his own use, not in due and lawful execution of his trust." The second information, in similar language, charges the embezzlement of $325 on or about the — day of November, 1922.

The Modern Laundry Company was incorporated March 11, 1922. The defendant was elected president thereof March 30, 1922. He was the active manager of the corporation. His authority is not shown further than may be inferred from his position in the company and his activities in its affairs. The secretary treasurer of the company testified that the minutes do not show that the defendant was authorized "to cash checks for or on behalf of the company" or to deposit "the funds of the company in his own private account." The record is silent as to what the by-laws provide in this respect.

March 30, 1922, the state commissioner of corporations issued his permit, authorizing the company:

"To sell 250 shares of its capital stock to its incorporators for cash, and 14,750 shares to the public for cash, subject to a selling cost not to exceed 20 per cent. of the amount paid in cash account of each subscription upon the condition that the company, on or before the 1st day of October, 1922, impound in a depository to be first selected by the company and approved by the commissioner of corporations, the net sum of $50,000, otherwise 80 per cent. of each payment was to be returned to each subscriber upon his demand therefor."

The company did not select a depository until March, 1923. "Between six and eight thousand dollars" was then deposited with the depository so selected. This money was at a later time paid to subscribers under the order of the commissioner of corporations, they receiving, in the order of their applications therefor, 80 per cent. of the respective amounts paid by them for stock, until the fund was exhausted. The fund was insufficient to reimburse all subscribers. The sums alleged to have been embezzled by defendant were received by him from two subscribers in payment for stock, and no part thereof was ever repaid to them. The evidence does not show how many shares of stock were sold or the amount of money received therefor. It appears that the defendant received all sums paid in for capital stock, and that he deposited the same to his personal credit in his private bank account. The account books of the company were kept by or under the direction of the defendant. A witness for the prosecution, who had audited the accounts of the corporation, testified that the defendant delivered to him for the purposes of the audit, "stock certificate books and card records of the stockholders' accounts, showing amounts of the capital stock subscribed and the payments thereof, various canceled checks signed by Mitchell, receipted invoices, * * * one book that was supposed to be the cash book, * * * a record of the receipts from stock subscriptions; it was in a very crude form."

The defendant expended large sums of the money so received in remodeling and repairing a building which, as appears inferentially, was purchased by the company for use as a laundry. Neither the purchase price of the property nor the amount, if any, paid thereon appears from the evidence. Neither does it appear whether the defendant appropriated to his own use any of the funds of the company. It was admitted at the trial that two subscribers for capital stock paid the defendant for the company the sums alleged to have been embezzled, and that he deposited the same to the credit of his personal account. Whether these sums were included in the amount finally turned over to the depository does not appear. The case of the prosecution rests entirely upon the receipt by defendant of these two sums of money in his trust capacity as president of the company and his deposit thereof in his personal bank account.

[1] In People v. Royce, 106 Cal. 173, 37 P. 630, 39 P. 524, the defendant received the money there involved in his trust capacity as treasurer of the Veterans' Home Association, and deposited the same to his personal account. He reported the receipt of the money to the bookkeeper of the association and the amount thereof was entered by the bookkeeper upon the ledger of the association. It was held that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the charge of embezzlement. In this case, as stated, the defendant entered upon the books of the company the amounts received by him. Through a period of about 10 months he paid out large sums in the remodeling and repairing of the company's building. It is not to be presumed that the other officers and directors of the company did not have knowledge of these receipts and disbursements. There is nothing in the record, therefore, to warrant the inference that the defendant secretly made the deposits and expenditures in question. The facts are not distinguishable in principle from those in the Royce Case.

[2-4] Whether the deposit of the sums alleged to have been embezzled by the defendant constituted the crime charged depends upon the intent with which such deposits were made. If so deposited with the intent to devote the same to his own use, the defendant thereby committed the crime of embezzlement, regardless of whether he thereafter actually devoted the money to such use. In proof of the intent with which the deposits were made, the prosecution was entitled to show all receipts by defendant of money for the company and the disposition and use made thereof by him. People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 66 P. 372; People v. Cobler, 108 Cal.

538, 41 P. 401; People v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 608, 38 P. 502; People v. Lorden, 62 Cal. App. 501, 217 P. 117. If the books of the company, which the defendant had delivered to the accountant to be audited, were not available, then the prosecution had the right, upon laying a proper foundation, to prove their contents by the testimony of the accountant.

[5-8] The trial court properly held that "the whole evidence taken together is insufficient" to justify a conviction, and that it was error to instruct the jury as follows:

"If you are convinced by the evidence in this case to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt that Mrs. Ross Burden gave her check for $325 for the purchase of stock of the Modern Laundry Company, and that Andrew Glaser gave his check for $550 also for the purchase of stock in the Modern Laundry Company, and if you further are convinced by the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt that the permit granted by the Corporation Commissioner for the sale of the stock of said Modern Laundry Company required that not exceeding 20 per cent. of the money received for such sales could be expended for any purpose until such time as a sum equal to $50,000 was deposited with a depository selected by the corporation and approved by the commissioner of corporations; and if you further believe from the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendant, H. N. Mitchell, cashed these checks and deposited the proceeds to his own personal account in the California National Bank; that money was not deposited with a depository selected by the corporation and approved by the commissioner of corporations; that H. N. Mitchell afterward paid out such money for purposes not allowed or authorized in a sum exceeding 20 per cent. of the total amount received for the sale of the stock of the corporation, so that the money was lost to the corporation, then I charge you that such acts constituted embezzlement upon his part, and you should find him guilty as charged in each case."

[9] The instruction is clearly erroneous. An appropriation must be fraudulent to constitute the crime of embezzlement. This essential element of the crime is entirely omitted from the instruction. The defendant was charged with the fraudulent appropriation of two specified sums of money to his own use, but the instruction states, in effect, that he may be convicted upon proof that he used, for any purpose, "a sum exceeding 20 per cent. of the total amount received for the sale of the stock of the corporation." It is elementary that a defendant cannot be convicted of a crime with which he is not charged.

[10] During the progress of the trial, in the presence of the jury, the trial judge and the district attorney frequently expressed sharply conflicting opinions relative to the law applicable to the case. Counsel for defendant objected to the admission of certain evidence offered in rebuttal by the district attorney, and the trial judge stated that the evidence was not competent in a criminal case. After a colloquy between the judge and the district attorney, the latter said:

"I know what competent testimony is. I have tried as many cases as your honor has tried, and, if I may add, as many cases as your honor ever will try. I know what competent testimony is and rebuttal testimony."

Four times during the reading of the instructions to the jury the district attorney interrupted the court by announcing his exceptions to as many instructions which had been read, stating the grounds of his respective exceptions as follows: (a) "We contend that isn't the law. * * * I think it is an encroachment on the province of the jury with reference to the facts;" (b) "I would like to except to that instruction * * * on the ground it is not a true statement of the law;" (c) "We enter an exception to the instruction as not properly stating the law. * * * The other instruction (one requested by the district attorney and refused) has the approval of the Supreme Court;" (d) "We except to that instruction * * * as not being a correct construction of the law, and also an encroachment on the rights of the jury as to the facts." When the court stated, in response to one of the exceptions taken, that "the law excepts to any instruction given by the court," the district attorney replied: "I want the jury to know what instructions I except to."

[11, 12] However strongly a district attorney may believe that the court is in error as to the law, he should refrain from the use of any language which might incline jurors to accept his statement of the law rather than that of the court. Section 1176 of the Penal Code expressly provides that written instructions, and those taken down by the reporter, "need not be excepted to." In view of this plain provision, the practice of noting exceptions to such instructions should not be countenanced. An attorney may properly call the court's attention to any error in an instruction and request its correction, but not in such manner as to discredit the court's statement of the law as finally given to the jury.

The order is affirmed.

Finding, based on conflicting evidence, that sellers did not waive provision in contract of sale, requiring buyers to furnish letter of credit, will not be disturbed.

4. Sales ⇨337—Sellers of grapes, acting as brokers, held not entitled to retain as liquidated damages amount deposited under contract by buyers.

Brokers, who were not growers of grapes, but engaged in buying and selling them, held not entitled to retain as liquidated damages amount deposited under contract by buyers of grapes, especially where, during the season in which the contract was executed, brokers purchased a large quantity of grapes and sold them at prices as high or higher than buyers had contracted to pay.

5. Judgment ⇨253(1)—Failure of buyers, suing brokers for breach of contract, to pray for return of amount deposited as liquidated damages, did not preclude them from recovering such amount.

Buyers, denied recovery from brokers for breach of contract, held not precluded from recovery of money deposited as liquidated damages merely because of failure to pray for such relief; Code Civ. Proc. § 580, authorizing any relief embraced within issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by M. Jakovich and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Jakovich & Dogan, against Robert Romer and another individually, and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Robert Romer & Co., and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

John R. Tyrrell and Geo. L. Stewart, both of San Francisco (William K. White, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Hugh K. McKeivitt, Charles W. Cobb, and R. C. Ramsay, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendants to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract. The case was tried in the trial court without a jury. Judgment was rendered in behalf of the defendants, and the plaintiffs have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In their complaint, the plaintiffs pleaded the contract. That instrument consisted of two papers as follows:

"Grape Contract.

"This contract, made between Robert Romer & Co. of San Francisco, Cal., seller, and Jakovich & Dogan, of Chicago, Ill., buyer, witnesseth:

"Packing: Grapes to be packed in what is commonly known as Los Angeles lug boxes, in accordance with the standard required by the railroad administration for the loading of cars of said commodity.

"Delivery: To be F. O. B. cars, common shipping point California, as fast as growing crops compel growers to deliver same. A receipt in good order from the railroad company shall relieve the seller from all further liability.

"San Francisco, June 16, 1920.

"Jakovich & Dogan, Chicago, Ill.—Gentlemen: Referring to our contract of twenty cars of grapes, entered into on the 16th day of June, beg to state that the contract in question is understood by us to give you the right of inspection of said cars at point of origin as to said grapes being in accordance with contract.

"It is also understood and agreed that if you are not there at the point of origin at the time of shipment that you waive inspection.

"It is also further agreed that we shall refund at the rate of $200 (two hundred dollars) a car for any and all cars not shipped on the contract herein referred to, if we are unable to ship same for reasons beyond our control as particularly set forth in our contract under the clause of liability, or for any reason no fault of the buyer. However, said stipulation herein mentioned not to be in force and effect if the buyer refuses to accept delivery under the terms and conditions of the contract herein referred to.

"It is also understood and agreed that ten (10) cars of the above twenty will originate out of Santa Cruz county, Cal., or equally as good a district, and the other ten cars out of the Lodi district or other early shipping district.

"Cordially yours,

"By Robert Romer.

"I hereby accept the above modifications to the contract herein referred to.

The plaintiffs also pleaded that they had done and performed all conditions by them to be performed, except that portion of the contract which reads as follows:

"The buyer shall further furnish the seller with an irrevocable bank letter of credit to the amount of $21,500 within ten days from date of contract, payable against shipping documents at sight, and good until December 1, 1920."

As to that passage, the plaintiffs inserted in their pleading a statement that said condition had not been performed by them and thereupon they allege (1) certain acts as constituting fraud; (2) certain acts as constituting an equitable estoppel; and (3) certain acts as constituting a waiver. These excuses were pleaded in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 of the complaint. The answer of the defendants put all of said matters in issue and the trial court made findings "that all of the allegations of paragraphs 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 are untrue."

The appellants claim that the trial court erred in making a finding against the appellants on each one of said excuses.

[1] The facts constituting the alleged fraud, as stated by the appellants, were that before signing said contract at San Francisco on the 16th day of June, 1920, plaintiffs distinctly informed defendants that said plaintiffs were unfamiliar with the English language in general, and with letters of credit in particular, and expressed doubt of their ability to provide same; that the defendants assured the plaintiffs that said letter of credit could be easily arranged thereafter as the same was merely collateral protection to defendants, and that the provision for a letter of credit would not be vital to said contract; that relying upon such assurances plaintiffs signed the contract. No other declaration, representation, or act is alleged as constituting fraud in the inception of the contract. The acts enumerated did not constitute fraud. Civ. Code, § 1572.

[2] It will be noted that the contract was executed on the 16th day of June, 1920. By the terms of the contract, the letter of credit should have been furnished "within ten days from date of contract," that is on or before June 26, 1920. Shortly after the contract was executed, Mr. Jakovich went to Chicago. On arriving there he endeavored to obtain the letter of credit. Failing to do so, on June 25th he telegraphed to the defendants as follows:

"First National Bank not knowing me intimately does not wish to extend credit of $20,000. They believe can finance the deal without credit."

The defendants, on June 26th, the last day provided in the contract for furnishing the letter of credit, answered by a telegram as follows:

"Your telegram 25th received and in the meantime await your advices by mail. However in the meantime wish to assure you of our good will to assist you in any way we are able. Our Mr. Romer hopes to leave for Chicago in about two weeks."

On June 28, the plaintiffs wrote the defendants:

"I received your telegram to-day, June 28, 1920. We understand that you will be in Chicago in two weeks. Please let me know what day you will arrive, and I will arrange to meet you. When you come to the city we will talk about the bank business. Please let me know how the price of grapes are going. I understand from a friend of mine that the price is going higher. My banker tells me that monthly deposits are necessary to get a letter of credit."

It will be noted also that the letter was written two days after the time stated in the contract within which the letter of credit should have been furnished. The record discloses the fact that Mr. Romer did not go to Chicago. No other communications were had between the parties before September 14th. On the date last mentioned, Mr. Jakovich came to San Francisco, and during the succeeding two weeks he had many conversations with Mr. Romer. We think it is quite clear that the foregoing facts fall far short of anything that would constitute an estoppel. 10 Cal. Jur. p. 626, § 14.

[3] After Mr. Jakovich arrived in San Francisco, he immediately called upon Mr. Romer. The conversation that followed he testified was as follows:

"I spoke to him about the letter for credit. I told him everything what the bank told me, that they do not furnish me letter for credit. Mr. Romer said, 'Well, I will tell you a letter for credit is only a promise, we can do business just the same.' He said he did not buy any grapes from Lodi and Santa Cruz county and he is going to furnish me grapes from Healdsburg district, and that I should wait one week or two that the grapes is not ripened. He did not say anything to me about the $4,000. I will be glad if he say something, and then I have a chance to buy grapes and do the business, but he always keep me off. He was very friendly to me, very gentlemanly all the time. He told me why he could not give me grapes from Lodi because they were sunburned and he did not buy them. He said the Healdsburg district is better class of grapes. He did not say anything as to how I was to pay for grapes, now that I was not to furnish the letter of credit. As to the payment for the grapes that were to be furnished we was standing on the contract. I am going to pay for the grapes after they pass inspection, and I will pay before the car leaves California. He is complaining there is a shortage of cars, and he asks me if he gets enough cars. Then I said I was going to some friend and I will try to get some cars. When I was ready to take cars he called a gentleman from the insurance company who took me to the office of the Lyon Bonding Company for the bond to secure the freight money for 20 cars, and I pay $110 for the bond. Mr. Romer put the shipping points on the surety bond. I was pretty near every day, every second day, in his office. Always he delayed. He always delayed — 'the grapes is not ready yet,' and he says, 'Another four days, another two days,' and so forth. He never said anything about the contract. He always says he is going to deliver the grapes."

On the 11th day of October, 1920, the defendants served a written notice that the buyer was in default, and that the rights of the buyer under the contract had been terminated and ended. The defendants called Mr. Romer as a witness and he testified: At the time the contract was being prepared, he showed to Mr. Jakovich and to Mr. Stewart a form of letter of credit which he had theretofore used and explained the necessity for such a paper. He further testified that the plaintiffs never tendered the defendants cash to cover the 20 cars of grapes. They did not tender the defendants security, or letter of credit, or money, or anything else to secure the payment for the 20 cars. At all times after the transaction and the failure to supply the letter of credit, even after the 10 days had elapsed, the defendants were ready and willing to give the plaintiffs the grapes had they produced the cash or the letter of credit, and even then the defendants were asking the plaintiffs if they could get the security, get the money, or the cash, and put it up so defendants could get the grapes for them. Grapes in the Lodi district come in in the latter part of August and in the Modesto district. But in northern counties they come in later, and in the mountain counties still later. The defendants never agreed with the plaintiffs to eliminate the letter of credit as one of the conditions precedent to their taking delivery of the cars. The witness Romer further testified:

"I told him (Mr. Jakovich) when he came back about September 14—that is the time—and he came in the office there and he did not know how to bring up the subject-matter, and finally he began to apologize about not putting the letter of credit up, and I told Mr. Jakovich then and there that the contract distinctly provided for that, and that the contract was terminated and canceled. Between June 20th and September 14th Mr. Jakovich was in Chicago and I was in San Francisco. The only way I had of communicating with him was by letter or telegram. I did not, by letter or telegram, advise Mr. Jakovich that the $4,000 was forfeited."

While there is other evidence in the record, it is not necessary to recite it. From what we have quoted, we think it appears that, on the issue of waiver or no waiver, the evidence was conflicting, to say the least, and that the record is not in a form that will justify this court in disturbing the finding made by the trial court on the issue as to waiver.

[4] The appellants contend that in any event the judgment of the trial court should have been in favor of the appellants to the amount of $4,000, which they had deposited with the respondents. We think this contention must be sustained. The evidence discloses that Mr. Romer was not a grower of grapes, but that he was engaged in buying and selling grapes. It also discloses that during the season of 1920 he purchased a large quantity of grapes in California, and that he sold them at prices as high or higher than the appellants had contracted to pay. It is quite clear that in this transaction he was acting in the capacity of a broker. All of the facts considered, the case is ruled by the doctrine stated in Biescar v. Pratt, 4 Cal. App. 288, 87 P. 1101; McInerney v. Mack, 34 Cal. App. 153, 166 P. 867.

[5] Replying to this point, the respondents take the position that the appellants, by their pleading and prayer, asked for different and other relief than the return of the $4,000 deposited. Be that as it may, such relief was embraced within the issue and the plaintiffs were entitled thereto. Code Civ. Proc. § 580.

The judgment is reversed.

Ex parte WILLIAMS. (Cr. 1304.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 2, 1925.)

Municipal corporations — 598—Ordinance regulating employment of dance partners held void as indefinite.

A city ordinance, providing that "dance partners, other than such teachers as are necessary, shall not be employed" in dance halls, held void as indefinite and uncertain, inasmuch as it fixed no standard by which to determine what number of teachers in any dancing hall was necessary, but left such standard to be fixed and determined by opinion of court.

Application by Clinton U. Williams for writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of San Diego, to secure the release of petitioner from custody on charge of violating an ordinance prohibiting the employment of dancing partners. Writ granted.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Frank M. Downer, Jr., of San Diego, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This matter came on for hearing after writ issued. It was stipulated that the facts of the case are correctly stated in the petition.

Ordinance No. 7760 (as amended by Ordinance No. 7918) of the city of San Diego is an ordinance regulating public dance halls, providing for the licensing thereof, etc. Section 16 of this ordinance, after setting out certain rules concerning teachers or instructors in public dance halls, provides as follows:

"Dance partners, other than such teachers as are necessary, shall not be employed."

Petitioner has been arrested and imprisoned on a charge that he violated said ordinance in this, that at the stated time and place he "did willfully and unlawfully, as owner, proprietor, manager, or person in charge of a public dance hall, employ girls as dance partners at said public dance, or in said public dance hall, who were not necessary teachers or instructors."

Petitioner claims that said ordinance, in so far as it prohibits the employment of dance partners, other than such teachers as are necessary, is unconstitutional and void. The charge that these dance partners were not necessary teachers or instructors admits that they were teachers or instructors. It follows that, if the defendant was charged with any violation of the ordinance, this charge was that, as proprietor of a public dance hall, he employed unnecessary teachers, and permitted them to act also as dance partners.

The ordinance has established no standard by which to determine what number of teachers in any dance hall is necessary, or any limit beyond which it can be said that the teachers employed are unnecessary. We need not go beyond this point in our discussion of the case. The defendant may have believed in good faith, and in good faith may have acted upon the belief, that four teachers were necessary in the conduct of his business. And yet, if this is a valid ordinance, his conviction would be sustained, if the court or jury were of the opinion that only three teachers were necessary. It thus appears that the guilt or innocence of the defendant, in a prosecution under this provision of the ordinance, depends, not upon the law itself, but upon a standard to be fixed and determined by the opinion of the court after the act has been committed.

In Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750, it was held that a statutory provision for the forfeiture of a physician's license on account of unprofessional conduct, which conduct consisted in advertising "of medical business in which grossly improbable statements are made," was void because it was too indefinite and uncertain to be enforced. "The right of the physician to be secure in his privilege of practicing his profession is thus made to depend not upon any definition which the law furnishes him as to what shall constitute 'grossly improbable statements,' but upon the determination of the board after the statement is made and simply upon its opinion of its improbability." So here, the right of the defendant to employ teachers and use them as "dance partners" is granted, but the limit beyond which he may not legally go is made to depend, not upon any definition which the ordinance furnishes him as to what shall be a necessary number of teachers, but upon the determination of a court, after the act done by the defendant, and simply upon the court's opinion as to the number of teachers who were necessary.

The petitioner is discharged from custody.

PEOPLE v. VILLANUEVA. (Cr. 1220.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 28, 1925.)

Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 517(4)—Corpus delicti must be established before admission of confession.

In prosecution under St. 1923, p. 696, prohibiting an unnaturalized foreign-born person from carrying concealed weapons, admission in evidence of defendant's confession that he was born in republic of Mexico, and that he had never been naturalized as a citizen of United States, held error, where no other evidence either of defendant's nativity or whether he had been naturalized as an American citizen was introduced.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Jesus Villanueva was convicted of the unlawful possession of a revolver or firearm, and, from the judgment and order denying motion for new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

Drapeau, Orr & Gardner, of Ventura, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant was convicted under the terms of an act of the Legislature approved June 13, 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 696), containing, among other things, a provision to the effect that no unnaturalized foreign-born person shall own or have in his possession, or under his custody or control, any pistol, revolver, or firearm having a barrel of less than 12 inches in length, and therefore capable of being concealed upon the person.

Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It appears that on the trial, over defendant's objection, evidence was admitted by the court of defendant's confession or admission that he was born in the town of Moratio, in the republic of Mexico, and that he had never been naturalized as a citizen of the United States. No other evidence, either of defendant's nativity, or of the fact as to whether or not he had been naturalized as an American citizen, was introduced in evidence.

The principal point relied on by appellant for reversal of the judgment is that the fact as to the place of birth of defendant was an essential element of the corpus delicti which could be established only by evidence independent of defendant's confession or admission.

The same point was urged in the case of People v. Quarez, or Juarez (Cal. Sup.) 238 P. 363 where it is said:

"The corpus delicti of the offense defined in section 2 consists, as we have shown, of two elements—the second being the foreign nativity and nonnaturalization of the appellant. The rule is well settled and the authorities numerous in this state that the extrajudicial statements, admissions or confession of a defendant cannot be used to establish any necessary element of the corpus delicti of the crime charged. The corpus delicti must be established by independent evidence before the extrajudicial statements, admissions or confession of a defendant are admissible. People v. Jones, 31 Cal. 565; People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345 [40 P. 440]; People v. Johnson, 47 Cal. App. Dec. 392 [238 P. 814]."

See, also, People v. Garcia (Cal. Sup.) 238 P. 367.

The foregoing cases are conclusive. It therefore appears that prejudicial error was committed by the court against defendant in the admission of the evidence of which complaint is made.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Separate actions by Herbert A. Bruntsch and Ernest Bruntsch against Dudley D. Sales, consolidated for trial. Judgment for plaintiff in each action, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward A. Cunha, R. P. Henshall, and R. R. Moody, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank L. Guereña, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The appellant, Dudley D. Sales, a practicing attorney at law in the city and county of San Francisco, was sued by the respondents Herbert D. and Ernest A. Bruntsch, brothers-in-law of the appellant, for profits alleged to have been secretly made by the appellant in a real estate transaction in which it is claimed that appellant acted as agent and attorney for the respondents. Separate suits were filed by respondents; later they were consolidated, and a trial was had by the court sitting without a jury, judgment was rendered against appellant in each action, and appeals were taken from those judgments.

In the gore block in San Francisco, located between Market street and Eddy street, is a piece of property extending from Market street to Eddy street, rectangular in form, which may be said to be owned as follows: The lot fronting on Market street is owned one-half by the Cooks and the other half by the Bruntsches, and the lot fronting on Eddy street is owned by the Luchsingers. The findings are as follows:

"I. That defendant is a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and has been at all times herein mentioned and now is a duly licensed and practicing attorney at law in and before the courts of said state.

"II. That for several years last past the plaintiff, Margaretha Bruntsch and Tosca Bruntsch Sales, sisters of plaintiff, and Carl C. G. Bruntsch, Ernest A. Bruntsch, and Harold C. Bruntsch, brothers of plaintiff, have been and now are the owners of a one-sixth interest each in the entire one-half interest in the following described land, with the improvements thereon, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, and more particularly described as follows: [Describing the Cook-Bruntsch lot.]

"III. That by instrument dated September 1, 1920, the said land and the buildings thereon were leased by the persons named in paragraph II hereof, and by the owners of the other one-half interest in said property, to Universal Film Manufacturing Company, a New York corporation, hereinafter referred to as the 'company'.

"IV. That negotiations for the leasing of said property were carried on for about nine months immediately preceding September 1, 1920; that said negotiations on the part or for the behoof and benefit of said company were negotiated and carried on by John H. Merrill: that in said negotiations the interest in said property of plaintiff and of plaintiff's said brothers and sisters was represented by defendant, and defendant acted for plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters in the negotiations for leasing said property, and in determining and fixing the terms, provisions, and conditions of the lease thereof; and that in so doing defendant negotiated with and through said Merrill, and co-operated with said Merrill in bringing about a meeting of the minds of said company on the one part and plaintiff and his said brothers and sisters on the other part, and in consummating said transactions between said parties; and that in all the said matters, and in the matter of the preparation and execution of the lease, defendant, for a compensation charged to plaintiff by defendant and paid to defendant by plaintiff and other parties in interest, acted as the agent and attorney at law for plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters.

"V. That upon the consummation of said lease, and on the 20th day of October, 1920, said John H. Merrill received from said company the sum of $20,000 as a bonus or commission paid him by said company for his services in procuring and effecting the lease of the premises and property of which said company became the lessee at or about the time last aforesaid, including the property of plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters; and that of said amount so paid to him, said Merrill, without the knowledge of plaintiff, paid to defendant, on the 20th day of October, 1920, the sum of $9,750 as a commission or bonus to defendant for said co-operation of defendant with said Merrill and the part which defendant had taken in the negotiation and consummation of said lease of the interest of plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters in said property hereinbefore described; and that said sum of $9,750 was and is a profit derived by defendant as agent and attorney in said transaction for plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters.

"VI. That plaintiff did not know or discover until the early part of the year 1922 that defendant had received said sum of $9,750 or any bonus or commission, or any compensation at all for or by reason of said transaction in respect of said property other than the compensation charged by defendant to plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters; and that, when plaintiff did learn of the payment made by said Merrill to defendant as aforesaid, plaintiff demanded of defendant one-sixth of the amount so received by defendant, but defendant has not paid, and has refused at all times to pay, plaintiff, or account to plaintiff for a one-sixth part or any part of said amount so received by defendant, and has at all times denied the right of plaintiff to any share or part thereof, and that nothing has been paid by defendant to plaintiff in the premises, and that said claim and demand of plaintiff is wholly unpaid.

"And from the above findings the court concluded:

"I. That Herbert A. Bruntsch, plaintiff above named, is entitled to recover from Dudley D. Sales, defendant above named, the sum of $1,625, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from October 20, 1920.

"II. That Herbert A. Bruntsch, plaintiff above named, is entitled to judgment against Dudley D. Sales, defendant above named, for $1,625, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from October 20, 1920, to date of judgment."

The appellant contends that the defendant's client was his wife, Mrs. Sales, and his obligation as an attorney was to discuss the questions of duty and responsibility with Mrs. Sales, and he also contends that Mrs. Sales as a cotenant was not bound to disclose that she was leasing her interest at a greater price than her other cotenants were getting, and that her attorney was under no greater obligation.

For some years prior to 1920 the defendant was the gratuitous agent of the respondents and their brothers and sisters to collect the rental and to pay the taxes and insurance, and thereafter to pay the balance to each of the co-owners. That agreement was oral, except as to the respondent, Herbert A. Bruntsch, and he had reduced his authorization to writing. When the transaction in dispute arose, the appellant stated to Ernest Bruntsch that there was a new lease coming up when the present lease expired. A short time after that he telephoned to Ernest's wife regarding the terms of the new lease. Later the appellant wrote out the formal lease, presented it to Ernest for his signature, and thereafter charged him $125 as a fee. The appellant sent a statement of the same charge to each of the Bruntsch heirs. Herbert A. Bruntsch and the appellant held a few conversations regarding the making of the lease, the terms thereof and the persons to whom the first moneys should be paid and the amount to be paid to Herbert A. Bruntsch. When the lease had been prepared, the appellant presented it to Mr. Bruntsch, and it was thereupon signed. Later a written statement of charges, including appellant's fee for services, was sent by the appellant to Mr. Bruntsch. Both parties concede that the appellant acted as attorney and business agent for his wife, Tosca Bruntsch Sales. Mr. Gootch, an attorney at law, was the resident attorney for Margaretha Bruntsch, and from time to time conferred with the appellant as her representative, and later approved the appellant's bill for expenses incurred and his fee for services rendered. As the transaction proceeded, the appellant conferred orally or otherwise with each of the Bruntsch heirs. Mr. Jesse Steinhart acted as attorney at law for the Universal Company. Mr. E. S. Meriman, a real estate broker, acted as the representative of the Cooks. Mr. Morris, a real estate broker, acted as the representative of Mr. Luchsinger. In this connection it should be noted that Mr. Luchsinger is not a party to the lease, and, so far as the record shows, a separate instrument was probably executed between the Universal Company and him.

After the lease had been executed, a controversy arose between Mr. Morris and Mr. Merrill regarding commissions. On the trial of that action Mr. Sales and Mr. Merrill were both called as witnesses. When they gave their testimony, the instant action had not even been contemplated. During the trial of the instant action parts of the testimony of Mr. Merrill, given in the trial of the Morris case, were read into this record. The same with the testimony of the appellant, Mr. Sales. We shall not attempt to segregate statements made by those witnesses on the same subject, whether made in the one trial or the other. As to what the transaction was as between Mr. Sales and Mr. Merrill, in what capacity each one acted, and as to the agreements made by them, those two men gave testimony. Speaking of Mr. Sales, Mr. Merrill testified:

"I met him at his office. I told him I had an opportunity to sell this lease to the Universal Picture Corporation, and I went to Mr. Sales and asked him if he would protect me in delivering that lease if I would divide with him. I told him I would give him $10,000 of the bonus on the deal, and he said that he represented the Bruntsches and could protect me. Then I talked the proposition up and went about it to deliver the lease, and Mr. Sales and I acted together at that end. * * * I asked Mr. Sales for an option on the property, which he gave me and I agreed with Mr. Sales that I would pay him half of my bonus for his protection for me to deliver the property. He said he represented the heirs, and could deliver it.

3. Attorney and client ☞129(2)—Evidence held not to show that attorney's wife, part owner of property leased by attorney, was principal.

In action to recover secret profits of attorney negotiating a lease for plaintiffs of their property, claim that attorney's wife, a part owner of property, was principal held not sustained by evidence showing attorney and agent of lessor were only principals at beginning of deal, and that in subsequent negotiations wife was principal only in sense in which other owners were.

4. Attorney and client ☞72—Evidence held to show that defendant acted as attorney for all plaintiffs.

In action to recover secret profits in lease of property owned by plaintiffs and wife of defendant attorney, evidence held to show that defendant acted as attorney for all plaintiffs.

5. Attorney and client ☞129(1)—Part owners of property and agent of lessor held not necessary or proper parties.

In action by part owners of property to recover secret profits of attorney negotiating a lease for them, other owners of property and agent of lessor held not proper or necessary parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Separate actions by Herbert A. Bruntsch and Ernest Bruntsch against Dudley D. Sales, consolidated for trial. Judgment for plaintiff in each action, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward A. Cunha, R. P. Henshall, and R. R. Moody, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank L. Guereña, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The appellant, Dudley D. Sales, a practicing attorney at law in the city and county of San Francisco, was sued by the respondents Herbert D. and Ernest A. Bruntsch, brothers-in-law of the appellant, for profits alleged to have been secretly made by the appellant in a real estate transaction in which it is claimed that appellant acted as agent and attorney for the respondents. Separate suits were filed by respondents; later they were consolidated, and a trial was had by the court sitting without a jury, judgment was rendered against appellant in each action, and appeals were taken from those judgments.

In the gore block in San Francisco, located between Market street and Eddy street, is a piece of property extending from Market street to Eddy street, rectangular in form, which may be said to be owned as follows: The lot fronting on Market street is owned one-half by the Cooks and the other half by the Bruntsches, and the lot fronting on Eddy street is owned by the Luchsingers. The findings are as follows:

"I. That defendant is a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and has been at all times herein mentioned and now is a duly licensed and practicing attorney at law in and before the courts of said state.

"II. That for several years last past the plaintiff, Margaretha Bruntsch and Tosca Bruntsch Sales, sisters of plaintiff, and Carl C. G. Bruntsch, Ernest A. Bruntsch, and Harold C. Bruntsch, brothers of plaintiff, have been and now are the owners of a one-sixth interest each in the entire one-half interest in the following described land, with the improvements thereon, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, and more particularly described as follows: [Describing the Cook-Bruntsch lot.]

"III. That by instrument dated September 1, 1920, the said land and the buildings thereon were leased by the persons named in paragraph II hereof, and by the owners of the other one-half interest in said property, to Universal Film Manufacturing Company, a New York corporation, hereinafter referred to as the 'company'.

"IV. That negotiations for the leasing of said property were carried on for about nine months immediately preceding September 1, 1920; that said negotiations on the part or for the behoof and benefit of said company were negotiated and carried on by John H. Merrill; that in said negotiations the interest in said property of plaintiff and of plaintiff's said brothers and sisters was represented by defendant, and defendant acted for plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters in the negotiations for leasing said property, and in determining and fixing the terms, provisions, and conditions of the lease thereof; and that in so doing defendant negotiated with and through said Merrill, and co-operated with said Merrill in bringing about a meeting of the minds of said company on the one part and plaintiff and his said brothers and sisters on the other part, and in consummating said transactions between said parties; and that in all the said matters, and in the matter of the preparation and execution of the lease, defendant, for a compensation charged to plaintiff by defendant and paid to defendant by plaintiff and other parties in interest, acted as the agent and attorney at law for plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters.

"V. That upon the consummation of said lease, and on the 20th day of October, 1920, said John H. Merrill received from said company the sum of $20,000 as a bonus or commission paid him by said company for his services in procuring and effecting the lease of the premises and property of which said company became the lessee at or about the time last aforesaid, including the property of plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters; and that of said amount so paid to him, said Merrill, without the knowledge of plaintiff, paid to defendant, on the 20th day of October, 1920, the sum of $9,750 as a commission or bonus to defendant for said co-operation of defendant with said Merrill and the part which defendant had taken in the negotiation and consummation of said lease of the interest of plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters in said property hereinbefore described; and that said sum of $9,750 was and is a profit derived by defendant as agent and attorney in said transaction for plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters.

"VI. That plaintiff did not know or discover until the early part of the year 1922 that defendant had received said sum of $9,750 or any bonus or commission, or any compensation at all for or by reason of said transaction in respect of said property other than the compensation charged by defendant to plaintiff and plaintiff's said brothers and sisters; and that, when plaintiff did learn of the payment made by said Merrill to defendant as aforesaid, plaintiff demanded of defendant one-sixth of the amount so received by defendant, but defendant has not paid, and has refused at all times to pay, plaintiff, or account to plaintiff for a one-sixth part or any part of said amount so received by defendant, and has at all times denied the right of plaintiff to any share or part thereof, and that nothing has been paid by defendant to plaintiff in the premises, and that said claim and demand of plaintiff is wholly unpaid.

"And from the above findings the court concluded:

"I. That Herbert A. Bruntsch, plaintiff above named, is entitled to recover from Dudley D. Sales, defendant above named, the sum of $1,625, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from October 20, 1920.

"II. That Herbert A. Bruntsch, plaintiff above named, is entitled to judgment against Dudley D. Sales, defendant above named, for $1,625, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from October 20, 1920, to date of judgment."

The appellant contends that the defendant's client was his wife, Mrs. Sales, and his obligation as an attorney was to discuss the questions of duty and responsibility with Mrs. Sales, and he also contends that Mrs. Sales as a cotenant was not bound to disclose that she was leasing her interest at a greater price than her other cotenants were getting, and that her attorney was under no greater obligation.

For some years prior to 1920 the defendant was the gratuitous agent of the respondents and their brothers and sisters to collect the rental and to pay the taxes and insurance, and thereafter to pay the balance to each of the co-owners. That agreement was oral, except as to the respondent, Herbert A. Bruntsch, and he had reduced his authorization to writing. When the transaction in dispute arose, the appellant stated to Ernest Bruntsch that there was a new lease coming up when the present lease expired. A short time after that he telephoned to Ernest's wife regarding the terms of the new lease. Later the appellant wrote out the formal lease, presented it to Ernest for his signature, and thereafter charged him $125 as a fee. The appellant sent a statement of the same charge to each of the Bruntsch heirs. Herbert A. Bruntsch and the appellant held a few conversations regarding the making of the lease, the terms thereof and the persons to whom the first moneys should be paid and the amount to be paid to Herbert A. Bruntsch. When the lease had been prepared, the appellant presented it to Mr. Bruntsch, and it was thereupon signed. Later a written statement of charges, including appellant's fee for services, was sent by the appellant to Mr. Bruntsch. Both parties concede that the appellant acted as attorney and business agent for his wife, Tosca Bruntsch Sales. Mr. Gootch, an attorney at law, was the resident attorney for Margaretha Bruntsch, and from time to time conferred with the appellant as her representative, and later approved the appellant's bill for expenses incurred and his fee for services rendered. As the transaction proceeded, the appellant conferred orally or otherwise with each of the Bruntsch heirs. Mr. Jesse Steinhart acted as attorney at law for the Universal Company. Mr. E. S. Merriman, a real estate broker, acted as the representative of the Cooks. Mr. Morris, a real estate broker, acted as the representative of Mr. Luchsinger. In this connection it should be noted that Mr. Luchsinger is not a party to the lease, and, so far as the record shows, a separate instrument was probably executed between the Universal Company and him.

After the lease had been executed, a controversy arose between Mr. Morris and Mr. Merrill regarding commissions. On the trial of that action Mr. Sales and Mr. Merrill were both called as witnesses. When they gave their testimony, the instant action had not even been contemplated. During the trial of the instant action parts of the testimony of Mr. Merrill, given in the trial of the Morris case, were read into this record. The same with the testimony of the appellant, Mr. Sales. We shall not attempt to segregate statements made by those witnesses on the same subject, whether made in the one trial or the other. As to what the transaction was as between Mr. Sales and Mr. Merrill, in what capacity each one acted, and as to the agreements made by them, those two men gave testimony. Speaking of Mr. Sales, Mr. Merrill testified:

"I met him at his office. I told him I had an opportunity to sell this lease to the Universal Picture Corporation, and I went to Mr. Sales and asked him if he would protect me in delivering that lease if I would divide with him. I told him I would give him $10,000 of the bonus on the deal, and he said that he represented the Bruntsches and could protect me. Then I talked the proposition up and went about it to deliver the lease, and Mr. Sales and I acted together at that end. * * * I asked Mr. Sales for an option on the property, which he gave me and I agreed with Mr. Sales that I would pay him half of my bonus for his protection for me to deliver the property. He said he represented the heirs, and could deliver it.

* * * I told my wife to do anything that Dudley Sales said, and she turned over to him $10,500. * * * I requested him to take care of this end of the deal. Mr. Steinhart was the attorney of the Universal people, and there were a lot of angles that had to be straightened out, and I had Mr. Sales attend to them. Personally I was in New York, and Mr. Sales handled this end of it. (The witness referred to an option, saying that it had been returned to Mr. Sales.)

"Q. I will now ask you whose signatures appeared on that instrument? A. The signatures of the heirs—the Bruntsch heirs. I did not see them sign it. I saw Mr. Sales' signature as attorney for them. * * * The $9,750 which was paid by my wife, pursuant to my instruction, to Mr. Sales, was given to him to be, as I understood it, Mr. Sales' own money for himself. He is not to pay my wife or me any part of it. I have no agreement that he is to repay my wife or me any part of it. That money has absolutely been paid over so far as I am concerned. I am satisfied that Mr. Sales can keep it, and he earned it in consideration for services and rendering protection accorded me in connection with this deal. * * * When it was turned over to Mr. Dudley Sales it was his money. It was considered his money, and I still consider it at the present time Mr. Dudley Sales' money. He has not promised to return any part of it to me or to my wife."

Mr. Sales testified that Mrs. Sales and Mr. Merrill never came together regarding the matter. Mr. Sales also testified:

"On two separate occasions I gave Mr. Merrill an option. * * * The offer, I believe, involved a 30-year lease. I have forgotten just exactly the rental, just exactly what the rental was, but I believe that $2,200 per month, with $50,000 cash deposit as security for the payment of the rental. That proposition was acceptable to all parties, and an option was given. * * * That option expired before the lease was executed. * * * I was Mr. Merrill's attorney in fact to extend his agreement with the Universal people beyond the time limit, and in that respect only, and I have already stated that I represented Mrs. Sales as her agent in the transaction, * * * and Mr. Merrill, being in the East, asked me to represent him in making the various contracts and in trying to get the different contracts together. * * * I agreed with Mr. Merrill that in consideration of one-half of the commission that he might get out of that one-half I would get one-half of that for my work in representing the interest that I did and for not permitting any one else to get this save him as my client, and that out of my half I would pay Mr. Merriman $250. * * * In the settlement of our account in connection with this, that is, in dividing the money in the way in which it was divided, nothing was said on the subject, and there was no understanding—I considered it mine. * * * Later I think, as I said at the time, it was a mere plain agreement to divide the commission or bonus, I have forgotten just what the telegram mentioned, bonus, but, anyway, on it was a plain simple agreement to give me one-half of all he got."

Mrs. Sales testified:

"He (my husband) came home one night and told me that a Mr. John Merrill was going to put it (lease) through and whether I would consent to give Mr. Merrill an option on my one-twelfth interest, promising in signing this option on the lease that was pending not to act through anybody else but Mr. Merrill, and that if I did that Mr. Merrill would give me one-half of his bonus, whatever it might be."

[1] Of course, there is other evidence in the record, but, if the trial court believed the facts above recited, and from its judgment we must assume that it did, then, and in that event, the trial court was justified in holding that primarily the appellant was acting sui juris and associated himself with Mr. Merrill to obtain the lease. He was not set in motion by Mrs. Sales acting as a cotenant, but he afterwards acted for her as her attorney in the same degree in which he acted as attorney for each of the Bruntsch heirs.

[2] The appellant claims that, if any one is entitled to recover, the Cooks and Mr. Luchsinger are likewise entitled to recover. The contention is without merit. There was no evidence at all that the appellant did in any respect act as attorney or agent for the Cooks or for Mr. Luchsinger.

[3] In his fifth point the appellant claims that Mrs. Sales was principal, but, as we have pointed out above, Mr. Merrill and Mr. Sales were primarily the principals. As the transaction unfolded Mr. Sales became attorney for Mrs. Sales and her brothers and sister. In that aspect of the case it may be conceded that Mrs. Sales was a principal, but she was a principal only in the sense in which all of the Bruntsch heirs were principals.

[4] In the next place the appellant asserts that there is absolutely no evidence in the record that Sales was the attorney for any of the Bruntsches other than his wife, and the finding of the court below to that effect is without any evidence to support it. Looking at the excerpts of testimony which we have quoted, it is patent that this assertion by the appellant is in direct conflict with the evidence contained in the record.

[5] Finally, it is asserted by the appellant that there is a fatal defect of parties defendant in this case because the Cooks, Mr. Luchsinger, and Mr. Merrill were not made parties. From what has been said above we think that no one of them was either a proper or necessary party.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

SUN-MAID RAISIN GROWERS OF CALIFORNIA v. PAPAIZIAN. (Civ. 5221.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 26, 1925, as Modified Sept. 14, 1925.)

1. Agriculture ⚡6—Evidence held to show contract for delivery of produce was signed under duress.

Evidence held to show that contract by which defendant agreed to deliver his raisins to a mutual association was signed under such conditions of duress and menace, as defined by Civ. Code, § 1570, as to destroy element of free and mutual consent essential thereto, and authorize rescission under section 1689.

2. Agriculture ⚡6—Mutual association of growers held responsible for acts inducing signature to contract.

Mutual association of raisin growers, as assignor of contract, requiring defendant to deliver his crop of raisins to association, which had full knowledge of unlawful acts that were practiced by some of its members, or those "jointly interested," to secure defendant's signature thereto, held responsible for such acts, in view of Civ. Code, § 1689.

3. Appeal and error ⚡931(3) — Reviewing tribunal not required to assume that trial court will make finding contrary to evidence.

Reviewing tribunal is not required to assume that trial court would have made a finding contrary to all competent evidence before it.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1071(6)—Failure of court to make finding on issues brought forward by parties, material to main issue raised by pleadings, held reversible error.

Where plaintiff in action in claim and delivery for raisins pleaded a cause of action in replevin, and defendant entered a denial and pleaded affirmatively his right to possession, failure of court to make a finding on issues brought forward by parties during course of a trial, which were material to main issue raised by written pleadings, held reversible error.

5. Evidence ⚡594—Generally, uncontradicted testimony of witness should be accepted as proof of fact.

Generally, uncontradicted testimony of a witness to a particular fact may not be disregarded, but should be accepted as proof of the fact.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California against Peter Papazian. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. K. Tuttle, of Fresno, and Edward M. Treadwell, of San Francisco (R. S. Laughlin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Harry M. Creech, of San Francisco, and Harris, Johnson, Wiley & Griffith, of Fresno, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff commenced this action in claim and delivery. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and judgment went to the plaintiff, from which the defendant has appealed on a record prepared under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

The suit involves the right to the possession of about 75 tons of raisins produced on the defendant's land in the county of Fresno during the year 1923. Plaintiff's claim rests on an assignment from the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of a written contract executed by its assignor and the defendant for the disposition of all the raisins or raisin grapes produced by the defendant for a specified period upon a certain described piece of property. The complaint is in the usual form in claim and delivery, and alleges that the value of the raisins which the defendant holds in his possession was about $6,000. The answer is in the usual form, denying plaintiff's ownership or right to the possession of the raisins. With the issue so framed the plaintiff rested its case upon proof of the execution and assignment of the contract, and of defendant's refusal to relinquish possession of the raisins. Thereupon the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the contract under which plaintiff claimed was in fact a contract of agency and not a contract of sale, but upon the suggestion of the trial court it was agreed that this motion should be held in abeyance until defendant's case was closed. Defendant's case consisted of proof of his rescission of the contract upon the ground that his signature thereto had been secured by menace and coercion, and that his refusal to deliver possession of the raisins under the contract was justified because the contract, having been executed through menace and coercion, was void and did not confer upon the plaintiff any right to the possession of the property. As the complaint did not plead the contract or set forth any right of the plaintiff under it, the defense of menace and coercion was not specially pleaded, and, accordingly, no finding was made thereon. However, the whole case was tried upon the theory that the two issues were before the court: First, whether the contract was one of sale or one of agency only; and second, whether the contract was void because it had been signed under menace and duress. On this appeal the main point urged by the defendant is that the evidence conclusively shows without contradiction that defendant's signature to the contract was obtained through menace and coercion, and, as we are satisfied that the judgment must be reversed for that reason, it is not necessary to consider the other grounds urged by the defendant.

The Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' Association was a mutual association organized under the laws of this state by the raisin growers of the section, having its headquarters in the county of Fresno, for the purpose of controlling the output and marketing of raisins and raisin grapes produced in that locality. In aid of this purpose, and for the further purpose of avoiding competition in the marketing of raisins, the association publicly announced some time in the spring of 1923 that it would not operate for that season unless at least 90 per cent. of the growers of the locality joined with the association through the execution of growers' contracts similar to the one in suit. To secure these contracts a concerted "drive" was instituted by the officers of the association through the aid of committees and captains of groups of solicitors. The drive was begun about the 1st of April, 1923, and the association announced that it would end on April 20th of that year. The required number of signatures not having been secured at that time, the period of the drive was therefore extended to May 5th. In fairness to the officers of this association it should be said that, so far as this record discloses, no one of them was directly engaged in any of the unlawful acts hereinafter related, but, on the other hand, it must also be said that these unlawful acts were specifically brought to their knowledge; that they used the threat of a repetition of such acts in their campaign to "persuade" other growers to sign with the association, and that they and the association profited by these acts. All the evidence on the issue of menace and coercion stands in the record uncontradicted; some of it comes from the testimony of witnesses called by the plaintiff; but in no case did the plaintiff attempt to controvert any of this showing except through the testimony of one officer of the association, who stated that he personally had not used any threats for the purpose of securing defendant's signature. The defendant, Peter Papazian, testified that he had lived in Fresno county 15 years and in the United States about 29 years. He occupied the premises involved in the contract in suit with his wife and children during the year 1923, and upon this property raised a large quantity of raisin grapes. The so-called drive for signatures to contracts with the Growers' Association, which had commenced on April 1, 1923, reached its height about the 19th or 20th of that month. The defendant's home was burdened by a mortgage held by one of the banks of the county, and he was at that time endeavoring to get some assurance from the bank to aid him to harvest the season's crop. He soon found that it was impossible for him to get any assistance in this quarter unless he became a member of the association by signing one of the prepared contracts, which the association used for that purpose. About the 20th of April he was called to the bank by one of the officers thereof acting in the interest of the association and urged to sign the contract. Having refused to do so after an hour's persuasion he was turned over to another to whom he also announced his intention to decline to sign the contract. Other persons whose connection with the association was more or less remote frequently urged him to sign, and called his attention to the fact that those who refused to sign were being subjected to severe penalties through the destruction of their homes and vineyards and through personal injuries inflicted by what were then termed "night riders." Some of these persons came to him at his ranch, others telephoned to him, and others sent messages through friends urging him to sign and predicting severe trouble if he refused. Finally he was told that if he refused to sign "we are going to get you," or "we will fix you." In the latter part of April he was told that numerous threats were being made against him, and that he should leave the county; that "unless you go, the people are after you, and they are going to fix you." He thereupon went to Modesto, where he remained about five days, during which time he received many telegrams and telephone calls from people in Fresno county demanding that he sign the contract. Finally he was approached by two Fresno men, who insisted that he return to Fresno and sign up. He again refused, and these same people telephoned to him again early in the evening asking him to reconsider and give them his final conclusion. He stated to them that he would not sign the contract, and late that night he received a message from one of his neighbors that his home was being wrecked. He thereupon got into communication with his wife, met her in Stockton and learned from her something regarding the methods of the campaign for signatures which was being conducted in his home county; how his neighbors had been threatened and abused and their homes attacked and their vineyards destroyed. He thereupon telegraphed to Mr. Merritt, the manager of the Raisin Growers' Association, asking him to stop the campaign of violence and damage to property conducted by the so-called "night riders," and from this officer he received the reply that no one was authorized by the association to act through coercive or violent measures. He thereupon telegraphed to the sheriff and the district attorney of the county. No reply seems to have been had from the district attorney, but to the wife of the defendant the sheriff of the county said: "Lady, we can't do anything; they only want you to sign, that's all." About two days after the communication with the manager of the association the defendant returned to his home and discovered that the work of destruction executed by those who had raided his home on the night of May 3d for the purpose of forcing him to sign the association contract, consisted of the following: The doors and windows of his home were all broken, the furniture was smashed and the bedclothes torn and scattered about the floors of the rooms, the chairs were broken, and a new piano was cut up and destroyed, and all the canned fruit and jars of fruit or preserves were broken and destroyed. In addition to this the raiders had overturned a blacksmith shop in the rear of the house and cut down or destroyed trees on the premises. After having witnessed this destruction he again called upon his banker and was informed that his only safety was in signing the contract. He then called upon his attorney, who had been his confidential adviser for a number of years past, asking him to aid him in the protection of his property, and asking his advice as to what proceedings to take. He soon, however, learned that this attorney was actually in the employ of the Raisin Growers' Association, and the only advice he was able to get from him was that he should sign the contract. Having unsuccessfully appealed for protection to the legally constituted law officers of the county, to the manager of the association, to his confidential banker, and to his confidential attorney, and having been informed that his only assurance from further abuses and violence lay in his executing the contract, he went to his banker and signed the contract which had already been prepared for him. As indicating his reluctance to sign at the time he stated to the banker that he felt that in doing so his property was lost, and that he would give the place to him. This occurred on May 9, 1923. On the 25th of August following the defendant gave the association notice of his rescission of the contract upon the ground that it was obtained from him by coercion and threats, and at the same time demanded the return of the contract and notified the association that he would refuse to deliver raisins to the company. In this connection he testified that from the time of his signing the contract he had constantly been in fear of additional oppression on the part of the association, and that on account of this constant fear which he entertained he did not seek to cancel his contract earlier.

Much of this evidence is corroborated by the testimony of Mary Papazian, the defendant's wife, who pictured the reign of terror which was practiced upon the defendant's neighbors, and her unsuccessful efforts to obtain protection from the local authorities. The witness Sally Ship, who lived just across the road from the defendant's home, saw the damage that was done. She had been subjected to the same abuse by so-called "raiders," acting in the interest of those who insisted upon the growers signing contracts with the association, but had refused their demands and had been successful in protecting her home from their threatened lawlessness. Other neighbors of the defendant either witnessed the night of destruction or saw the damage to defendant's home immediately after, and others detailed other acts of violence and lawlessness which were committed in the nighttime in the campaign to secure signatures to association contracts. These facts were constantly brought to the knowledge of the defendant by his neighbors and by those actually and actively employed by the association in securing contracts, and he was advised by those in whom he put his trust that, in order to prevent any further destruction to his property, he should sign the contract with the association.

[1, 2] It is only necessary to read the foregoing evidence to be satisfied that the contract was signed under such conditions of duress and menace as to destroy the element of free and mutual consent, which is essential to all contracts of this nature. The menace upon which the appellant relies brings the case squarely within the definition of that term found in section 1570 of the Civil Code, "of unlawful and violent injury to the person or property of any such person," while the responsibility of the respondent is covered by that portion of section 1689, Civil Code, which authorizes the rescission of a contract when the consent was obtained by duress, menace, etc., "exercised by or with the connivance of the party as to whom he rescinds, or of any other party to the contract jointly interested with such party." As the evidence of menace under which the contract was signed is wholly uncontroverted, and as the respondent's assignor, being a mutual association of the raisin growers of the locality, had full knowledge of the unlawful acts which were practiced by some of its members, or at least by those "jointly interested," the responsibility of the association for these acts is definitely fixed under the Code section.

[3-5] The only answer which the respondent makes to the appellant upon this point is that this court should assume that the trial court may have drawn the inference that, though all these acts of violence and lawlessness were true, the appellant nevertheless was not really in fear when he executed the contract. In this connection, the respondent states that the trial court found that the defendant was not controlled in signing the contract by coercive acts. We have searched the findings included in the certified transcript, and fail to find that any such finding was made by the trial court. If such a finding was made, it is patent that it was wholly unsupported by the evidence. If the finding was not made, there is no rule of law which requires this court to assume that the trial court would have made a finding contrary to all the competent evidence before it. The plaintiff pleaded a cause of action in replevin. The defendant entered a denial and pleaded affirmatively his right to possession. On the trial, the plaintiff presented a contract purporting to place the right of possession in the plaintiff. That evidence was met by a showing constituting coercion. The court should have been asked to and should have made a finding on the issues brought forward by the parties during the course of the trial which were material to the main issue raised by the written pleadings. Wolf v. Gall, 176 Cal. 787, 789, 790, 169 P. 1017. The trial court having failed to make a finding on that material issue, such failure constitutes reversible error. The general rule is as stated in 10 California Jurisprudence 1143, § 362, "that the uncontradicted testimony of a witness to a particular fact may not be disregarded, but should be accepted as proof of the fact." Stewart v. Silva, 192 Cal. 405, 221 P. 191; Anso v. Anso (Cal. App.) 237 P. 814.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 2, 1925. Rehearing Denied Oct. 1, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 29, 1925.)

1. Taxation ☞789(3)—Tax deed to purchaser's assignee held admissible without other proof of assignment.

Tax deed to assignee of purchaser held admissible in action to quiet title without preliminary proof of assignment, in view of Pol. Code, §§ 3785b, 3786, 3787; the deed itself being conclusive evidence of collector's proceeding in determining that there had been an assignment.

2. Taxation ☞656—Statute held to contemplate that tax sale may continue from day to day, if additional time required to that fixed in statute relative to notice.

Pol. Code, § 3767, providing that tax sales shall be held not less than 21 nor more than 28 days after date of publication of notice, and section 3764, providing that sale may continue from day to day, if additional time is required, held to contemplate commencement of sale within time mentioned, and continuance from day to day until property is sold, and hence a tax deed executed after expiration of time specified is not void.

3. Taxation ☞817—Defendant's attack on validity of plaintiff's tax deed without merit, where defendant did not specifically call to attention of court what was lacking.

Objection that tax sale to plaintiff's assignor would be valid only in event sale to state would be valid, and that there was no evidence by plaintiff of deed to state or evidence that state was entitled to deed, held without merit, where plaintiff introduced in evidence certificate of redemption, tax deed, and tax receipt, and defendant failed to point out specifically any defect of proof.

4. Taxation ☞789(3)—Tax deed, in view of statute, constitutes prima facie evidence that copy of delinquent notice, as published, was mailed to taxpayer.

A tax deed, in form prescribed by Pol. Code, § 3785b, is prima facie evidence, under sections 3786, 3787, of due publication of delinquent notice provided for by sections 3764, 3767, and of mailing of copy of notice to taxpayer, as required by section 3771a.

5. Taxation ☞789(3)—Objection to tax deed as evidence because name of taxpayer was misspelled on assessment roll without merit.

In an action to quiet title, where defendant's objection to plaintiff's tax deed, because taxpayer's name was misspelled on assessment roll, held without merit, in view of fact that from examination of photographic copy of assessment roll it was impossible to say with certainty that name was misspelled.

6. Taxation ☞428—Abbreviation "$" at head of columns in assessment roll held authorized.

Under Pol. Code, § 3884, the abbreviation "$" at the head of columns in assessment roll held authorized.

7. Trial ☞163—Motion for nonsuit for plaintiff's failure to maintain issues or to show right in property involved improper in failing to point out specific elements of evidence plaintiff omitted to introduce.

In action to quiet title, a motion for nonsuit by defendant on ground that plaintiff had failed to maintain issues, and had failed to show any right, title, or interest in property involved, was improper, in that, when made, the attention of the court was not called to specific elements of evidence which plaintiff had omitted to introduce.

8. New trial ☞157—Party moving for new trial must take steps to present matter and secure determination thereof.

It is the duty of party moving for new trial to take steps to secure its presentation to, and determination by, court, as otherwise he will not be heard to complain that motion was not actually heard or determined.

On Petition for Rehearing.

9. Taxation ☞627—Complaint that delinquent tax list did not designate the "amount of taxes, penalties, and costs" within statute held without merit.

In an action to quiet title, defendant's complaint that delinquent tax list designated "the amount due for taxes and costs," but did not designate "the amount of taxes, penalties and costs" within Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556, held without merit, where delinquent assessment roll in transcript correctly showed amount for which property was sold, including penalties and costs, notwithstanding published delinquent list made no mention of penalties.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Chester A. Bell against J. W. Brigance. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed. See, also, 229 P. 27.

William Lewis and Guy Lewis, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Action to quiet title. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The respondent has interposed a motion to affirm the judgment. That motion is based on the ground that the appellant has not complied with the statutory provisions in making a record. In the view we take of the case it will not be necessary to pass on the motion.

It will be remembered that prior to 1895 it had been the law of this state that property on which state and county taxes were delinquent might be sold by the tax collector at public auction to the highest bidder, and, in default of any acceptable bids, that then, and in that event, the property might be sold to the state of California. F. P. Deering's Pol. Code (1886) §§ 3746-3819. In 1895 many changes were made in the law, and the general effect of those changes was to provide that all sales would be made to the state. Stats. 1895, c. 218. In 1913 the Legislature again took up the consideration of the subject, and made such additions and amendments as to it seemed necessary, to the end that thereafter, under certain circumstances, such properties might be sold by the tax collector at public auction to the highest bidder, and leaving the statute to stand which under other circumstances would authorize a sale to the state. The respondent claims to have purchased the property in question pursuant to the amendments of 1913.

[1] When the plaintiff brought forward the deed made by the tax collector, and offered the same in evidence the appellant objected on the ground that the deed was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and no proper foundation laid." The objection was overruled, and the appellant presents the point at this time. The deed recites that it is made "between W. O. Welch, tax collector of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, first party, and Chester A. Bell, second party"; that the property was sold to Fred Stein, and it also recites that the tax collector "does hereby grant to the said second party, the assignee of said purchaser," etc. The appellant complains that the respondent had not previously introduced any evidence to the effect that Bell had become the assignee of Stein. The respondent contends that he was not bound to do so, and he cites sections 3785b, 3786, and 3787 of the Political Code as sustaining his position. Section 3785b authorizes the tax collector to execute such a deed "to such purchaser, or his assigns." By direct reference sections 3786 and 3787 are made applicable to such a deed. Section 3786 provides that "such deed, duly acknowledged or proved, is primary evidence * * *" of eight different elements, enumerating them. Section 3787 provides:

"Such deed, duly acknowledged or proved, is (except as against actual fraud) conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings, from the assessment by the assessor, inclusive, up to the execution of the deed."

As the statute authorizes the tax collector to write the deed and to execute it to the purchaser or his assigns, it necessarily became one of his proceedings to ascertain and determine, if requested, whether Stein had conveyed to Bell, and, if so, to execute the deed to Bell. It therefore seems clear that the deed, by reason of the provisions of section 3787, became conclusive evidence of the regularity of the tax collector's proceeding in ascertaining whether there had been an assignment.

[2] The appellant next contends that the tax collector executed the deed one day after his authority had expired. In this connection the appellant calls attention to the fact that the notice of sale was published first on June 8, 1921. He then calls attention to the provisions of section 3767 of the Political Code, and asserts that the property should have been sold on a date not less than 21 nor more than 28 days from June 8, 1921, whereas it was sold on the 7th day of July, 1921; that is, the twenty-ninth day after the date of the first publication. If our statute had no other provisions on the subject except what is contained in section 3767, appellant's position might be sustained, but the statute contains other provisions. In making the changes that were made in 1913 the Legislature provided the contents of the notice of sale. Pol. Code, § 3764. The statutory form so provided recites:

"In pursuance of law, public notice is hereby given that, commencing on the — day of —, 19—, at the hour of — o'clock — M., of that day, and continuing from day to day thereafter, if additional time is required to complete the sale, in the office of the tax collector. * * *"

Reading all of the provisions of the statute together, it does not seem to be doubtful that the sale should commence within the time mentioned, not less than 21 days and not more than 28 days after the date of the first publication of the notice, but that it is within the contemplation of the statute that the sale may be continued from day to day if additional time is required.

[3] The appellant claims that there was no evidence of a deed to the state or any evidence that the state was entitled to a deed, and he makes the claim that under the provisions of our statute the sale to Stein would be valid only in the event that a sale to the state would be valid if Stein or some other individual had not purchased at public auction. The appellant has not specifically called to our attention what was lacking. The respondent introduced in evidence: (1) Certificate of redemption showing a redemption by respondent of the property involved, paying all back taxes and penalties down to July 20, 1921; (2) deed from tax collector to respondent dated July 21, 1921; and (3) tax receipt issued to respondent covering taxes for first installment for the year 1922.

[4] In disposing of the last point we stated that the appellant did not point out any omission specifically. We made the statement by reason of the next point which the appellant presents, and that is that the respondent at the trial introduced no evidence showing or tending to show that there was mailed, addressed to Carrie Gollinger, the taxpayer, the notice provided for in section 3771a of the Political Code, unless the respondent's deed be considered evidence on the subject. The form of the deed is prescribed by section 3785b of the Political Code, and there is no contention but what respondent's deed conformed in every respect thereto. That section expressly provides that the provisions of sections 3786 and 3787 of the same Code are applicable to the deeds provided for in section 3785b. The fifth subdivision of section 3786 provides that such deed duly acknowledged is primary evidence that at a proper time and place the property was sold as prescribed by law and by the proper officer. It has been held that the proper time for a sale is the time stated in the notice of the delinquent sale. Tully v. Bauer, 52 Cal. 487, 489. But the notice of the delinquent sale, its form, and the time and manner of its publication, are provided in sections 3764-3767 of the Political Code, and by section 3771a of the same Code the tax collector is required to mail to the taxpayer, at his last known address, at least 21 days before the date of sale, a copy of the delinquent list or a notice in form as provided for in said section. When, as to notice, it was held that a tax deed was prima facie evidence of the due publication of a delinquent notice, it seems clear that it would equally be prima facie evidence that a copy of the notice as published was mailed. As the appellant introduced no evidence to the effect that the notice was not mailed, the trial court acted quite properly in holding that there was some evidence that the provisions of the statute concerning the mailing of the notice had been complied with.

[5] In the fourth division of his brief the appellant complains that the name of the taxpayer as it appeared on the assessment roll was "Gollinger," and as it appears in the plaintiff's deed it is spelled "Gallinger"; that certain columns in the assessment roll are headed with the "$" mark; and that such an abbreviation is not one authorized by law.

What purports to be a photographic copy of the assessment roll is contained in the transcript. The writing is very small, sometimes scratched and sometimes blurred by the photographic process, but, as we read the writing, we are unable to say that the taxpayer's name was spelled on the assessment roll with an "o" instead of an "a." The findings are in favor of the respondent. On the record before us we cannot say there is no evidence to support the implied finding that the name was correctly spelled.

[6] As to the abbreviation for the word "dollars," we think the appellant has misconstrued section 3884 of the Political Code. That section should be construed as though the words which we have inserted in brackets were expressly contained in the section. The section has the same meaning as though it were written as follows:

"In the assessment of land, advertisement and sale thereof for taxes, initial letters, abbreviations [may be used], and the figures may be used to designate the township, range, section or part thereof, and such other abbreviations [may be used] as may be approved by the state board of equalization; provided, a written or printed explanation of such abbreviations [as have been approved by that board] shall appear on each page of the assessment roll or book."

[7] The appellant complains because the trial court denied his motion for a nonsuit. The proceeding was as follows:

"Mr. Wilson: The plaintiff rests.

"Mr. Lewis: Now, the defendant moves for a nonsuit upon the ground of the entire failure of the plaintiff to maintain the issues upon his part and in his failure to show that he has any right, or interest whatever in the property involved in this action by the evidence already in.

"The Court: The motion will be denied."

At the time the above proceedings were had the plaintiff had introduced the evidence hereinabove enumerated. When he made the motion for a nonsuit he did not call to the attention of the court, and has not called to our attention, any specific elements of evidence which the plaintiff had omitted to introduce otherwise than those matters that have been considered by us in other portions of this decision.

[8] The case was tried before Judge Vicini, judge of the superior court of Amador county, acting as a judge of the superior court of Los Angeles county. After judgment had been ordered for the plaintiff, the defendant served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial. He also served and filed the affidavit of Mr. Lewis in support of his intended motion. Later the defendant served notice that he would make his motion on the 20th day of November 1923. On the date last mentioned both counsel entered into a stipulation that the motion for a new trial might be submitted without argument upon the affidavit above mentioned. The record does not disclose the fact, but appellant's brief states that the motion was not passed upon, and that it was denied by operation of law. Predicating his contention on that condition of the record, the appellant claims that it was prejudicial error that his motion was not actually heard and actually determined by the trial judge. It is clear that it was the appellant's motion, and, if he had desired an actual ruling on the motion, he should have made it at such a time, and should have taken such steps as would have caused the matter to be properly presented to a judge of the superior court of the state of California, in and for Los Angeles county, and thereafter to have requested a ruling on the motion within the period provided by law. It was not the duty of the respondent to take any step looking toward the presentation or the determination of the appellant's motion.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [9] The petition for a rehearing is denied. In his petition the appellant contends that the delinquent list designated a sum which was the "amount due for taxes and costs," but did not designate "the amount of taxes, penalties and costs." Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by chapter 299, Stats. 1913. The point was not made in the trial court, nor was it made in the opening brief or reply brief, and is made for the first time in the petition for a rehearing. Nevertheless, we think the point is without merit. A copy of the delinquent assessment roll pertinent to the property involved is in the transcript. On its face it shows that the amount for which the property was sold included penalties and costs, and the amount of each item is separately stated. The delinquent list, as published, contained a recital explaining the meaning of figures. That explanation recites that the figures "were intended to and do represent respectively in dollars or in cents, or in dollars and cents, the amount due for taxes and costs," but that recital was not intended to state, and did not state, that the figures did not include penalties. The ambiguity, if any, was not sufficient to override the clear statement and enumeration on the face of the delinquent list. If the point had been made in the trial court, the opposing party would certainly have had the right to show that the amount stated in the published notice complied in all respects with the call of the statute, notwithstanding any ambiguity contained in the notice.

CARROLL v. CENTRAL COUNTIES GAS CO. (Civ. 2983.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 1, 1925.)

1. Gas ⚡17 — "Ordinary care" required in maintenance of pipe lines.

A gas company is under a duty to use "ordinary care" in construction and maintenance of its pipe lines to prevent escape of gas, which means such care as a reasonably careful person, in view of dangers and likelihood of injury, would exercise to prevent injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ordinary Care.]

2. Negligence ⚡59 — Defendant liable, though particular injury not foreseeable.

If defendant ought to have anticipated, in exercise of ordinary care, that negligent act was likely to result in injury, it is liable for injuries proximately resulting therefrom, though it could not have foreseen particular injury which did happen.

3. Gas ⚡20(4)—Negligence in maintenance of unprotected gas pipes question for jury.

It cannot be said as a matter of law that maintenance of 3-inch gas pipe line for 54 feet parallel to a bridge without support was not negligence, or that defendant could not have foreseen danger to persons using highway, or that defendant did not owe duty to carry pipes in more secure position.

4. Gas ⚡20(4)—Negligence question for jury.

Whether position in which defendant maintained gas pipes was negligence cannot be raised by demurrer, but is a question of fact to be determined by the evidence, since whether negligence can be inferred is for court, but whether negligence ought to be inferred is for jury, which rule applies, where facts are in dispute, as well as where evidence is conflicting if conflicting inferences can be reasonably drawn therefrom.

5. Gas ⚡20(4)—Proximate cause of injury to traveler held for jury.

Where car in which plaintiff was riding was deflected from its course and struck defendant's gas pipe line, causing gas to ignite and burn plaintiff, it cannot be said, as matter of law, that defendant's negligence in maintaining its pipes in open was not proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, since the original negligent act may be so continuous that the concurrent, wrongful act will be regarded not as independent, but as conjoining with original act.

6. Gas ⚡18—Negligent party cannot rely on presumption others will obey laws.

Where car in which plaintiff was riding was deflected from course and struck defendant's pipe line, causing gas to ignite and burn plaintiff, claim that defendant could not have foreseen act of offending automobile in violating law cannot be set up, since one who is himself negligent cannot rely on presumption that others will exercise due care and obey laws.

7. Gas — 20(4)—No necessary inference danger to be anticipated could come only from violation of law by another.

Where defendant maintained its gas pipes in open parallel to a bridge, it cannot be said as a necessary inference that the danger to be anticipated could come only from a violation of law or duty on part of another, since such danger might come from purely accidental causes.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Geneva Carroll, by her guardian ad litem, T. L. Carroll, against Central Counties Gas Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

G. L. Aynesworth and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant's demurrer to the complaint herein was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment. The third and fourth paragraphs of the complaint read as follows:

"That at all times herein mentioned defendant was and still is engaged in the production and distribution of artificial gas for illuminating, heating, and other purposes in the county of Tulare, state of California. That for the purpose of distributing said gas defendant at all times herein mentioned maintained and still maintains along and upon that certain public highway in the county of Tulare, known as the Visalia-Exeter highway, a certain pipe line in which defendant at all times maintained and still maintains such gas at a pressure of more than 100 pounds to the square inch. That at the point where the said highway crosses that certain creek or ravine known as Deep Creek a wooden bridge over said creek or ravine has been constructed, and at all times herein mentioned was and still is maintained as a part of the said public highway. That at all times herein mentioned the said bridge was and still is guarded on either side only by a light wooden railing. That at said point the said defendant laid and constructed, and at all times herein mentioned maintained and still maintains, its pipe line carelessly and negligently in the following particulars, to wit: That the said pipe line consisted and still consists of a 3-inch steel pipe inclosed within a 6-inch steel casing; that the said pipe and casing were and still are suspended over and across the bed of said Deep Creek upon two concrete piers constructed at either side of the bed of said creek and separated by a distance of 54 feet or thereabouts, without any intermediate support; that said pipe line was constructed, and was and still is maintained in a position parallel to said bridge and at a distance of approximately 5 feet to the north thereof, and 2 feet or thereabouts below the level of the floor of said bridge, and 6 feet and 4 inches or thereabouts above the bed of said creek; that defendant carelessly and negligently permitted the said casing to become broken at a point between the said piers and at all times to remain in that condition, so that it afforded no protection or support to the said pipe line.

"That on or about the 10th day of December, 1923, plaintiff was riding as a guest in a certain automobile upon and along said public highway, approaching said bridge in a westerly direction. That there is a pavement of 16 feet or thereabouts in width approximately in the center of the said highway with earthen shoulders on either side. That in approaching the said bridge the driver of the said automobile was forced to turn the right wheels of said automobile off the said pavement to avoid a collision with an approaching automobile from the opposite direction. That when he attempted to return thereto and enter upon said bridge said automobile was, without any fault of said driver, deflected from its course, so that it went through the railing and fell from the said bridge; that as a consequence of the careless and negligent construction and maintenance of said pipe line of said defendant as hereinbefore stated said automobile in so falling struck said pipe line and broke the same, permitting the gas to escape therefrom, and caused the escaping gas to become ignited, thereby seriously burning and injuring and permanently disfiguring plaintiff to her damage in the sum of $50,000."

The demurrer is both general and special. It will be sufficient to consider the grounds of demurrer urged in respondent's brief.

[1] The defendant was under obligation to exercise ordinary care in the construction and maintenance of its pipe line to prevent the escape of gas therefrom.

"This means such care as a reasonably careful and prudent person, having in view the dangers to be avoided and the likelihood of injury therefrom, would exercise, under the circumstances, in order to prevent injury. Where death may be caused by an agency lawfully in use, ordinary care requires that every means known, or that with reasonable inquiry would be known, must be used to prevent it." Fairbairn v. American River Electric Co., 170 Cal. 115, 118, 148 P. 788, 789; 179 Cal. 157, 160, 175 P. 637; 12 R. C. L. 905; 28 C. J. 591; McWilliams v. Kentucky Heating Co., 166 Ky. 26, 179 S. W. 24, L. R. A. 1916A, 1224.

[2] Respondent does not contend that its obligation was other than as stated, but urges that it was not required to "anticipate the chain of events which led up to the accident." If this contention be conceded, it is not sufficient to acquit the defendant of liability.

"If the negligent act or omission is one which the company ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have anticipated was likely to result in injury to others, then it is liable for any injury proximately resulting therefrom, although it might not have foreseen the particular injury which did happen." 12 R. C. L. 913.

[3, 4] Considering the dangerous character of the agency which was being conducted through the pipe line, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that it was not negligence to maintain the 3-inch pipe in the position alleged, with no support, except the strength of the pipe itself, for a distance of 54 feet, or that the defendant could not reasonably have foreseen the likelihood of danger therefrom to persons lawfully using the highway. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the defendant did not owe it as a duty to the traveling public to carry its pipe line under the bed of the stream, or in some other secure position, rather than through the open air near the floor of the bridge. It is clear that the danger of injury to others would have been lessened by placing the pipe underground. Plaintiff alleges that it was negligence to maintain the pipe in the position stated in the complaint, and whether or not this allegation is true cannot be raised by demurrer, but is a question of fact which, if controverted, must be determined from the evidence to be produced at the trial. Stewart v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., 44 Cal. App. 202, 186 P. 160; McWilliams v. Kentucky Heating Co., supra.

"Whether negligence can be inferred from the evidence is for the determination of the court, but whether it ought to be inferred is a question for the jury." Pacheco v. Judson Mfg. Co., 113 Cal. 541, 545, 45 P. 833, 834.

This rule applies where the facts are undisputed, as well as where the evidence is conflicting, if conflicting inferences can reasonably be drawn therefrom. Jansson v. National Steamship Co., 189 Cal. 187, 192, 208 P. 90.

[5] Respondent contends that, if it be conceded that it was guilty of negligence in the maintenance of its pipe line, such negligence was not the proximate cause of the alleged injury, but that "the act of the automobilist who forced the car in which plaintiff was riding off the road was the proximate cause of the injury." The defendant's negligence, however, was continuous in its nature, existent at all times up to the moment of the injury. Under a state of facts not distinguishable in legal effect from those here involved, it is said:

"The independent wrongful act, to constitute the proximate cause by displacing the original primary cause, must be so disconnected in time and nature as to make it plain that the damage occasioned was in no way a natural or probable consequence of the original wrongful act or omission. * * * The original act of negligence, the primary causation, may be in its nature so continuous that the concurrent wrongful act precipitating the disaster will in law be regarded not as independent, but as conjoining with the original act to create the disastrous result." Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co., 158 Cal. 499, 504, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 69, 70, 151 P. 1136, L. R. A. 1916A, 281; Marton v. Jones, 44 Cal. App. 299, 301, 186 P. 410; Keiper v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 36 Cal. App. 362, 368, 172 P. 180; Parkin v. Grayson-Owen Co., 25 Cal. App. 269, 281, 143 P. 257; O'Connell v. United Railroads, 19 Cal. App. 36, 64, 124 P. 1022; Lininger v. San Francisco, etc., R. R. Co., 18 Cal. App. 411, 420, 123 P. 235; McWilliams v. Kentucky Heating Co., supra.

[6] Respondent argues that—

"The driver of the automobile which forced the machine in which plaintiff was riding off the pavement was guilty of a violation of the Motor Vehicle Act [St. 1913, p. 639]. * * * Since the act of this offending automobilist was a violation of the law and a trespass upon the rights of the plaintiff and those of her driver, the defendant could not foresee or reasonably anticipate them. * * * The legal presumption is that all men will obey the law and will refrain from trespass and injury to the property and person of their fellows."

It does not appear from the complaint whether such driver was guilty of either negligence or a violation of the law. If such facts did so appear, respondent's statement of the rule applicable thereto omits the important qualification that the person relying upon the rule must not himself be negligent. In 19 California Jurisprudence, 596, the rule is stated as follows:

"One who is himself not negligent is entitled to rely upon the presumption that others will exercise due care, so that it is not negligence to fail to anticipate danger which can come only from a violation of law or duty upon the part of another. * * * But reliance upon this presumption does not excuse one who is himself negligent."

[7] It cannot be said, as a necessary inference from the facts alleged, that the danger to be anticipated could "come only from a violation of law or duty upon the part of another," but such danger might come from a variety of purely accidental causes.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

Instruction that "the fact * * * that an alibi as a defense is capable of being and has been occasionally successfully fabricated; that, even when wholly false, its detection may be matter of very great difficulty; and that the temptation to resort to this as a spurious defense may be very great, especially in cases of importance," held not harmless because sentence was not concluded.

3. Criminal law § 1186(4)—Instruction as to possibility of fabricating alibi held not reversible error.

Instruction that alibi may be and occasionally has been successfully fabricated, and that detection of its falsity may be very difficult, and temptation to resort to it as spurious defense very great, held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice within Const. art. 6, § 4½, so as to require reversal, in view of defendant's testimony as to facts inconsistent with innocence, though he denied commission of crime, and fact that witnesses who corroborated him were his children and a close friend.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Justin Hammer was convicted of rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

Perkins & Davis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Hamish B. Edie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, J. Defendant was charged with having committed rape upon the person of a girl under the age of 18 years; the alleged victim having been of the age of 16 at the time of the alleged offense. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty, and defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The testimony of appellant, and of three other witnesses who corroborated him, established a perfect alibi, if the jury had elected to believe the evidence put forward by the defense upon that issue. The trial judge instructed the jury:

"The defendant could not have been in these two places at the same time; and in this contradiction of witnesses the jury have to determine for themselves where lies the truth. In so judging they will take into consideration the appearance and apparent candor and fairness of the respective witnesses; the probability of their statements; its coincidence with other facts or features of the case which they may deem established; and generally those rules of ordinary experience and general observation by which intelligent men decide as to controverted propositions of fact.

"The effect of an alibi, when established, is like that of any other conclusive fact presented in a case. Showing, as it does, that the party asserting it could not have been present at the time of the commission of the crime alleged in the indictment, and therefore did not participate in it, is, when credited, a defense of the most conclusive and satisfactory character. That is a question to be decided by the jury the same as any other question.

"The fact, however, which experience has shown, that an alibi as a defense is capable of being and has been occasionally successfully fabricated; that even when wholly false its detection may be matter of very great difficulty; and that the temptation to resort to this as a spurious defense may be very great, especially in cases of importance."

It is contended that the giving of this instruction was error, and the third and last paragraph is pointed at particularly in presenting the contention. Instructions of a character like unto this, in several instances practically identical with it, have been before the courts of review of the state many times. In the earlier cases the charge as a whole was held not to be erroneous. Later decisions characterized the matter contained in the third paragraph of the present instruction as incorrect when considered alone, but upheld the entire instruction on the ground that statements like those contained in the preceding paragraphs rendered harmless the contents of the third paragraph. The question was finally settled by People v. Smith, 189 Cal. 31, 207 P. 518, in which case the instruction was condemned as a whole because of the presence of the matter in the third paragraph. In passing upon the point the Supreme Court said that—

"In People v. Roberts, 122 Cal. 377 (65 [55] P. 137), a similar instruction was held to be reversible error, upon the grounds that they constitute [sic] a charge upon the weight of evidence, and that they cast [sic] the burden of proof upon the defendant."

This conclusion was announced by the court despite the fact that the error was harmless, for the reason that there was no evidence in the cause tending to prove an alibi, a circumstance indicating an evident desire upon the part of the court strikingly to warn against the giving of the instruction again. In fact, a similar note had been sounded in one of the cases in which it was determined that the concluding portion of the instruction, as it was given in the present case, was rendered innocuous by matter similar to that which here preceded it. The court then said that—

"If trial courts will cease to give this particular form of instruction, the ends of justice will be equally as well subserved, and the administration of the laws less embarrassed." People v. Lattimore, 86 Cal. 403, 24 P. 1091.

The District Court of Appeal of the Third District has twice followed People v. Smith, supra. In the first of the two cases it was said:

"If the jurors are to 'be satisfied that a fabricated defense is not being imposed upon' them, the burden is cast upon the defendant to satisfy them that such defense is not fabricated; that is, that it is true. The instruction not only casts an unwarranted burden upon the defendant, but casts suspicion upon his defense and the evidence produced in support thereof. It is essentially an argument against the defendant, legitimate if made by the district attorney, but an invasion of the province of the jury when made by the court. The giving of the instruction has been condoned in a number of cases where the rights of the defendants did not appear to have been prejudiced thereby. Where a defendant presents substantial proof of an alibi, the jury should be left free to pass upon the weight thereof, under the rules of evidence applicable to other questions of fact; and, if unsubstantial proof is produced, the jury may be trusted to reject it. The instruction should never be given." People v. Girotti, 227 P. 936.

The second case decided by the court of the Third District and above alluded to is People v. Nichols, 230 P. 997. The trial court here erred in reading the questioned instruction to the jury.

[2] It is to be noted that the third paragraph of the instruction is incomplete in form. The sentence which is begun in it is not concluded. We think, however, that the fact does not render the instruction harmless. Enough was given to make the instruction erroneous, as the jury must have gathered sufficient from it to create the impression conveyed by the completed instruction which was condemned in the cases above cited.

Appellant makes other points, but the only one which is argued is that in several instances the trial judge unduly limited the cross-examination of the complaining witness. It is so apparent to us that there is no merit in the contention that we dismiss the point without further remark.

[3] As required by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, we have examined the entire cause, including the evidence, in order to ascertain whether the error of the trial court in giving the instruction upon the law of alibi has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. After the examination, we have concluded that justice has not miscarried, and that, therefore, the error of the court does not require a reversal. Appellant took the stand as a witness in his own behalf. He denied the commission of the crime with which he was charged, but he testified to other matters which convince us of his guilt. Some weeks after the date of the alleged crime, as testified by the father of the complaining witness, and as admitted by appellant, the former called upon appellant, charged him with the crime, and asked what he proposed to "do about" the occurrence. Appellant admits that he then expressed a willingness to marry the girl. Why this result did not follow it is not material to state. Two witnesses, one a probation officer, the other a policewoman, testified that after appellant's arrest and incarceration he again expressed a desire to wed his victim, and he admitted the truth of this testimony on the witness stand. The evidence shows without dispute that the complaining witness was pregnant at the time of the interview between her father and appellant. Appellant testified that he did not know of this state of affairs until the time of his preliminary examination, when it was disclosed by the testimony against him. He admitted, however, that his conversation with the probation officer occurred after the preliminary examination. We quote from the record premising the remark, in order that the excerpt may be thoroughly understood, that the probation officer had been asked on cross-examination whether appellant had not said that he wanted to marry the girl in order to get out of jail:

"Q. Did you tell the probation officer at that time, the lady that was just on the stand, that you were ready and willing to marry the girl? A. Yes, I told her I didn't want to marry the girl on account of my getting out of trouble, out of jail, or anything of that kind, but I would marry her anyway.

"Q. Notwithstanding that you had never had any sexual intercourse with her, and you knew at that time she was pregnant? A. I didn't know anything about that.

"Q. At the time the probation officer talked to you, you didn't know anything about that? A. I didn't know that before the preliminary examination.

"Q. Didn't the probation officer talk to you after the hearing? A. Maybe it was. I don't remember.

"Q. Didn't the probation officer talk to you after the hearing? A. Yes, it was after the hearing. That is right.

Q. You told her at that time you were willing to marry the girl provided you could obtain the consent of her parents? A. Yes."

To our minds the testimony of appellant is utterly inconsistent with the idea of his innocence. We cannot believe, paying due regard to the feelings and motives which impel human conduct, that appellant could have been so chivalric as to propose and urge a marriage under the conditions admitted by him to exist. He swears he did not violate the prosecuting witness. She had, then, charged him falsely with one of the most serious offenses in the catalogue of crime. Under his claim of innocence she was pregnant with the child of some other man. We cannot believe that under such circumstances he would have been eager to make her the wife of his bosom, especially as his offer did not come "on account of my getting out of trouble, out of jail, or anything of that kind." Our only recourse, then, is to believe that he did violate the complaining witness. This conclusion, of course, forces the view that the defense of alibi was fabricated. That result, under all the circumstances of the case, is perhaps not strange. The witnesses who corroborated appellant upon the issue were his son, his daughter, and a friend who was constantly at his home. While we may not condone, in any case, the production of fabricated evidence, we nevertheless cannot greatly wonder at such a response as was here made to a cry of distress from father and friend. Such instances of a beclouding of the wellsprings of justice are not altogether rare.

Judgment and order affirmed.

WILLIAM SIMPSON CONST. CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5090.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 26, 1925. Rehearing Denied Sept. 22, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 22, 1925.)

1. Evidence ⇨570—Power of Industrial Accident Commission to reject testimony of experts is same as that of court or jury in court.

Power of Industrial Accident Commission to reject testimony of experts is same as that of court or jury in court.

2. Evidence ⇨574—When expert evidence is conclusive on question in issue stated.

Whenever the subject under consideration is one within the knowledge of experts only, such as medical doctors, and is not within the common knowledge of laymen, the expert evidence is conclusive on question in issue, even though it is contradicted by nonexpert witnesses, and this rule applies to proceedings before Industrial Accident Commission.

3. Evidence ⇨571(9)—Uncontradicted testimony of medical experts held binding on Industrial Accident Commission.

Uncontradicted testimony of medical experts as to deceased's physical condition at time of autopsy, and whether any one of those conditions was sufficient to produce death, held binding on Industrial Accident Commission, and precluded it from rejecting it.

4. Evidence ⇨571(9) — Industrial Accident Commission held not bound by opinion of medical experts as to proximate cause of death.

Industrial Accident Commission held not bound by opinion of medical experts that the proximate cause of the death of deceased falling from a scaffold was a stroke of apoplexy.

5. Master and servant ⇨403—Compensation claimant has burden of proving injury arose out of employment.

Claimant under Workmen's Compensation Act has burden of proving that injury arose out of, as well as in the course of, that employment.

6. Master and servant ⇨403—Fact of injury in employment does not raise presumption it arises out of employment.

Fact that injury occurs in course of employment does not afford predicate for presumption that it arises out of or because of that employment.

7. Master and servant ⇨405(4) — Evidence held insufficient to show death was due to fall from scaffold.

Evidence held to require setting aside of award of Industrial Commission as insufficient to support finding death of workman falling from scaffold was due to fall, uninfluenced and uninduced by stroke of apoplexy.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act for compensation for death of Gus Tiefenbach, employee, by Carrie I. Tiefenbach and another, by her guardian ad litem and trustee, claimants, opposed by the William Simpson Construction Company, employer, and the General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corporation, insurance carrier. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation, and the employer and insurance carrier bring certiorari. Award annulled.

George W. Seith, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of Los Angeles, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

CURTIS, J. Petition to review an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission against petitioners in favor of Carrie I. and Dorothy I. Tiefenbach on account of the death of Gus Tiefenbach, caused by injuries sustained by him while in the employ of the petitioner, the William Simpson Construction Company. The evidence before the Commission showed substantially the following state of facts: The deceased, Tiefenbach, was in the employ of said construction company as a carpenter. On July 31, 1924, while in such employment and while working on a scaffold about 12 feet from the ground, he fell therefrom to the ground. He died about 1½ hours thereafter. The next day an autopsy was performed upon his body, and the doctors performing the autopsy found an extensive subdural hemorrhage covering the base and lateral surfaces of the brain, and a basal fracture running across the base of the middle fossa of the skull. There appears to be no doubt that this subdural hemorrhage was due to the basal fracture of the skull, and that this fracture was occasioned by the fall of deceased from the scaffold to the ground. This fracture, with the consequent subdural hemorrhage, the doctors testified, was sufficient to cause death. The doctors further found a pontine hemorrhage in the brain of the deceased, which they testified was caused by a stroke of apoplexy, and they gave as their opinion that the stroke preceded and was the cause of the fall, and was therefore the proximate cause of the death of decedent. There was nothing in the physical appearance or condition of either the pontine hemorrhage, or the fracture of the skull and the subdural hemorrhage caused thereby, to indicate which of the two occurred first in point of time. The only reason assigned by the medical experts, the two doctors who were present at the autopsy, one of whom performed the same, for their statement that the apoplectic stroke preceded the fall, was that the pontine hemorrhage was not traumatic; that is, it was not due to any wound or injury, but was dependent upon, or was the result of, a diseased condition of the deceased. The Commission disregarded the opinion of the medical experts, and found that the fracture of the skull caused by the fall and subdural hemorrhage therefrom were the proximate cause of Tiefenbach's death, and made an award in favor of his dependents.

[1] Petitioners contend that the Commission was without authority to reject the uncontradicted testimony of the medical experts that the apoplectic stroke preceded the fall and was therefore the proximate cause of decedent's death, and render an award based upon a finding that death was due to a cause other than that given therefor by the medical experts. The power of the Commission to reject such evidence is the same as that of a court or jury in an action before a court of justice. In Corpus Juris the power of the court or jury to reject the testimony of experts is stated as follows:

"The weight to be given to opinion evidence in any case, whether the statement is of the inference or conclusion of an observer or the judgment of an expert, is, within the bounds of reason, entirely a question for the determination of the jury or of the court, when trying a question of fact, taking into consideration the intelligence, learning, and experience of the witness, and the degree of attention which he gave to the matter. The judgments of experts or the inferences of skilled witnesses, even when unanimous and uncontroverted, are not necessarily conclusive on the jury, but may be disregarded by it or by the court trying an issue of fact, unless the subject is one for experts or skilled witnesses alone, and the jury cannot properly be assumed to have, or be able to form, correct opinions of their own, under which circumstances the unanimous evidence of properly qualified witnesses has been regarded by some courts as conclusive." 22 Corp. Jur. pp. 728 to 730.

Assuming that the law is correctly stated in this quotation from Corpus Juris, it will be noted that the court or jury may reject the testimony of experts, even though uncontradicted, except where "the subject is one for experts or skilled witnesses alone, and the jury cannot properly be assumed to have, or be able to form, correct opinions of their own under which circumstances the unanimous evidence of properly qualified witnesses has been regarded by some courts as conclusive."

In this state it has frequently been held that the proper or usual practice and treatment by a physician or surgeon in the examination and treatment of a wound or injury is a question for experts, and can only be established by their testimony. Perkins v. Trueblood, 180 Cal. 437, 443, 181 P. 642; Houghton v. Dickson, 29 Cal. App. 321, 324, 155 P. 128; Dameron v. Ansbro, 39 Cal. App. 289, 300, 178 P. 874; Pearson v. Crabtree (Cal. App.) 232 P. 715.

[2] The rule to be drawn from these decisions, as we understand them, appears to be that whenever the subject under consideration is one within the knowledge of experts only, and is not within the common knowledge of laymen, the expert evidence is conclusive upon the question in issue. It follows that in such cases neither the court nor the jury can disregard such evidence of experts, but, on the other hand, they are bound by such evidence, even if it is contradicted by nonexpert witnesses. The same rule would, of course, apply to a proceeding before the Industrial Accident Commission. Under this rule, the Commission, in the present proceeding, could not reject the evidence of the medical experts when testifying upon any subject peculiarly within their own knowledge. The same rule would apply as to opinions of the medical experts upon a subject solely within their professional knowledge, and not within the knowledge of the ordinary individual.

[3] In this proceeding the evidence of the medical experts as to the condition of the deceased's skull at the time of the autopsy, and the presence therein of the fracture, and the two hemorrhages, the extent and character of these hemorrhages, and their origin and cause, and their probable effect upon the deceased, and whether they, or either of them, was sufficient to produce death, dealt entirely with matters with which only medical men are familiar, and concerning which they alone could give any intelligent information to the Commission. This evidence, being uncontradicted, was binding upon the Commission, and, according to the above rule, the latter could not reject the same and act upon their own knowledge or conclusions.

[4] We seriously question, however, whether this rule can be extended to include the opinion of the medical men that the stroke of apoplexy preceded, and was the cause of the fall, under the facts in evidence before the Commission. As already stated, no one saw the deceased immediately preceding or at the time of the fall. There was nothing in the appearance or condition of either the pontine hemorrhage, or the hemorrhage caused by the injury, to indicate which one occurred first in point of time. The doctors testified that either one was sufficient to cause death. The only reason assigned by them for their opinion that the fall was preceded by the stroke of apoplexy was that the pontine hemorrhage was not traumatic; that is, it was not caused by any injury sustained by the deceased. The evidence shows that the deceased lived an hour and one-half after the fall, and there was absolutely nothing to show that the pontine hemorrhage could not have occurred immediately following the fall or during the hour during which the deceased lived after receiving the blow from the fall. One of the medical men, Dr. Brown, in a letter written to the petitioner, the General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corporation, and which was before the Commission, refers to the "history of the case" as showing that the deceased "was working on a scaffold on the outside of a building, when without any provocation he fell to the ground some distance below. The man in falling was said to have made no effort to catch or protect himself." No such evidence was produced before the Commission. On the other hand, there was no evidence that any one witnessed the fall of the deceased from the scaffold. The superintendent of the construction company testified that shortly before the fall, probably 15 or 20 minutes, his attention was attracted to the deceased as "acting rather strange at that time." Deceased was then working on the balcony of the church, up about 14 feet from the floor, and the superintendent had him changed to the scaffold on which he was working at the time of the fall. But there was no evidence to show that this conduct of deceased was in any way attributable to, or had any connection whatever with, the stroke of apoplexy subsequently sustained by him, and neither of the medical witnesses bases his inference as to the proximate cause of decedent's death upon this testimony of the superintendent. Under these circumstances, the opinion of the doctors that the stroke of apoplexy occurred prior to the fall was, in our opinion, mere conjecture on their part and not based upon any evidence warranting such a conclusion. A somewhat similar situation was before the court in Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 591, 200 P. 17, 19, and in disposing of the question the court said:

"The evidence of the physicians is no doubt conclusive of the fact that Ellsworth had a diseased heart. Their opinions that he did or did not die from this affliction are of little value, for they are agreed that there was nothing divulged by the autopsy to indicate that death was from heart failure, and they are agreed that the injuries received from his being run over by the truck were such as would cause instant death."

Our conclusion, therefore, is that the Commission was not bound by the opinion of the medical experts that the proximate cause of the death of the deceased was the stroke of apoplexy.

[5-7] It does not follow, however, from this conclusion that the award made by the Commission can or should be sustained by this court. While there was no evidence in the case which would justify the opinion of the doctors that the pontine hemorrhage preceded the fall, we are further of the opinion that there was no evidence before the Commission which would justify it in finding that the death of the deceased was due to the fall and not induced by the apoplectic stroke. With the opinions of the experts that the proximate cause of decedent's death was the stroke of apoplexy eliminated, the evidence before the Commission was that there were found within the skull of the deceased, the next day after his death, two hemorrhages, either one of which was capable of causing death—one was due to natural causes, and death therefrom would not entitle the dependents of the deceased to any award of compensation; the other was due to an injury received under circumstances which would entitle said dependents to an award of compensation, if death ensued therefrom. There was absolutely no evidence from any source to indicate that the death of the deceased was due to the latter injury. Such evidence, in our opinion, would not support an award in favor of said dependents. In the first place, the burden of proof is upon the applicant to prove that the injury received was one which would sustain an award. "It must be conceded that the burden is upon the applicant for compensation to show that the injury arose out of as well as in the course of the employment; and there is no presumption, as contended by respondents, that because an injury occurs in the course of the employment it arises out of or because of that employment." Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

In the second place, if this evidence before the Commission was insufficient to justify the expert witnesses in concluding that apoplexy was the proximate cause of his death, we think for like reasons that it is insufficient to justify a conclusion on the part of the Commission that death was due to the fall, uninfluenced and uninduced by the stroke of apoplexy. With the evidence in such a state, any opinion as to the proximate cause of the death of deceased was a mere surmise and conjecture and not based upon any foundation sufficient to support a finding of fact. As was said in Re Sander-son's Case, 224 Mass. 558, 563, 113 N. E. 355, 357:

"It is plain that if the hemorrhage was due to natural causes, and was not produced by the fall, it could not be found to be an injury arising out of the employment. It is plain that the inference drawn by the Industrial Accident Board from the evidence, that the hemorrhage followed the injury and resulted therefrom, is based merely upon surmise, speculation and conjecture, and does not rest upon a foundation of proof by a preponderance of the evidence. It may be the dependent is correct in her contention that the death of the employee was due to a fall from the wagon, but other theories and conjectures are quite as probable"—citing cases.

From these considerations, we think it must necessarily follow that the evidence was not sufficient to support the award, and therefore that it must be and it is hereby annulled.

BENSON v. OLENDER et al. (Civ. 5373.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 28, 1925.)

1. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 619—Want of diligence of appellant in taking necessary steps to secure filing of transcript empowers trial court to terminate proceedings.

It is the duty of appellant, as moving party, to take necessary steps to secure filing of transcript, and for want of diligence therein it is within the power of the trial court to terminate the proceedings.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 627(1)—Provisions of statute as to time for filing transcript are directory.

While the giving of notice to prepare transcript within time provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a is mandatory, the provisions thereof and of section 953c, as to the time for filing the transcript, are directory.

3. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 627(2)—Dismissal of appeal for delay in filing transcript is based on want of diligence in prosecuting appeal, and not on lack of jurisdiction.

Though the appellate court may dismiss an appeal for delay in filing transcript within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953c, such dismissal will be for want of diligence in prosecuting the appeal, and not for lack of jurisdiction of the appeal.

4. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 628(2)—Motion to dismiss appeal not granted where reporter was at fault.

Where notice to prepare transcript was given in form and within time provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, and it appeared that the delay in filing it, within sections 953a, 953c, was due to the fault of the reporter, and that the transcript duly certified was filed in the appellate court, motion to dismiss the appeal because of delay in filing transcript will be denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by B. M. Benson against Julius Olender and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On plaintiff's motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Lewis H. Smith, of Fresno, for appellants.

Glen M. De Vore, of Fresno, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal was taken according to the method prescribed by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure from a judgment in favor of respondent, who moved to dismiss on the ground that more than 40 days had elapsed since the filing of the notice of appeal, and that the transcript on appeal had not, as provided by statute, been filed in this court. Respondent's motion was duly served and filed on July 23, 1925. Thereafter, on July 25, 1925, the transcript prepared by the phonographic reporter was filed in the office of the county clerk of the county of Fresno, the clerk's transcript having been prepared and certified by him on June 18, 1925; and upon notice to respondent the reporter's transcript was, by the judge of the superior court before whom the action was tried, certified as provided by said section of the Code, and both transcripts were, by the county clerk of said county, filed in this court on August 3, 1925.

It appears from the record that judgment was entered in the action on April 2, 1925; that a notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed by appellant, which motion was thereafter, on June 2, 1925, presented and denied; that on June 9, 1925, notice to prepare the transcripts mentioned was filed with the clerk, and that on June 13, 1925, was filed a notice of appeal from the judgment. All the proceedings had to perfect the appeal and for the preparation of the transcripts were within the time and in accordance with the provisions of the statute with the exception that no undertaking, as provided by section 953b of the Code of Civil Procedure, was filed with the clerk.

It appears from the affidavit of the reporter that an order was given for the preparation of the transcript, and that arrangements satisfactory to him were made for his compensation, but that subsequently he understood that the transcript would not be required. This affidavit contradicts, in certain particulars, an affidavit previously made by him, wherein he states that no order was given and no arrangements made for the preparation of the transcript. His last affidavit, however, is supported by that of one of the attorneys for the appellant, from which it appears that arrangements satisfactory to the reporter had been made, and that the delay in preparing the transcript was due to his performance of duties in connection with the business of the court other than the preparation of the transcript in the instant case.

[1-4] It is the duty of the appellant, as the moving party, to take the necessary steps to secure the filing of the transcript, and for a want of diligence therein it is within the power of the trial court to terminate the proceedings, and while the giving of the notice to prepare the transcript within the time provided by section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, is mandatory (Des Granges v. Des Granges, 175 Cal. 67-71, 165 P. 13), the provisions thereof and of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, as to the time for filing the transcript, are directory, and though the appellate court may dismiss the appeal for delay in such filing, such dismissal will be for want of diligence in prosecuting the appeal and not for lack of jurisdiction of the appeal. Smith v. Jaccard, 20 Cal. App. 280, 128 P. 1023, 1026; Mason v. Straube (Cal. App.) 228 P. 872; Fisher v. Oliver, 174 Cal. 782, 164 P. 800.

Where, as in the instant case, the notice to prepare the transcript was given in form and within the time as provided by statute, and it fairly appears, as here, that the delay was due to the fault of the reporter, that neither appellant nor his counsel were wanting in due diligence, and that the transcript, duly certified, has been filed in this court, a case is presented where the rule in the cases last herein cited should be applied, and the motion to dismiss the appeal denied.

It is so ordered.

HICKS et ux. v. WILSON et al. (S. F. 10667.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 14, 1925.)

1. Brokers ⇨8(3)—Evidence held not to establish employment of broker by plaintiff as agent.

Evidence that plaintiffs desiring to purchase a home were shown defendant's home by a broker, who, in defendant's presence, stated a price which plaintiffs accepted, did not establish an employment of broker as plaintiff's agent.

2. Brokers ⇨96—Evidence of seller's statement held to warrant purchaser in paying purchase price to broker.

Evidence that defendant told plaintiff, who desired to buy his home and had been shown it by a broker, to do business with broker, warranted plaintiff in believing that he could complete transaction through broker and pay him purchase price; it being immaterial that broker's actual authority, unknown to plaintiff, did not extend to receiving purchase price.

3. Brokers ⇨96—Broker held to have authority to receive purchase money, where vendor permits belief that he had such "ostensible authority."

Where vendor allowed purchaser to believe that broker had "ostensible authority," defined in Civ. Code, § 2317, as that which principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care allows a third party to believe agent possesses, to receive purchase money, the rule that broker has only authority to procure a purchaser, not to accept purchase money, does not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ostensible Authority.]

4. Brokers ⇨91—Agreement by broker to raise balance of purchase money for purchaser held not to constitute him agent of purchaser in whole transaction.

Agreement by a broker to raise balance necessary for purchase of a home did not constitute him agent of purchaser in whole transaction, since such service was distinct from that rendered seller in sale of property.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Court will not interfere with finding, where evidence in conflict.

Court is not justified in interfering with a finding of trial court, where evidence is in conflict on point.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Caniss, Judge.

Action for money had and received by George W. Hicks and wife against George Osborne Wilson and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

W. F. Sullivan and Edward J. Smith, both of San Francisco, and Albert L. Johnson, of Modesto, for appellants.

Knight, Boland, Hutchinson & Christin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, J. Plaintiffs, husband and wife, brought an action to recover $3,000, alleged to be due for money paid to defendant Cokely, a realtor, as agent for defendant Wilson, on account of the purchase of real property, Wilson, the owner of the property, having refused to execute the deed. Wilson offered the sum of $600 to plaintiffs, and, on their refusal to accept the tender, he placed the money in bank and gave proper notice of the deposit. It was shown at the trial that the plaintiffs paid Cokely $3,000 toward the purchase price of the property without the knowledge of Wilson. Cokely paid Wilson $500 and misappropriated the balance. The trial court found that the plaintiffs employed Cokely to procure for them a residence property, and that, in the dealings between plaintiffs and Cokely, the latter was acting for and on behalf of plaintiffs as their agent, and not as the agent of defendant Wilson. As a conclusion of law, it in effect, held that Cokely had no authority to bind the owner, or right to accept money paid by plaintiffs to conclude the sale. It therefore entered judgment for plaintiffs for the sum of $500, the amount actually received by Wilson. Because of the tender and deposit, defendant was awarded his costs. Plaintiffs appealed.

The cause was transferred by this court to the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division One, for hearing and determination, where the judgment of the lower court was reversed. In the course of the opinion the court cited the decision of the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division One, in Gold v. Phelan, 58 Cal. App. 471, 208 P. 1001, as laying down the rule defining the authority of a broker in transactions involving the sale of real estate. In the petition to have the cause heard in the Supreme Court, after judgment in the District Court of Appeal, the respondent most earnestly contended that the decision in the case was contrary to the rule approved in Gold v. Phelan, supra, and, if allowed to stand, would create great confusion and uncertainty in all real estate transactions where the parties dealt through real estate brokers. The petition was granted, and the cause was brought here in order that this court might finally pass upon the questions presented by the appeal.

After a reargument of the case and a careful consideration of all the points involved, we are of the opinion that the facts in the present case differentiate it from those considered in Gold v. Phelan, supra, and that the opinion of the District Court of Appeal does no violence to the law of the earlier decision. Neither are we apprehensive that the dire results forecast by the respondent will follow if the present opinion is allowed to stand. We therefore adopt as our opinion the following portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, written by Mr. Presiding Justice Tyler, and concurred in by Associate Justices St. Sure and Knight:

"It is manifest that the gist of the trial court's findings is based upon the theory that in the dealings between plaintiffs and Cokely, relative to the purchase of the Wilson property, Cokely was acting for and on behalf of the plaintiffs as their agent and not as the agent of Wilson. It is the plaintiffs' contention in support of their appeal that the findings of the trial court tending to establish this fact are not supported by the evidence. In this we think the appellants are correct.

[1] "The case presents a situation where one of two innocent persons must suffer through the acts of a third person. An examination of the record shows that there is no evidence of any employment by plaintiffs of Cokely to procure for them a residence in Palo Alto. All that the evidence does show in this regard is that the plaintiffs, desiring to purchase a home in that place, called upon Cokely, a real estate broker residing there and having an office in San Francisco, and stated their wants, and asked him if he had anything in mind that he thought would suit them. He immediately made an appointment with them to take them around and show them various properties. Pursuant to this appointment, the plaintiffs on November 2, 1920, were taken by Cokely to the residence of defendant Wilson. Being satisfied after inspection that the property met their requirements, they inquired the price. Cokely immediately, in the presence of Wilson, replied '$6,750 cash,' and the plaintiffs at once signified their willingness to purchase at that figure. There is nothing in this evidence which tends to establish an employment of Cokely by plaintiffs as their agent to procure property for them. To hold otherwise would be to say that, whenever a person desiring to buy real estate enters the office of a realty broker to make inquiry concerning the same, and the broker submits property to him, an agency is created, giving rise to an obligation on the part of such person to compensate their broker for services performed under such employment.

[2] "Other evidence upon the subject of agency shows that immediately following the conclusion of plaintiffs to take the property at the price demanded Mr. Hicks asked Wilson how he should do business with him, to which question Wilson replied: 'Do business with Mr. Cokely.' This is testified to by both Mr. Hicks and his wife, and is not denied by Wilson. Thereafter Hicks met Cokely for the purpose of completing the transaction. He informed him that he was only able to pay in cash the sum of $4,000, whereupon Cokely stated that, if Hicks would pay to him such amount, he would procure the balance of $2,750 necessary to make up the entire purchase price by means of a mortgage upon the property itself, after which the deed from Wilson would be delivered. Accordingly, Hicks within a few days paid over to Cokely several sums of money amounting in the aggregate to $3,000, only $500 of which were paid over by Cokely to Wilson, Cokely apparently embezzling the remainder. It is upon these undisputed facts that the trial court found that the $3,000 was not paid to Cokely as the agent of Wilson.

"At the time of the meeting between the plaintiffs, Wilson and Cokely on November 2, when the oral agreement for the sale of the property was made, there existed no written contract between Wilson and Cokely, but on the following day Wilson executed a written authorization to Cokely by which the latter was appointed his exclusive agent during a period of 90 days for the sale thereof at the above-mentioned price, and by its express terms Cokely was authorized to accept a deposit, the purchaser to be allowed 30 days to examine title, and Wilson agreed thereunder to pay the sum of $900 as compensation for Cokely's services. It will be observed that, at the time when Hicks asked Wilson how he should do business with him, and the latter replied, 'Do business with Mr. Cokely,' Cokely had already completed the usual services required of a real estate broker (i. e., he had procured a buyer on terms satisfactory to the seller, and who was ready to enter into a binding contract to purchase the property), so that it is evident that the query addressed by Hicks to Wilson could only refer to the steps to be subsequently taken to consummate the sale, and that Hicks was warranted in concluding from the reply made by Wilson that he could complete the transaction through the intermediary of Cokely. Hicks was a retired officer of the United States army, and prior to this transaction he had never had any dealings in real estate transfers, and he had a right to rely on the statement made to him. And it is immaterial that the actual authority given to Cokely by Wilson on the following day, and of which Hicks was ignorant, did not extend to receiving payment of the purchase price other than a deposit on account thereof. Just what amount of the purchase price might be considered a deposit is a question we are not called upon to consider.

[3, 4] "It is of course elementary that the authority of a real estate broker is only to produce a purchaser who is willing to contract with the seller upon the terms prescribed, and that such a broker has no authority to accept money offered by the purchaser to conclude the sale; and, when the purchaser pays money into the hands of the broker, in such a case the broker holds it as the agent of the purchaser and not of the seller, and any misappropriation thereof is the loss of the former and not the latter. Gold v. Phelan, 58 Cal. App. 471, 208 P. 1001. It is equally well settled, however, that a principal is bound, not only by the acts which he has actually authorized an agent to perform, but also by those which he has allowed third persons to believe him to be authorized to do. Ostensible authority is defined by section 2317 of the Civil Code to be 'such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess.' By expressly authorizing the plaintiffs to do business with the agent, they were justified in believing that he had authority to receive the price. It is also apparent from the evidence that Cokely himself, in all that he did, regarded himself as Wilson's agent, and looked to Wilson for his entire compensation. The amount of his compensation provided by the contract was $900, which, it will be observed, is about 15 per cent. on the amount of the purchase price—three times the usual commission. Mr. Wilson testified that he protested to Cokely that the commission was excessive, and that the latter in reply stated 'he was doing more than just selling the property; he was arranging for them to raise the cash, and that he was giving them the use of his garage for an indefinite period; and he made the point that as the result of the services he was giving to Hicks and the giving of the garage he was entitled to more than the (usual) commission.'

"It is, of course, true that, in undertaking to procure the balance of $2,750 by means of a mortgage to be executed upon the property by the purchasers, Cokely contemplated performing a service for the purchasers for which he would have been entitled to be compensated by them; but this service was quite distinct from the steps necessary to be taken by the seller and buyers of the property, namely, an investigation into the seller's title, the delivery of the deed, and payment of the purchase price. It is argued by respondent that the fact that Cokely agreed with Hicks to procure this necessary balance in the manner stated indicates that Cokely was acting as the agent of Hicks and not of Wilson throughout the whole transaction; but we think it quite clear that no such inference can be drawn. It is common knowledge that real estate brokers make a practice of procuring necessary funds to complete a purchase of property in the sale of which they are interested, and that they receive and are entitled to receive compensation from the buyer for such service; but, as pointed out above, such service is quite distinct from those rendered to the seller in the sale of his property. It is perfectly apparent that in the other steps in the transaction, had subsequent to the agreement of sale, the plaintiffs dealt with Cokely as the agent of the owner under the ostensible authority conferred upon him at the time of the making of such agreement.

"We conclude, therefore, that the finding of the trial court that the payment by plaintiffs of the $3,000 to Cokely was not paid to him as the agent of Wilson is not supported by, but is contrary to, the evidence.

[5, 6] "There is also abundant evidence in the record that Wilson was apprised of the fact that the plaintiffs were making payments on account of the purchase price to Cokely, and by failing to object thereto ratified that course of dealing; but, as the evidence upon this point is somewhat contradictory, we are not justified in interfering with the trial court's conclusion in regard thereto. It is sufficient that Wilson, by holding out Cokely as his agent for the consummation of the sale, and by expressly authorizing plaintiffs to do business with him, is estopped to deny that he had authority to represent him as agent in all steps necessary to be taken in that matter, including the receipt of the portion of the purchase price in question. Of course, we do not mean to be understood as holding that authority is apparent in contemplation of law, simply because one may conclude it to exist without sufficient facts to warrant such conclusion; but here, the direction by the owner himself being in positive terms to do business with the agent, we think the language was broad enough, considering all the facts and circumstances of the case above narrated, to justify the purchaser in concluding that such agent was clothed with full power to complete the transaction in every particular."

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. GONZALES. (Cr. 1211.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 3, 1925.)

1. Criminal law ⚡517(4)—Evidence of corpus delicti held insufficient as predicate for admission of purported confession.

In a prosecution against an alleged alien for carrying a firearm capable of being concealed on his person, in violation of Firearms Act June 13, 1923, § 2, evidence as to fact of accused's foreign birth and nonnaturalization held insufficient as predicate for admission of purported confession of existence of such fact.

2. Criminal law ⚡535(2)—Independent evidence to confession need not satisfy minds of jury beyond reasonable doubt.

In prosecution of an alleged alien for carrying a firearm capable of being concealed upon his person, in violation of Firearms Act June 13, 1923, § 2, requested instruction that the confession or admission of accused of his guilt would not be sufficient in law to warrant finding of guilty, without independent evidence satisfying minds of jury beyond reasonable doubt that accused was, at time of offense, a foreign-born unnaturalized person and carried such firearm, held properly refused as erroneous.

3. Criminal law ⚡517(4)—Preliminary proof of substantial character is sufficient to predicate admission of confession.

Preliminary proof of substantial character, tending to establish corpus delicti, is sufficient to predicate admission of confession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Sylvester Gonzales was convicted of violating the Firearms Act, and he appeals. Reversed.

Arthur H. Blanchard, of Santa Paula, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The defendant was charged by information with having violated the so-called Firearms Act of June 13, 1923 (St. 1923, p. 696), which reads as follows:

"Sec. 2. On and after the date upon which this act takes effect, no unnaturalized foreign-born person * * * shall own or have in his possession or under his custody or control any pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed upon the person. * * *"

[1] A jury having found the defendant guilty as charged, a motion for new trial was denied, and this is an appeal from the judgment and order denying said motion. It is contended in appellant's behalf that there was no evidence, other than a purported confession which was introduced over his objection, that he was an unnaturalized foreign-born person, and that the trial court erred in permitting the introduction of such confession without requiring the prosecution to establish the corpus delicti. It is insisted on behalf of the people that the evidence sufficiently showed the defendant's birth and the fact that he was not naturalized in this country, before testimony as to any alleged confession was offered.

There is no contention that the appellant was not armed, as alleged, at the time of his arrest. The only evidence which in any way tended to show that he was an unnaturalized foreign-born person consisted of the testimony of various witnesses that appellant spoke the Mexican or Spanish language, and that he could not speak English, and that of his daughter, 22 years of age, who said she was born in Mexico, that she came to this country with her father and mother when she was about 5 years old, and had lived here with her father since that time. She also testified that her father had never attended school in the United States, and that he was unable to read the English language, that his hair was black and his complexion the same as her own. However, there is not the slightest intimation by any witness that the appellant was not born in the United States; nor is there any fact upon which to base a presumption that he was foreign born.

The precise point raised in this case was decided by the Supreme Court recently in People v. Quarez, 238 P. 363, wherein it was said:

"The corpus delicti of the offense defined in section 2 consists, as we have shown, of two elements—the second being the foreign nativity and nonnaturalization of the appellant. The rule is well settled, and the authorities numerous in this state, that the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confession of a defendant cannot be used to establish any necessary element of the corpus delicti of the crime charged. The corpus delicti must be established by independent evidence before the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confession of a defendant are admissible."

Authorities holding that the corpus delicti may be established by circumstantial evidence are cited in support of the argument for respondent, but we fail to find anywhere in the record proof of facts or circumstances worthy of consideration in this respect. The fact that appellant brought his daughter from Mexico, and that he had remained in the United States for a period of about 17 years, but was yet unable to speak English, was all that she pretended to know about his origin. Nor is it attempted to be explained on behalf of the respondent how his appearance or ignorance of our language, or even the fact that he had been in Mexico, could be said to prove that he was not born here. Hence an essential element of the offense was not shown, and testimony as to asserted admissions was therefore not admissible.

[2, 3] The trial court refused to give an instruction requested by appellant that—

"Without independent evidence which satisfies the mind of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was at the time and place alleged in the information then and there a foreign-born, unnaturalized person, and in his possession a firearm capable of being concealed upon the person at the time alleged in the information, the confession or admission of the defendant of his guilt would not be sufficient in law to warrant the jury in finding the defendant guilty."

This instruction does not contain a correct statement of the law and was therefore properly refused. The proof of the corpus delicti, which must be produced before admissions or confessions of the defendant may be allowed to be put in evidence, need not be sufficient to satisfy the minds of the jurors beyond a reasonable doubt of the corpus delicti. It is sufficient if the preliminary proof be of a substantial character tending to establish the corpus delicti. People v. Ward, 145 Cal. 736, 79 P. 448; People v. Jenkins (Cal. App.) 228 P. 405; People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 363, 97 P. 871; People v. Ellena (Cal. App.) 228 P. 389; People v. Quarez, supra. Such substantial evidence may be corroborated and strengthened by admissions and confessions of the defendant, and the proof beyond a reasonable doubt required by the law thus supplied. It may be added that the defendant was not prejudiced by the failure of the trial court to instruct upon the point suggested by the request.

There being no evidence offered, independent of an alleged admission of appellant that he was foreign born, the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Eleanor A. Gould against Bertha G. Long. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Griffith Jones and John J. Craig, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James P. Clark, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. On the 5th day of January, 1922, respondent commenced this action against the appellant for the sum of $1,301.58, alleging that the latter had within two years next preceding said date received the same for and on account of moneys had and received for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, which the defendant had agreed to repay upon demand, that on or about October 14, 1921, the plaintiff demanded repayment of the same, but that the defendant had failed and refused to pay said sum or any part thereof, and that the whole amount was then due and owing. It was also alleged "that said moneys were the sole and separate property of plaintiff."

Appellant answered, denying that she had received, or was indebted to the plaintiff,

"whether in the sum of $1,300, or in any other sum, or at all; admits and alleges, however, that she did, within the year 1921, receive the sum of $1,290 from the plaintiff for the sole purpose of acting as custodian of said moneys." It was further denied that demand had been made, or that any sum of money remained due, owing, or unpaid, but, on the contrary, appellant alleged that she had repaid all of the moneys so admitted to have been received by her from the plaintiff, and that "she has not sufficient or any information or belief concerning to whom said moneys belonged to enable her to answer said allegation, and, basing her denial upon said grounds, denies that said moneys or any part of said moneys were the sole or separate property of the plaintiff."

The cause was tried in the superior court without a jury, and findings of fact were filed and judgment entered for the plaintiff in accordance with all of the allegations of said complaint. This is an appeal from the judgment, and as grounds for reversal it is asserted that the trial court erred in the following respects: (1) That it confined the defendant's proof to the questions of demand and payment, and rejected the defendant's offered evidence tending to show that said money was not the plaintiff's sole and separate property; (2) that the deposition of the plaintiff, taken previously to the trial, was excluded; and (3) that the finding that the money was plaintiff's separate property was not supported by the evidence, and would have been otherwise had said deposition been admitted.

It appears that, at the time, the instant case was commenced the plaintiff, respondent here, had been divorced from her husband, Charles T. Gould; that prior to her marriage respondent had about $1,000, $800 of which she used in the purchase of real property; that during the pendency of the divorce action she was allowed by the court $40 per month, and the use of a house on said premises, from which she collected rents amounting at times to $100 per month; and that she earned other moneys. Concerning the source of her money, it appears that the $1,301.50 claimed was made up of the following items: $600, which belonged to Mrs. Gould before her marriage, $690 alimony, and $11.58 interest on the deposit of the other sums. This was established by the testimony of the respondent and an employee of the Security Trust & Savings Bank. The bank employee said that the account was in the name of Bertha G. Long, and was withdrawn by one check, and the account closed October 13, 1921. Respondent also testified that appellant promised to repay her at any time, and that a check was made out and signed by appellant, and pinned in the deposit book; that the latter retained the book and check; that the money was thereafter demanded, but that appellant refused to return any part thereof, and that in fact none was ever repaid. Appellant's testimony was to the effect that she had received the $1,290, but that she had given respondent a check therefor, which was returned, and that she (appellant) destroyed the same.

Respondent was called to testify in rebuttal, and during her cross-examination, counsel for appellant read many questions and answers from a deposition given by respondent before the trial, and asked her if she did not so testify, to which she replied in the affirmative. Objection being interposed to further examination of that nature, said counsel stated that respondent had made an affidavit in the divorce action that she had no means, and that he desired to impeach her testimony by showing that the same was contradictory to statements contained in both her affidavit and deposition. The trial court said:

"It would not be competent in this case. Objection sustained. I am going to narrow the issues; you admit getting the $1,290. The question is now to dispose of the issues that no demand has ever been made, or that she has paid the money back."

Thereupon counsel for appellant read further from said deposition, which respondent testified was correct, and the entire deposition was then offered in evidence, but upon objection it was denied admission.

Appellant here insists that the evidence would not have been sufficient without the deposition to support a finding that the moneys in suit were the sole and separate property of respondent, and that, had the same been admitted, it would have required a finding that said moneys were community property of respondent and Charles T. Gould; that the trial court therefore erred in sustaining objections as above indicated.

[1, 2] We think the testimony offered upon the trial unequivocally established the fact that all the moneys in question were the separate property of respondent. It is uncontradicted that a portion of the money intrusted to appellant had been in respondent's possession prior to her marriage with Gould, and that the balance consisted of amounts received under an order of court in her suit against him for divorce. None of her testimony in this respect was denied, and the mere assertion that a husband may claim no interest in alimony or maintenance allowed the wife in a divorce action against him is too obvious to require citation of authority. Furthermore, said deposition is embodied in the record before us, and it appears that respondent's testimony therein was mostly corroborative of that which she gave upon the trial. She also testified in her deposition, "It was my separate property."

[3] It is therefore apparent that, had the trial court erred in sustaining objections thereto, the exclusion of the deposition in no way prejudiced the appellant's rights. For this reason alone a reversal would not be justified. Const., art. 6, § 4½.

[4] However, section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a witness may be impeached only by statements inconsistent with his present testimony, and that, "if the statements be in writing, they must be shown to the witness before any question is put to him concerning them." It does not appear that the witness was shown the testimony by which it was sought to impeach her, nor that in that respect a proper foundation for the introduction of her deposition was laid, although the court called attention to that requirement. We think, therefore, that the ruling of the superior court in rejecting it was proper. Froeming v. Stockton Elec. R. Co., 171 Cal. 401, 153 P. 712, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 408.

The judgment is affirmed.

O'CONNELL v. SUPERIOR COURT, IN AND
FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 5374.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 4, 1925.)

1. Divorce ⚭157—Court of equity may refuse to enter final decree where offense was condoned after entry of interlocutory decree.

Courts of equity possess power to refuse to enter final decree of divorce where, subsequently to entry of interlocutory decree, the offense for which divorce was granted has been condoned.

2. Mandamus ⚭168(2)—Presumed that inference of condonation, drawn from findings will support order denying final decree of divorce notwithstanding no finding of ultimate fact of condonation.

Where finding of court relative to condonation subsequent to entry of interlocutory decree of divorce was not finding of ultimate fact of condonation, but such ultimate fact might fairly and reasonably be inferred from the facts found, it will be presumed that inference drawn therefrom was one that would support order denying motion for final decree.

3. Action ⚭1—Court having jurisdiction has no discretion to refuse relief for which there is legal right.

Where there is legal right to relief under certain facts, and existence of such facts is not questioned, court having jurisdiction has no discretion to refuse relief.

4. Mandamus ⇨172—Judgment denying final decree of divorce cannot be reviewed on application for writ of mandate where interlocutory decree was set aside by judgment not shown to be invalid.

Where interlocutory decree of divorce, which is foundation for relief sought, was set aside by judgment not shown to be invalid, and trial court in proceeding in which it had jurisdiction has from evidence before it made findings supporting, on additional grounds, its judgment denying final decree, such judgment cannot be reviewed on application for writ of mandate.

Application by Daniel O'Connell for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Hon. Walton J. Wood, Judge, directing the entry of a final decree of divorce. Writ denied.

Daniel O'Connell and Charles M. Frey, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Herbert W. Erskine and Keyes & Erskine, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. A petition for writ of mandate to the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, directing the entry of a final decree of divorce.

An interlocutory decree of divorce was by said court on June 2, 1924, granted to petitioner, he being the defendant and cross-complainant in an action for divorce brought by his wife, Anna M. O'Connell, who failed to appear at the trial. The decree was based upon findings of fact constituting extreme cruelty, and thereby certain real property described therein was adjudged to be the separate property of petitioner. No appeal was taken therefrom, and thereafter on July 10, 1925, petitioner upon due notice presented in the superior court his motion for the entry of a final decree of divorce in accordance with the interlocutory decree mentioned. The motion was opposed by cross-defendant, Anna M. O'Connell, and, as recited in the order of the court made thereon, evidence was adduced at the hearing by both parties on which the court found that the parties since the entry of the interlocutory decree had cohabited as husband and wife, and were at the time of the hearing living in the same dwelling; that at the time of the entry of said decree the parties had become reconciled and were then living together as husband and wife, and had so lived continuously till the 25th day of May, 1925; that an action had been commenced by said Anna M. O'Connell against petitioner in the superior court for a decree of that court setting aside the interlocutory decree on the ground that petitioner had by his acts prevented his wife from appearing in court and presenting her defense to petitioner's cross-complaint upon which the interlocutory decree was made and entered; that the action had been tried, and that the court had made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law therein, and that the parties had on May 18, 1925, agreed in writing to vacate and set aside the interlocutory decree of divorce, and thereupon made and entered on July 25, 1925, its order denying petitioner's motion. It further appears—the fact not being disputed by petitioner—that a decree of the court based upon the findings and conclusions of law in the action to set aside the decree of divorce was filed on the same day, adjudging that the interlocutory decree mentioned be set aside.

It is urged by petitioner that, notwithstanding the findings by the court of cohabitation and reconciliation, there was no finding of a condonation by him of the offense charged in his cross-complaint, and that without such finding the trial court was not justified in denying the motion for the entry of a final decree of divorce.

[1, 2] Courts of equity in this state possess the power to refuse to enter a final decree of divorce where subsequently to the entry of the interlocutory decree the offense has been condoned (Olson v. Superior Court, 175 Cal. 250, 165 P. 706, 1 A. L. R. 1589), and while in the instant case the finding of the court in that connection was not of the ultimate fact of condonation, it appears that such ultimate fact might fairly and reasonably be inferred from the facts found, and it will be presumed that the inference drawn therefrom was one that will support the order of the court (Gould v. Eaton, 111 Cal. 639, 44 P. 319, 52 Am. St. Rep. 201; De Haven v. Berendes, 135 Cal. 178, 180, 67 P. 786; Cooley v. Brunswick Drug Co., 30 Cal. App. 58, 157 P. 13).

[3, 4] Where there is a legal right to relief under certain facts, and the existence of such facts is not questioned, a court having jurisdiction has no discretion to refuse the relief (Cal., etc., Lumber Co. v. Sup. Ct., 13 Cal. App. 65, 108 P. 882); but where it appears, as here, that an interlocutory decree of divorce, which is the foundation for the relief sought, has been set aside by a judgment not shown to be invalid, and the trial court, in a proceeding in which it had jurisdiction, has from evidence before it made findings supporting on additional grounds its judgment denying relief, such judgment cannot be reviewed on an application for a writ of mandate (People v. Sup. Ct., 114 Cal. 466, 46 P. 383; Gay v. Torrance, 143 Cal. 169, 76 P. 973; Lapique v. Superior Court, 24 Cal. App. 313, 141 P. 223; American Well & Prospecting Co. v. Superior Court, 19 Cal. PEOPLE v. MILLS. (Cr. 877.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 5, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 2, 1925.)

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(1)—Unlicensed chiropractor subject to prosecution under Medical Practice Act.

A party practicing as a chiropractor without license, as required by section 15 of Chiropractic Act, may be prosecuted in superior court for violation of section 17 of Medical Practice Act, as amended by St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, for practicing medicine without license, since section 18 of Chiropractic Act provides that it shall not be construed as a repeal of medical act except as to persons licensed thereunder.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇐5(4)—License under either Medical or Chiropractic Act defense to prosecution under Medical Act.

In prosecution under Medical Practice Act, § 17, as amended by St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, for practicing chiropractic without a license, it is a complete defense to show a license from either chiropractic or medical board, since Chiropractic Act, § 18, by express terms does not effect section 17 of Medical Practice Act, as amended, which continues to apply to all unlicensed persons.

3. Criminal law ⇐1209—Medical Act not invalidated by Chiropractic Act, where latter permits unlicensed chiropractors to be prosecuted under both acts.

Chiropractic Act, providing punishment for persons practicing chiropractic without a license, but permitting unlicensed chiropractors to be prosecuted under Medical Practice Act, § 17, as amended by St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, for practicing medicine without a license, does not make latter act void as subjecting a party to different degrees of punishment in different courts for same offense.

4. Criminal law ⇐1206(1)—Conviction for practicing chiropractic under Medical Practice Act not improper, though lesser penalty under Chiropractic Act for same offense.

Conviction of party practicing chiropractic under Medical Practice Act, § 17, as amended by St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, providing penalty for practicing medicine without a license, is not improper, because section 15 of Chiropractic Act provided a lesser penalty for same offense, since fact that defendant has violated both acts does not relieve him from prosecution under Medical Practice Act, where, under section 18 of Chiropractic Act, its provisions are not repealed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Allen Mills was convicted of violating the Medical Practice Act, and he appeals. Affirmed.

L. W. Hughes, of Corning, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was convicted upon an information charging that—"The said Allen Mills, on, or about the 16th day of March, A. D., 1925, at and in the county of Tehama, and state of California, and prior to the filing of this information did then and there willfully and unlawfully practice and attempt to practice, and did advertise and hold himself out as practicing, a system and mode of treating the sick and afflicted in this state, without having at the time of so doing, a valid unrevoked certificate, as provided by the state Medical Practice Act." St. 1913, p. 722.

From such conviction the defendant appeals.

Section 17 of the Medical Practice Act, as amended in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 114, § 11), reads as follows:

"Any person who shall practice or attempt to practice, or who advertises or holds himself out as practicing, any system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted in this state, or who shall diagnose, treat, operate for, or prescribe for, any disease, injury, deformity, or other mental or physical condition of any person without having at the time of so doing a valid unrevoked certificate as provided in this act, or who shall in any sign or in any advertisement use the word 'doctor,' the letters or prefix 'Dr.,' the letters 'M. D.,' or any other term or letters indicating or implying that he is a doctor, physician, surgeon or practitioner, under the terms of this or any other act, or that he is entitled to practice hereunder, or under any other law without having at the time of so doing a valid unrevoked certificate as provided in this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as designated in this act."

The testimony tended to show that the defendant was practicing a system of curing and healing the sick according to the method and procedure or system known as and followed by chiropractors. The instructions of the court were to the effect that, if the defendant did not have either a license to practice medicine or a license provided by the Initiative Chiropractic Act, adopted in 1922 (St. 1923, p. lxxxviii) then, and in that case, if the jury believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was practicing the aforesaid method of healing and curing the sick, the defendant should be found guilty.

Section 15 of the Chiropractic Act reads as follows:

"Any person who shall practice or attempt to practice chiropractic, or any person who shall buy, sell or fraudulently obtain a license to practice chiropractic, whether recorded or not, or who shall use the title 'chiropractor' or 'D. C.,' or any word or title to induce, or tending to induce belief that he is engaged in the practice of chiropractic, without first complying with the provisions of this act; or any licensee under this act who uses the word 'doctor' or the prefix 'Dr.' without the word 'chiropractor,' or 'D. C.' immediately following his name, or the use of the letters 'M. D.' or the words 'doctor of medicine,' or the term 'surgeon,' or the term 'physician,' or the word 'osteopath,' or the letters 'D. O.' or any other letters, prefixes or suffixes, the use of which would indicate that he or she was practicing a profession for which he held no license from the state of California, or any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty dollars and not more than two hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days, or both."

[1] It is contended that the defendant, not having a license from the chiropractic board, should have been prosecuted under this section, and that, as prosecution under this section could only be had in the justice's court, the superior court had no jurisdiction of this case. In determining whether this contention is sound, consideration must be given to section 18 of the Chiropractic Act, which reads as follows:

"Nothing herein shall be construed as repealing the 'medical practice act' of June 2, 1913, or any subsequent amendments thereof, except in so far as that act or said amendments may conflict with the provisions of this act as applied to persons licensed under this act, to which extent any and all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

It will be observed from a reading of this section that from the fact that the defendant did not have a license from the chiropractic board the Chiropractic Act adopted in 1922 has no application to this case. By the provisions of section 18, as above set forth, no part of the Medical Practice Act is repealed, save and except as to those portions which are in conflict with the Chiropractic Act, when applied to persons holding a license issued by the chiropractic board.

It is also contended that, as the defendant had no license from the chiropractic board, the defendant might have been prosecuted in separate courts for the same act, one under the terms of section 15 of the Chiropractic Act and another prosecution under the terms and conditions of section 17 of the Medical Practice Act, as amended. It is also contended that one holding a certificate to practice medicine under the Medical Practice Act would be subject to prosecution for an attempt to follow the system of curing used by chiropractors without having a license from the chiropractic board, which would result in the following situation: A medical practitioner holding a medical license would be subject only to a maximum penalty under section 15 of the Chiropractic Act of a fine of $200, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not to exceed 90 days; whereas, the defendant, having no medical certificate and attempting to cure by the same system without having a certificate from the board of chiropractors, might be punished under section 17, as amended in 1917, and section 24 of the Medical Practice Act, as added by St. 1917, p. 115, § 13, by a fine not exceeding $600, or by a term of imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed 180 days, etc., and that therefore the sections are discriminatory.

We do not need to determine the correctness of this contention, because, if such is the effect of the Chiropractic Act, it would only result in the holding that section 15 of the Chiropractic Act is invalid, in that it is made applicable to one class of persons and not to another.

[2] Under the two acts a complete defense to a charge of curing without a license is the introduction and showing by the defendant that he holds a license from either board. Prior to the adoption of the initiative act relating to chiropractors in 1922, it was unlawful to practice that system of curing without having obtained a certificate from the state medical board of examiners. That situation, however, has now been corrected, so that, if a defendant charged under section 17 of the Medical Practice Act, if it be found that he is following the system used by chiropractors, then his complete defense is the showing that he holds a certificate from the chiropractic board. In other words, section 17 of the Medical Practice Act is allowed to remain in full force and effect by the initiative measure known as the Chiropractic Act; to apply with full force and effect as fully and completely as it did prior to 1922 by the express terms of section 18 of the Chiropractic Act, to all unlicensed persons.

[3] Is there any merit in the contention that the defendant is subject to different degrees of punishments in different courts, by reason of the difference in the terms of the two acts referred to herein? We think not. In the case of In re Mulholland, etc., 97 Cal. 527, 32 P. 568, Justice Paterson of the Supreme Court of this state held:

"The fact that criminals are subjected to different degrees of punishment for the same offense in different courts does not affect the validity of the law," citing as authority Srinegrou v. State, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 51.

This case is referred to and the reasoning therein approved in the case of In re Kennerly, 190 Cal. 774, 214 P. 857.

In the case of People ex rel. Olsen v. Sheriff of Erie County, 174 App. Div. 281, 160 N. Y. S. 427, the court held:

"A statute is not invalid, because for the same act a defendant may be liable for one penalty if prosecuted under one section, and another and different penalty if prosecuted under another section."

[4] In that case, which related to the unlawful catching of fish, different sections provided different penalties, and the ruling was had as before stated. If this is true as to different sections of the same act, it would seem for a much stronger reason, to wit, absence of contrary intentions of the Legislature, if the different penalties provided appear in different acts. Again, we do not very well see any good reasoning in the contention that the defendant has been improperly convicted under an act which applies to him, to wit, one not holding any license, simply because he might have also been prosecuted in another court, or, in the justice's court, for the same act and a lesser possible penalty imposed. The fact that the defendant has violated both acts does not relieve him from prosecution under the Medical Practice Act, unless its provisions are repealed by the Chiropractic Act, which, by the very terms of section 18 we have found that the Chiropractic Act does not do. The rule of law which we have before stated, followed in the Mulholland Case, is also set forth as the law in 16 C. J. p. 1353, and 8 Cal. Jur. p. 650.

The defendant in this case was sentenced to pay a fine of $200, or, in default thereof, serve out the sentence in the county jail at the rate of $3 per day, and from the foregoing statement we find no reason for disturbing the judgment. The order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial and the judgment referred to herein are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Suit by David Billings and wife against the Farm Development Company, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

H. M. Anthony, of San Francisco, for appellants.

A. D. Schaffer and Anthony Podesta, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs commenced this action as one in equity to set aside a sale and the subsequent conveyances of certain real property in San Joaquin county; the sale having been made to foreclose a deed of trust executed by them as security for their promissory note in the sum of $1,290. Plaintiffs had judgment against all the defendants except Bates, who was held to be an innocent purchaser for value. The other defendants have appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

The complaint was filed on February 20, 1920. At a trial had on April 9, 1921, judgment was rendered in favor of all the defendants. On June 24, 1921, a new trial was granted on motion of the plaintiffs as to all the defendants except Bates. As to him the judgment became final, holding that he was an innocent purchaser of the land in suit, and denying plaintiffs the right to have the sale and the subsequent conveyance set aside. On March 8, 1922, the cause came before the court, sitting without a jury, for a second trial as to the remaining defendants. At that time these defendants moved that no testimony be received on the complaint on the ground that the action having been brought to set aside the trust sale and the subsequent conveyances and for possession of the realty, the final judgment in favor of Bates disposed of all the issues raised by the pleadings and left plaintiffs the single remedy of damages for fraud. This motion was denied and the cause was tried by the court, resulting in a judgment against the defendants, other than Bates, in the sum of $1,855; $1,355 being the difference between the value of the property and the amount the plaintiffs still owed under their deed of trust, and $500 being awarded as punitive damages.

On May 10, 1915, the plaintiffs executed their promissory note in favor of the defendant Farm Development Company, a corporation, for $1,290, payable in equal monthly installments of $15 on the 10th day of each month with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly. This note was secured by their trust deed in which W. F. Postel and Robert W. Dennis were made trustees, and will be referred to herein as the "Billings" note. On December 22, 1917, the defendants Farm Development Company and W. L. Hogan executed their joint and several note in favor of W. F. Postel in the sum of $200, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month, compounded monthly. This will be referred to herein as the "Hogan" note. On November 22, 1918, the payee of this note sold it to A. D. Schaffer, an attorney at law, who, however, took the note in the name of one Casey, who, it is claimed, held it for the benefit of the plaintiff D. W. Billings. This note was at all times secured by the pledge of the Billings note and the trust deed of May, 1915. The explanation of this singular transaction is twofold. The plaintiff D. W. Billings had recently been declared a bankrupt, and, having made a deed of gift of the property in suit to his wife, he was advised by his attorneys that it was necessary to further conceal his assets from his creditors by having the Hogan note in a fictitious name. Secondly, he was being continually pressed by Hogan for payment on his own note, and he found it necessary to conceal his ownership of the Hogan note to avoid a set-off against his own, and this enabled him to collect 5 per cent. interest monthly, compounded against his own simple 6 per cent. per annum interest. During all this time the plaintiffs were very irregular in their payments upon the original obligation and from March, 1918, to October, 1919, made no payments at all upon the principal, but paid the interest only. During all this time frequent and repeated demands were made upon them for payment and in each case they led the defendant to believe that satisfactory adjustments were soon to be made.

About a month prior to October 28, 1919, after frequent but futile attempts to discover the mysterious Casey, who was the legal owner of the Hogan note, the defendant W. L. Hogan learned from Schaffer that he held the note for the benefit of plaintiff D. W. Billings and that Casey was merely a figure-head. The defendant W. L. Hogan then informed Schaffer that he had been endeavoring to find the holder of the note in order to pay it, and demanded that Schaffer give him a statement of the amount due. About a month later, and on October 28, 1919, these parties met again for the purpose of making a settlement, and Schaffer then informed this defendant that D. W. Billings had applied from the Hogan note all moneys which became due on the Billings note since March, 1919, amounting to $120 principal and $29 interest. This was the first information given Hogan that Billings actually owned his note and that payments had been applied by him upon the other obligation. In order to settle his note and to secure possession of the deed of trust which had been pledged with Postel, Hogan was compelled by Schaffer to give him two receipts, one for $120, and another for $29.11, as payments on principal and interest on the Billings note, and also to pay to Schaffer the sum of $218.64, which was represented to be the full amount due on this note. The receipts which Hogan gave to Schaffer at this time were, however, on account of principal and on account of interest, and at the same time Hogan insisted that the plaintiffs were still in default in their payments upon the trust deed. A few days after this settlement Schaffer informed Hogan that he had made a mistake in estimating the interest on the $200 note and demanded an additional payment of $62.72. Hogan refused to pay this amount and then Schaffer directed him to apply it on subsequent payments as they became due under the Billings deed of trust. Hogan denied the claim that anything was due from him after the settlement, and on November 25, 1919, declared the plaintiffs in default. The defendant L. J. Hogan, who was the wife of W. L. Hogan, was then substituted as trustee under the deed for the purpose of making a sale. All the required steps, including the publication of notice of sale, were duly taken, and the property was on December 27, 1919, sold to W. L. Hogan for the sum of $501, and he immediately thereafter sold the property to the defendant Bates.

[1-3] The complaint was framed on the theory that the sale had been fraudulent and the plaintiffs prayed for an order setting aside the conveyances, for possession of the property, and for general relief. In the first trial the court found adversely to the plaintiffs, in so far as the defendant Bates was concerned, and, this judgment having become final, there was a conclusive determination that the defendants were not entitled to the specific relief for which they prayed. When the second trial began, all that was left to the plaintiffs was therefore a simple action for damages for fraud and deceit. Looking at the complaint in this light, it falls far short of being a model pleading, because in an action for damages the complaint must allege damage in a definite amount. Munson v. Fishburn, 183 Cal. 206, 220, 190 P. 808; 8 Cal. Jur. p. 882. In fact this is required by section 426, Code of Civil Procedure. There are no allegations of damage and no specific prayer for damages. It is axiomatic that fraud without damage is not actionable, and a complaint charging fraud without damage fails to state a cause of action. Here one of the charges of fraud is the substitution of L. J. Hogan as a trustee, and it is claimed that this substitution was a part of a plot and a conspiracy to cheat and defraud the plaintiffs, but it does not appear that the original trustee, or some other substituted trustee, would not have been compelled to do or would not have done the same acts performed by L. J. Hogan. There is no specific allegation of injury from the substitution and nothing from which injury might be inferred. The mere inadequacy of the price bid at the foreclosure sale does not constitute fraud, unless the purchaser has been guilty of some deceit, or has taken some undue advantage "resulting in such gross inadequacy and consequent injury to the owner of the property." Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 70, 90 P. 194; Sargent

v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 129, 223 P. 464; Jones v. Sierra Verdugo Water Co., 63 Cal. App. 254, 263, 218 P. 454. The other acts which are set forth in the complaint as constituting a part of this conspiracy to defraud the plaintiffs are the declaration of plaintiffs' default, publication of notice of sale, the sale for an inadequate price, and the subsequent conveyance to Bates. But none of these acts is alleged to have been wrongful, except the declaration of plaintiff's default, and it does not appear from the complaint how or in what manner any of them were not authorized by the contract between the parties, or to what extent any of them damaged the plaintiffs.

[4] So far as the plaintiff D. W. Billings is concerned, it appears from the complaint that on June 18, 1917, he had conveyed to his wife and coplaintiff all his right and interest in the property. The right to the return of the property having been foreclosed by the judgment in favor of Bates, his measure of damages for the alleged fraud was quite different from that of his coplaintiff in this connection. In addition to this the complaint is silent in the pleading of any facts justifying an award of punitive damages. As to the plaintiff D. W. Billings, particularly, it is apparent that this award is not justified by the pleadings or the evidence, and that, as to the judgment for general damages, it is far in excess of any actual damage which he suffered. We are satisfied that the complaint does not state sufficient facts to support the judgment for damages for fraud and deceit in behalf of plaintiff D. W. Billings and that the defendants' objection to the offer of evidence upon that ground should have been sustained as to that plaintiff at least.

On the facts of the case the outstanding question before the trial court was whether the plaintiffs were in default at the time of the sale. Though the defendants expressly raised the issue in their answer, the trial court did not expressly find on it. Inferentially the court held adversely to this defense, as otherwise it would not have held that the defendants were guilty of fraud in making the sale. Assuming the court to have so held, the conclusion cannot be supported without the aid of finding No. 8, wherein the court found that prior to March 10, 1918, D. W. Billings and W. L. Hogan had orally agreed to waive payments on the principal from March 10, 1918, to March 10, 1919. By deducting these 12 installments, amounting to $180, the plaintiffs have contended that when the default was declared there was but $18.30 due on the note. The error of the finding is twofold: It is wholly beyond the issues, and it is unsupported by the evidence. The complaint does not contain a word regarding any waiver of payments other than the acceptance of interest and principal on some other than the 10th day of each month.

There is no suggestion that any new arrangement was made for the 12 months between March, 1918, and March, 1919. To the contrary the complaint alleges that all payments of principal and interest were made as required by the note and trust deed, and, particularly, that during the years 1918 and 1919 the plaintiffs "made the required monthly payments on said note and trust deed as follows." It then specifies particular days in the months running from May, 1918, to February, 1919, when these regular monthly payments were made. Though the plaintiffs were compelled to admit by their own testimony that these allegations were false, we point to them merely to show that the defendants were not apprised by the pleadings of any intention to claim an oral modification of the contract and that this matter was not in issue.

[5] Aside from the matter of pleading, all the evidence upon which this finding is based is found in the testimony of plaintiff D. W. Billings. We quote from the transcript:

"A. I told Hogan I would continue to keep up my interest monthly, and that I would later on wind up the whole business in a lump sum. I would not pay him any more on the principal for the time being. He told me it was all right. I took him at his word.

"Q. He said it was all right? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That is the conversation as you remember it? A. Yes; as I remember it, yes.

"Q. That occurred at the time you made your last payment prior to the year's grace? A. Yes.

"Mr. Anthony: I move this be stricken out on the ground that there is no consideration at all shown for any such statement, and it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial on the question. I think all that reference to a year's grace should be stricken out.

"Mr. Schaffer: We will be able to show the consideration.

"The Court: Motion denied on that statement."

The same witness testified that he met W. L. Hogan in the month of June, 1918, and paid him the June interest only. Again we quote:

"A. I told Hogan I was on the way to give him his interest, for the month. He says, 'All right.' He says, 'I will take it.' We went across the street to a cigar store, and I paid him the interest, and I had an old receipt from him, and he wrote on the bottom of the receipt, 'Received the interest,' and we shook for a cigar.

"Q. Have any other conversation with him at that time? A. Then he asked me if I could pay him $125 or $150 he would give me 10 per cent. discount on it. I told him then I didn't have anything to pay him; when I did pay him I would wind the whole thing up for a lump sum on the whole thing."

[6] No other testimony on this subject was offered. No testimony of any kind was offered to show that the purported "grace" was for one year or for anything more than "the time being." No evidence purporting to show a consideration for this oral agreement was presented and it will be noted that the trial court did not find that any consideration passed. The testimony was inadmissible, of course, as it was an attempt to vary a written contract by parol evidence of an oral contract which was without consideration. Plaintiffs' only answer to this is that they then agreed to make the interest payments monthly, though the contract called for quarterly payments. But the complaint alleged it was not denied, and the evidence, without conflict, showed that the payments had been made monthly ever since the execution of the note. But, aside from all this, the testimony does not support the finding (as the plaintiffs interpret that finding) that this oral agreement carried forward the due date of all these installments for a period of 12 months. As detailed by this witness, this was merely a conditional agreement that, if the monthly payments were waived for the "time being," Billings would pay them all in a lump sum. This he admits he did not do, and, accordingly, at the end of the so-called period of grace, the whole sum of $180 became immediately due.

If a finding has been made on the issue of default as raised by the answer, the evidence would have required one favorable to the defendants. This is compelled by a mere mathematical calculation. The complaint alleged, and the trial court found, that, when the Hogan note came into the possession of Billings and his associates, there was due thereon the sum of $219.98. It was shown by plaintiffs that from March 1, 1919, to October 1, 1919, they credited the defendants with monthly payments on their own note varying from $18.55 to $18.38, principal and interest. When settlement was made on October 29, 1919, Hogan paid Schaffer $218.64 in full payment. Deducting these monthly payments and compounding the interest on the balance monthly, it is found that there was then due on the note only $198.16, or $20.48 less than Hogan paid. All this is done without regard to the $180 which became due March 10, 1919, if we grant plaintiffs' claim for the year's grace, or which became due monthly after March 10, 1918, if the year's grace is not allowed. The note was taken by Billings on November 22, 1918. If the oral waiver, or grace, was invalid, 8 monthly installments on the Billings note were then due, and should have been credited to defendants. In fact, the complaint alleged and the court found that these credits began on November 22, 1918, but all the computations credit the defendants from March, 1919, and following. It is evident that if the credits had been given as alleged, or if the true amounts due the defendants had been allowed, there would have been little or nothing due Billings on the Hogan note, and that when he paid Schaffer $218.64 on October 29, 1919, he greatly overpaid what was due.

[7-9] The plaintiffs seek to justify this transaction by computations which are erroneous from the beginning. In fact, their whole case is based on bad arithmetic. It will be recalled that the court found that there was $219.98 due on this usurious note when Billings and his associates bought it on November 22, 1918. In their computations to show a balance due them after the settlement with Hogan on October 29, 1919, the plaintiffs list the amount due on November 22, 1918, as $269.98, or just $50 more than the amount fixed in their complaint and in the finding. They now complain of this finding and insist that it is not supported by the evidence. But they are certainly bound by their pleading, and, as they have not appealed, they are also bound by the finding. This is the real basis of their error in computation on the Hogan note, but they have added to this error by computing the compound interest twice a month and in this way have been able to show that defendants were still in arrears when the settlement was made. As the evidence indisputably demonstrates that Hogan overpaid on his note, and that the plaintiffs were then and for more than a year prior thereto had been in default, the defendants were entitled to a finding to that effect.

[10-12] This brings us to a consideration of the specific assignments of fraud found in the complaint. (1) The declaration of plaintiffs' default. As the facts clearly demonstrate that they were in default and that they ignored the frequent demands for payment there was no fraud on defendants' part in merely declaring the default in order to bring about a foreclosure sale. (2 and 3) The publication of notice of sale and the sale to the beneficiary. The publication was in strict accord with the statute and the contract and the beneficiary was a lawful purchaser under the contract. There was no fraud in either of these acts. (4) The sale for an inadequate price. The beneficiary as the only bidder at the sale was not bound to bid more than he was willing to pay. Mere inadequacy of price is insufficient in equity to set aside a sale unless accompanied by acts of fraud. Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 70, 90 P. 194; Sargent v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 129, 223 P. 464. (5) The sale to a third party. Though this was manifestly done to hamper the plaintiffs in their attack upon the sale, it cannot enter into the question of the validity of the original sale. If the facts at and prior to the sale were not fraudulent, the plaintiffs cannot complain about the purchaser's subsequent conveyance of the property. (6) The substitution of trustees. The contract authorized the substitution at the request of the beneficiary and there is neither allegation nor proof that the substitution was fraudulent, or that it caused plaintiffs any damage. These are all the acts pleaded as contributory to the "conspiracy" to defraud the plaintiffs. Suggestions are made in the plaintiffs' brief that Hogan led them to believe that their payments on the original note were complete and that they were not in default. The matter was not pleaded and all the evidence is without conflict to the contrary.

[13] It is also argued that the plaintiffs should have been given personal notice of the sale. But, such notice was not necessary and the failure to give it is not actionable. Sargent v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 130, 223 P. 464; Baldwin v. Brown, 193 Cal. 345, 353, 224 P. 462.

Will must be given effect in accordance with testator's intention, as found from its language, aided by such extrinsic facts as may be admissible for that purpose.

2. Wills ⚡448—Will given Interpretation making it operative rather than inoperative; Interpretation disposing of property preferred.

A will must be given interpretation which will make it operative rather than inoperative, and an interpretation by which it disposes of the property dealt with is to be preferred to one which creates an intestacy.

3. Wills ⚡689—Codicil in will held to manifest intention by testatrix to give niece a life estate and to reserve to her testamentary control of the remainder.

Where testatrix's will manifested an intention to make her niece the sole devisee and legatee of her estate, codicil revoking such devise and bequeathing property in trust for the niece, and authorizing niece to dispose of remainder, and permitting trustee to apply the principal of the trust for the benefit of the niece, held to manifest an intention to give the niece a life estate and to reserve unto her testamentary control of the remainder if she choose to exercise her right, which right could only accrue on condition that she survived testatrix.

4. Wills ⚡694—Interest of heir at law as remainderman not defeated, where devisee's power of appointment in will never came into existence.

Under codicil in will by which testatrix gave her niece a life estate and reserved unto her testamentary control of the remainder if she chose to exercise it, and in default thereof to her heirs at law, and niece having predeceased testatrix, and having no lineal descendants, devise to her lapsed, and power of appointment never came into existence, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1310, 1344, thereby not defeating interest of niece's heir at law as remainderman.

5. Executors and administrators ⚡314(12)—Implied finding of probate court that testatrix did not intend to incorporate her niece's will into her own will cannot be disturbed.

On appeal from decree directing distribution of testatrix's estate, implied finding of probate court that testatrix did not intend to incorporate her niece's will, or any part thereof, in her own will, cannot be disturbed.

6. Wills ⚡98—Evidence held not to show that testatrix intended to incorporate her niece's will into her own will.

Evidence held not to show that testatrix intended to incorporate her niece's will, or any part thereof, into her own will.

8. Wills ⚡694—Interest of remainderman not defeated because whole trust scheme was dissipated on death of testatrix.

Under will by which testatrix devised all her property, real and personal, to her niece, in trust, with power to dispose of remainder if she chose to exercise it, and in default thereof to her heirs at law, that whole trust scheme was dissipated on death of niece prior to testatrix held not to defeat interest of niece's heir at law as remainderman, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 741, 742.

9. Stipulations ⚡21—Exclusion of stipulation not erroneous, where it would not have been of any assistance to court in determining issues properly before it.

In proceedings for distribution of testatrix's estate, exclusion of stipulation constituting a statement of the facts held not erroneous, where there was nothing in stipulation that was not before the court, or would have been of any assistance to it in determining issues properly before it.

10. Executors and administrators — 314 (7) — Illness of testatrix when executing codicil held immaterial, in absence of claim of incompetency or testamentary incapacity.

In proceeding for distribution of estate of testatrix, that testatrix was ill and in hospital at time she executed codicil bequeathing all her property in trust to her niece, and that her illness grew progressively worse until her death, held immaterial, in absence of a claim of incompetency or testamentary incapacity.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Gertrude G. McCurdy, deceased. From a decree directing distribution to Nannie Louise Hart Van Sauter and another, Elizabeth C. Ames and others appeal. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Heaney, Price & Postel, of Santa Barbara, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Gertrude G. McCurdy and Louise E. Hart were aunt and niece, respectively. Both were spinsters and for a number of years immediately prior to the death of the niece, which occurred August 2, 1921, had made their homes together at the city of Santa Barbara, this state. At the time of her demise the niece was about 51 years of age. The aunt died March 15, 1922, at the age of about 72 years, having survived the niece by about 7 months. It was stipulated at the hearing in the court below that at the time of the death of said Louise E. Hart she was unmarried and left neither issue nor mother nor father surviving, but that she did leave surviving her Nannie Louise Hart Van Sauter, a sister of her deceased father, and Gertrude G. McCurdy, a sister of her deceased mother; further, that Nannie Louise Hart Van Sauter survived Gertrude G. McCurdy.

As to Gertrude G. McCurdy, it was stipulated that at the time of her death she left neither issue, nor husband, nor father, nor mother surviving; that the brothers and sisters of her father and mother had predeceased her; and that all of the children of said brothers and sisters had also predeceased said Gertrude G. McCurdy. Then follows a long list of children of the children of deceased brothers and sisters of the father and mother of said Gertrude G. McCurdy, within which the appellants are included. Thus it will be observed that the degree of relationship that existed between Gertrude G. McCurdy, deceased, and the contending heirs, was somewhat remote.

By her will, executed October 14, 1915, Gertrude G. McCurdy devised and bequeathed all of her property, both real and personal, to her niece, Louise E. Hart, naming therein certain persons to whom she requested her said niece to give something by way of a remembrance if the request should meet the approval of said niece, and if it did not meet with her approval she was not required to regard it. No bonds were required of the niece as executrix, and she given full power to sell and dispose of all property belonging to the estate without applying to the court for leave to do so, and if said niece should not wish to act as executrix she was given the power to nominate some one to act in her place and stead with like powers as were conferred upon her.

On August 30, 1920, Gertrude G. McCurdy executed a codicil to her said will last above mentioned by which she republished said will and testament except in so far as the same was changed or modified by said codicil. That portion of said will by which she gave, devised, and bequeathed all of her property, real and personal, to her niece, Louise E. Hart, was by said codicil revoked, and in lieu thereof she gave, devised, and bequeathed all of her said property to the First National Bank of Santa Barbara, to be held by it in trust, nevertheless, upon the following express trust and conditions:

"To hold and manage the same, receiving the net income therefrom and after the payment of all taxes, assessments, costs, charges and expenses incurred in the care, administration and protection of the trust estate and the protection of this trust and its defense against legal or equitable attack by any person, both during and after probate proceedings of my estate, to pay the net income received and derived from said trust estate to the said Louise E. Hart for and during her natural life. Upon and on the demise of the said Louise E. Hart, this trust shall cease and terminate and the entire corpus and unexpended income shall be paid over and distributed by said trustee in the manner and in the proportions as the said Louise E. Hart shall by her last will and testament provide, and in default thereof to her heirs at law."

"Second: If in the absolute and uncontrolled discretion of said trustee the net income from the trust estate should not be sufficient to provide for the reasonable needs and comforts of said Louise E. Hart, during any period or periods of her illness or other want or necessity, said trustee may, and it is hereby authorized and empowered, but it shall in no event be required so to do, and as often as it shall deem necessary, pay to or use, apply or expend for the use and benefit of said Louise E. Hart such portions of the principal of the trust estate, up to and including the whole thereof as said trustee, in its absolute discretion, may determine to be adequate to provide for said Louise E. Hart during such period or periods."

The same request made in the will as to the mementos was repeated in the codicil, with the further provision that the First National Bank of Santa Barbara be requested and authorized to make the selection of said mementos with the approval of said Louise E. Hart.

On March 16, 1921, Louise E. Hart made the following olographic will:

"March 16, 1921.

"After all my just & Lawful debts are paid, I, Louise E. Hart (spinster) of the City of Santa Barbara, California, do hereby Will and Bequeath to my aunt Gertrude G. McCurdy, any and all of my property & Possessions.

"Any other Relatives, or any other claimants, whomsoever to my Will, to be given only the sum of One Dollar ($1.00), if claim is made.

"Except Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) left to my chinese cook, Gin Kee, for his faithfulness & Care during my long illness.

Harry Ross, Attorney-at-law, of the City of Santa Barbara, California, to act as my executor, without bond.

"I revoke all other wills heretofore made by me, No other Will or Claimant to Will, to be given recognition by law."

The foregoing includes all of the provisions of each of the respective wills which at all bear upon the questions presented upon the appeal. No question of a want of testamentary capacity on the part of either testatrix or undue influence is raised. The construction to be placed upon the wills and the effectiveness of each considered with reference to the order of the deaths of the respective testatrices are the outstanding points in the case. The appraised value of the aunt's estate was about $60,000, and that of the niece was about $23,000.

[1, 2] The niece having predeceased the aunt, her estate was in the course of administration in the probate court when the aunt died. In due course the niece's estate was distributed to the First National Bank of Santa Barbara, as the executor of the estate of said Gertrude G. McCurdy, deceased. The probate court, in the estate of the aunt, Gertrude G. McCurdy, found that the will of Louise E. Hart was inoperative and ineffectual to dispose of any portion of the trust estate created by the last will and testament of Gertrude G. McCurdy, and further found that the only heir at law of said Louise E. Hart left surviving was Nannie Louise Hart Van Sauter, a sister of the deceased father of said Louise E. Hart. Distribution was thereupon made of the entire estate of the said Gertrude G. McCurdy to Nannie Louise Hart Van Sauter. The heirs at law of the said Gertrude G. McCurdy, deceased, have appealed from said order of distribution. In considering the effect of the will of Gertrude G. McCurdy it is necessary to bear in mind certain well-established rules of construction. A succinct restatement of the rule is found in the Estate of Phelps, 182 Cal. 752, 190 P. 17. It is there said:

"The will must be given effect in accordance with the intention of the testator, as found from the language of the will, * * * aided by such extrinsic facts as may be admissible for that purpose. A will must be given an interpretation which will make it operative, rather than one which will render it inoperative, and an interpretation by which it disposes of the property dealt with is to be preferred to one which creates an intestacy."

[3, 4] We think the language of the will of 1915 and the codicil of 1920 leaves little room for doubt as to what the intention of Gertrude G. McCurdy was as to the final disposition of her estate. By the will it was her clear intention to make her niece the sole devisee and legatee of her estate. In fact, that is what she did in unmistakable language. In the event that she, in the order of time, should predecease the niece and the latter should die intestate, all of the property bequeathed by the aunt to the niece would, under the law of succession, pass to the heirs of said niece. If, however, the niece should elect to make a will, the estate that came to her from the aunt would pass to the persons whom the niece preferred. Failing to evidence a contrary desire the aunt's estate would go to the niece's heirs. Such was the effect of the will. The codicil was intended to give the niece a life estate and reserve unto the niece testamentary control of the remainder if she chose to exercise her right. The right to exercise testamentary control over the aunt's estate could only accrue upon condition that the niece should survive the aunt.

The intention of the testatrix is not only clearly expressed by the language of both will and codicil, but is materially supported by extrinsic facts and circumstances. The aunt's reasons for establishing a testamentary trust in August, 1920, about one year before the niece's death, are not stated in express terms. It will be noted, however, that the niece in providing a legacy of $500 for a Chinese servant in the household gave as her reason for so doing that said legacy was given as a reward for his faithfulness and care of her during her long illness. By the testamentary trust created by the codicil the aunt made provision for the niece's needs during any period or periods of illness, as the necessities of the situation, in the judgment of the trustee, might require. It may reasonably be inferred that one of the considerations that moved the aunt to latterly create a trust by codicil was to relieve her niece of the burdens of business cares that would have been cast upon her in the management of an estate of considerable magnitude. It will be noted that she gave her the whole income of her estate and made, or attempted to make, provision for the use of any part of, or the consumption of the entire corpus of the estate, if the income should for any reason, in the judgment of the trustee, be insufficient to comfortably maintain said niece. Further, she adopted a clause intending thereby to confer upon her the power of appointment, the power of directing to whom the remainder should pass, and, if the power should not be exercised by said niece, the estate was not to revert to the aunt's heirs, but it was to vest in the heirs of the niece, just as it would have done had the aunt predeceased the niece under the will and before the annexation of the codicil.

Counsel have devoted much time to a discussion of the proper construction to be placed upon the following clause of the codicil:

"Upon and on the demise of the said Louise E. Hart, this trust shall cease and terminate and the entire corpus and unexpended income shall be paid over and distributed by said trustee in the manner and in the proportions as the said Louise E. Hart shall by her last Will and Testament provide, and in default thereof to her heirs at law."

The trust plan could become effective only upon the death of the aunt and the income could be paid to the niece only after an estate came into being which must depend upon the death of the testatrix. The language is open to the construction placed upon it by respondent and the execution of the trust would compel such a construction.

[5] The estate devised or bequeathed by the aunt to the niece, the latter having predeceased her testatrix and there being no lineal descendants of the niece—which is a necessary condition to bring the case within the provisions of section 1310, Civil Code—any devise or legacy made to the niece lapsed. The power of appointment given to the niece fell with the life estate which preceded it. That power did not and could not come into existence until the death of said aunt, and, as the only person who could have exercised the power was dead before that time, the power itself never came into existence. It is as if no such power had been created by the will of the aunt. Curley v. Lynch, 206 Mass. 289, 92 N. E. 429; In re Moore's Estate (Sur.) 162 N. Y. S. 213; Farwell on Powers, § 226; Sugden on Powers (8th Ed.) 460; In re Piffard's Estate, 111 N. Y. 410, 18 N. E. 718, 2 L. R. A. 193; Condit v. De Hart, 62 N. J. Law, 78, 40 A. 776; In re Fowles' Will, 222 N. Y. 222, 118 N. E. 611, Ann. Cas. 1918D. 834; 31 Cyc. 1053. This being so, the right of the respondent to take as a remainderman cannot be questioned. Section 1344, Civil Code, provides as follows:

"The death of a devisee or legatee of a limited interest before the testator's death does not defeat the interests of persons in remainder, who survive the testator."

The language found in the Estate of Gregory, 12 Cal. App. 309, 107 P. 566, a case not unlike the one before us, is apposite to the situation. It is there said:

"The fact that the wife never lived to become the beneficiary of the trust created in her favor is no reason for holding that the subsequent provision of the will directing the disposition of the fund should be defeated."

[6, 7] The physical facts of the case are that the aunt was 21 years the senior of the niece. If the former anticipated surviving the latter, and as the provisions of the will would indicate, there would have been no reason for the aunt to incorporate any part of the niece's will into her will. No specific reference whatsoever is made by the aunt to any will that may be made by the niece and there is no general language which would have justified the probate court in holding that the aunt intended to incorporate the niece's will, or any part thereof, into her own will. The rule of incorporation by reference has no room for play in this case as the evidence does not tend to establish that the aunt had any such purpose. The implied finding of the court is to the contrary and its finding in this respect cannot be disturbed. The aunt was dealing solely with her own estate, and there is nothing in the will of either the aunt or the niece or the circumstances attending the execution of either of said instruments to indicate that the aunt and niece intended to make conjoint or mutual wills, or that either was acting with a knowledge as to what disposition the other should make of her estate. Relatively, in point of time, the wills were made far apart with different persons named as executors. One was drawn with all the formalities of testamentary prerequisites and witnessed, while the other is olographic. There are no expressions in either that would suggest concert of action or incorporation by reference. Estate of Plumel, 151 Cal. 77, 90 P. 192, 121 Am. St. Rep. 100.

[8] The contention of appellants that it was the purpose of the aunt that her estate should be distributed by the trustee in the same manner and proportions as the niece should devise her own estate is not sustained by the context of the aunt's will. It is fairly apparent from the language of the codicil that it was the intention of the aunt that the niece, in disposing of the aunt's estate, should have knowledge of that fact; knowledge that it was the aunt's estate and not her own, merely. It was not, we think, the intention and desire of the aunt that the niece should dispose of a valuable estate without knowledge of the magnitude of her testamentary act. Doubtless the aunt expected the niece to survive her and such a contingency would have given to the niece all the light necessary to guide her in her testamentary right. At the time the aunt died she was about 72 years of age and in all probability infirm with the weight of her years. Her death occurred about 18 months following the day she executed the codicil. The niece predeceased her by about 7 months, and during this intervening period of time she could have, provided she had the testamentary capacity and the inclination, made a subsequent will. This she did not do. It may be that after the niece's death she became indifferent as to the devolution of her estate, or that she was satisfied for reasons of her own to have her estate descend to her niece's heirs, a contingency she had provided for. It would seem that each of the testatrices preferred the heirs of the other to her own.

We are not concerned with the question whether or not powers of appointment are valid in this state (21 Cal. Jur. 426), since the repeal by the Legislature in 1874 of the title in the Civil Code relating to powers (Code Amendments 1873-74, p. 223), inasmuch as the power created in the instant case failed upon the death of the donee, as above pointed out, and there was no one remaining to exercise it. It is as if no such power was created by the codicil.

[9] It is the claim of appellant that the whole trust scheme of the codicil was invalid and must fail. As a matter of fact, the whole trust scheme was dissipated upon the death of the owner of the equitable life estate, to wit, Louise E. Hart, the niece of the testatrix. But such a contingency could not defeat the interest of the remainderman. Sections 741, 742, Civ. Code, supra. The trustee had no opportunity to exercise the discretion reposed by the testatrix in it. However this may be, the discretionary power reposed in the trustee is clearly severable from other parts of the trust instrument which are undoubtedly valid. The discretionary powers are contained within a separate paragraph and follow the imperative duties cast upon the trustee to pay to the beneficiary the entire income from a $60,000 estate. Ordinarily, one would suppose that the income from such an estate, clear and free from indebtedness, would be sufficient to maintain one person. The testatrix, however, in her anxiety for the welfare and comfort of her niece and to insure her against the hazards of misfortune, after having made it the imperative duty to pay to the beneficiary a certain, fixed amount, reposed in the trustee a discretion as to what greater amount should be expended for the niece, if, in its judgment, her comfort should require the expenditure of any sum beyond the amount which would seem to be ordinarily sufficient for her needs. Resting its contention upon the Estate of Sanford, 136 Cal. 97, 68 P. 494, appellants argue that the whole trust scheme must fail because of the discretion alternatively placed in the power of the trustee. There are authorities in this state and elsewhere which would seem to uphold the trust provisions contained in the testatrix's codicil. This is a question, however, not necessary for decision inasmuch as the subject-matter contained in the discretionary provisions is not inextricably interwoven or interrelated with other provisions of the trust instrument which are clearly valid. Sacramento Bank v. Montgomery, 146 Cal.

[10] A brief statement of facts was agreed upon by counsel in the case with the right of objection reserved. Appellants offered the stipulation in evidence and respondents made appropriate objections thereto. The stipulation was excluded by the court. There is nothing in the stipulation of facts of a material character that was not before the court. We cannot see that it would have been of any assistance to the court in determining the issues properly before it. The fact that the aunt was ill and in a hospital at the time she executed the codicil, to wit, August 20, 1920, and that her illness grew progressively worse until her death, March 15, 1922, was not material, in the absence of a claim of incompetency or testamentary incapacity, which claim was not made upon the trial of the case. No claim was made that she was by fraud or trick deprived of an opportunity to have executed a subsequent will if she had so desired.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

2. Indictment and information $\S$ 15(4)—After demurrer sustained to original indictment, second or amended indictment not filed or presented without court order.

In view of Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008, neither can district attorney file nor grand jury present amended or second indictment, where a demurrer has been sustained to original, without obtaining court order either permitting indictment to be amended or submitting case to same or another grand jury.

3. Indictment and information $\S$ 15(5)—Generally, grand jury need not hear additional testimony to return second indictment.

Generally, when second indictment is returned by same grand jury which found original one, it may rely on evidence given on hearing, which resulted in return of the original indictment, and need not hear additional testimony.

Indictment for perjury, containing large portion of testimony given by defendant as witness before grand jury in an investigation of attempt to bribe deputy sheriff, held good as against general and special demurrers, each particular in which violation of defendant's oath was charged not being required, under Pen. Code, § 954, to be pleaded in a separate count.

5. Perjury ⚡34(4)—Evidence held to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for perjury in connection with grand jury's investigation of alleged bribery of deputy sheriff, evidence of two witnesses and handwriting expert that accused was person who left money at drug store being inconsistent with accused's sworn testimony before grand jury that he did not do so, held sufficient to support verdict of conviction.

6. Perjury ⚡29(2)—If evidence sustained one or more assignments, other charges need not be proved.

While indictment may embrace two or more assignments of perjury, if evidence sustained one or more of assignments, it is not necessary for prosecution to prove all charges.

7. Perjury ⚡33(1) — Circumstantial evidence alone not sufficient to support charge.

Positive evidence is absolutely necessary to support charge of perjury, and circumstantial evidence alone is never sufficient.

8. Criminal law ⚡494—No distinction made between expert testimony and other evidence as to its weight or preference.

In perjury prosecution, testimony of handwriting expert and other witnesses that accused left money at drug store held positive evidence; there being no distinction between expert testimony and other evidence as to its weight or preference.

9. Perjury ⚡34(4) — Corroboration of witnesses held sufficient.

In prosecution for perjury, testimony of drug store attendants and handwriting expert establishing falsity of accused's statements before grand jury that he did not leave package containing money at drug store held sufficiently corroborated by other testimony to meet requirements of Pen. 10. Perjury ⚡34(4)—Corroboration of testimony in perjury prosecution held same as that required to corroborate testimony of accomplice.

Corroboration required under Pen. Code, § 1103a, providing that perjury must be proved by testimony of two witnesses or of one witness and corroborating circumstances, is same as that required under section 1111, regarding testimony of an accomplice.

11. Criminal law ⚡876½—Verdict treated as general verdict finding defendant guilty of crime for which he was tried.

Where after accused pleaded to indictment and before trial second indictment was returned, and where not only court and prosecution but accused treated indictments, after order of consolidation, as one indictment, verdict may be treated as general verdict finding defendant guilty as charged under actions as consolidated.

12. Criminal law ⚡876½—Failure of jury to render verdict on first indictment held not an acquittal of assignments of perjury therein.

Where after plea to first indictment of perjury, second indictment was returned and order of consolidation of actions was made, failure of jury to render verdict on first indictment held not an acquittal of assignments of perjury contained in second indictment, which were also charged in first, since defendant was not acquitted of assignments of perjury in first indictment by failure to render verdict on charges therein.

13. Criminal law ⚡1134(2)—Court not precluded from considering evidence applicable to first indictment in determining its sufficiency to support verdict.

Where, after plea to first indictment, second indictment was returned and actions consolidated, since appellant was not acquitted of assignments of perjury in first indictment by failure of jury to render verdict on charges therein, appellate court was not precluded from considering evidence applicable to assignments of perjury set forth therein in determining whether evidence was sufficient to support verdict of guilty on second indictment.

14. Criminal law ⚡371(12)—Admitting testimony as to alleged conspiracy involving forger held without error.

Where defendant was charged with perjury in testimony given before grand jury which was investigating alleged bribery of deputy sheriff, it was not error to permit testimony as to alleged conspiracy between defendant and another which involved forging and uttering of bail bonds, and which tended to show motive of defendant for assisting the other by supplying money with which to bribe officer, as against objection that such testimony tended to prove another offense of which defendant had been acquitted.

15. Criminal law ⚡369(2) — Generally, evidence showing accused guilty of other crimes held inadmissible, but exception thereto is where evidence directly proves crime charged.

It is general rule that evidence showing accused guilty of crimes other than for which he is on trial is inadmissible against him, but exception to rule is that where evidence to which objection has been made, although it shows defendant guilty of other crimes, tends directly to prove crime for which he is being tried.

16. Criminal law ⚡369(1)—Verdict of acquittal held not to render evidence of other crimes inadmissible.

Verdict of acquittal does not render evidence of other crimes, although they were made subject to prior indictments and defendant had been tried thereon and acquitted of them, inadmissible in subsequent action against defendant on another and different charge.

17. Criminal law ⚡374—Refusal to admit record of former actions to show defendant's acquittal held without error.

In prosecution for perjury, where only objection to evidence relative to forging of bail bonds by defendant and another was that it was inadmissible as showing defendant guilty of crime other than one for which he was being tried, and record of defendant's acquittal of such crime was offered only to prove estoppel and thereby prevent prosecution from proving defendant's connection with such bonds, for which purpose it was inadmissible, error cannot be predicated on refusal to admit record on ground that it would have tended to weaken case of state by showing that defendant had been acquitted of such charge.

18. Witnesses ⚡380(5)—Not permissible for party calling witness to prove his previous statements, which, if sworn to at trial, would make out his case.

Where witness called by party has failed to testify to all that party desired, but has not given testimony against him, it is not permissible for party calling him to prove that he had previously made statements which, if sworn to at trial, would make out his case.

19. Witnesses ⚡389—Permitting prosecution to prove statements of witness before grand jury held erroneous.

In prosecution for perjury it was error to permit prosecution to prove statements of its witness before grand jury as to what defendant had told him, in view of fact that witness did not deny having such conversation, but testified he did not remember it.

20. Criminal law ⚡829(12)—Refusal of defendant's instructions on corroborating evidence held without error.

In prosecution for perjury, where jury were repeatedly instructed that defendant could be convicted only if alleged false statements were proved beyond reasonable doubt by testimony of two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances, and "corroborate" and "corroboration" were properly defined, there was no error in refusing defendant's instruction on corroborating evidence.

21. Criminal law ⚡823(2)—Instruction assuming fact of offense held not misleading in view of other instructions.

In prosecution for perjury, instruction on necessity and effect of corroboration, if subject to criticism as assuming that defendant made false statements charged, held not prejudicial in view of other instructions clearly removing any tendency of such instruction to mislead jury.

22. Perjury ⚡37(4)—Instruction on corroborating evidence held not misleading.

In prosecution for perjury, where court instructed that defendant could not be convicted unless statements charged to be false were proved beyond reasonable doubt by two witnesses, or by one witness and corroborating circumstances, instruction that to corroborate means to strengthen, to make more certain, and to add weight or credibility to a thing, and evidence which did any of those things was evidence which corroborated, and corroborating evidence held not to be misleading.

23. Criminal law ⚡823(4)—Instruction in language of Code held without error.

In perjury prosecution, instruction in language of Pen. Code, § 125, that an unqualified statement of that which one does not know to be true is equivalent to a statement of that which one knows to be false, held not error, in view of further instruction that false testimony must be corrupt and willful, and ignorance of true facts, inadvertence, or mistake are not substitutes for willfulness or corruptness.

24. Perjury ⚡37(1)—Refusal of confusing instructions held without error.

In prosecution for perjury there was no error in refusing defendant's instruction that a magistrate, in proving bail bonds, has legal right to assume that persons qualifying thereon are in truth and fact the persons whom they purport and claim to be when they appear before him to justify, such instruction being confusing and not a correct statement of law.

25. Bail ⚡49—Duty of magistrate in accepting bail stated.

It is duty of magistrate in accepting bail, to the very limit of his knowledge and in the exercise of greatest care, to see that bond he accepts is legal in form, that sureties are persons they purport to be, and that they are able to respond to full extent of penalty.

26. Bail ⚡47—Refusal of instruction that any committing magistrate may accept bail held without error.

In prosecution for perjury, there was no error, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 1277, 1280, 1281, in refusing defendant's instruction that any committing magistrate may accept bail or approve bail bonds whether the person admitted to bail was so admitted by such committing magistrate or any other.

27. Criminal law ⚡1170½(5)—Error in permitting prosecution to cross-examine its witness by reading his testimony before grand jury held not to require reversal.

In prosecution for perjury, error in permitting prosecution to cross-examine its witness by reading to him portions of his testimony before grand jury held not to justify the appellate court in reversing conviction where there still remained testimony sufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Channing Follette was convicted of perjury, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; Lennon, J., dissenting.

Robert M. Clarke, Paul W. Schenck, H. L. Giesler, and Leon R. Yankwich, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

CURTIS, J. An indictment against the appellant was returned by the grand jury of the county of Los Angeles charging him with the crime of perjury. Certain testimony was set out in said indictment which it was alleged therein was given by the appellant while testifying as a witness before said grand jury, and it was charged in said indictment that said testimony was false and untrue, and that appellant at the time he gave the same knew it to be false and untrue. Only a small portion of the testimony of appellant, given at the time he was before the grand jury, was set forth in this indictment. The appellant was arraigned upon said indictment and pleaded not guilty to the charge therein contained, and the action was set for trial. Thereafter and some two weeks before the day of trial the same grand jury without calling any additional witnesses or without taking any further testimony whatever and without any leave or order of court either permitting any amendment to said indictment or directing the filing of a new indictment, or directing the case to be resubmitted to the same or another grand jury, returned a second indictment against appellant, again charging him with the crime of perjury. In this new indictment, not only was the testimony which was contained in the original indictment and which was therein made the basis of the charge of perjury against the defendant, set forth, but other and further testimony, alleged therein to have been given by appellant while testifying as such witness before said grand jury, was set out in said new indictment, and the whole thereof was in said new indictment charged to be false and untrue, and to have been made by appellant with knowledge of its falsity and untruthfulness. A motion was made to set aside this new indictment upon all the statutory grounds. This motion was denied.

[1] The first point made by appellant for a reversal of the judgment herein is based upon the refusal of the court to grant his said motion to set aside said second indictment. The principal ground urged by appellant in support of said motion, and the only one which we will consider upon this appeal, was that said second indictment was not legally found by the grand jury for the reasons: First, that said grand jury was without jurisdiction or power to consider the matter without an order of resubmission; and secondly, that said grand jury was without authority to find said new indictment without hearing further and additional testimony to that presented to them at the original hearing.

As to the power of the grand jury to return a second indictment against a defendant for the same offense charged in the first, the rule is stated in Corpus Juris as follows:

"It is generally held that a grand jury may find a valid indictment notwithstanding another indictment is pending against accused for the same offense, and the pendency of the other indictment, where there has been no conviction or jeopardy thereon, is not ground for a plea either in abatement or in bar of the second indictment, * * * although as a rule accused can be tried or put in jeopardy only on one. It has been so held, even though defendant has been arraigned and a plea of not guilty entered on the first indictment." 31 C. J. p. 598.

[2] Numerous authorities are cited by the author of the above work in support of this rule, and they appear generally to sustain the text. Appellant has called our attention to a number of cases decided by the Supreme and appellate courts of this state which hold in effect that neither can the district attorney file nor the grand jury present an amended or second indictment where a demurrer has been sustained to the original indictment without obtaining an order of court either permitting the indictment to be amended or submitting the case to the same or another grand jury. This is in accord with section 1008 of the Penal Code, and is undoubtedly the rule enunciated in the following cases: Ex parte Williams, 116 Cal. 512, 48 P. 499; Copeland v. Superior Court, 62 Cal. App. 316, 217 P. 573; Ex parte Hayter, 16 Cal. App. 211, 116 P. 370. These cases are not decisive of the point now under consideration, for the reason that no demurrer was sustained to the original indictment returned herein against the defendant, but the district attorney, for reasons best known to himself, had the grand jury return a second indictment while the original indictment was in full force and after the defendant had entered his plea thereto.

The case of Thompson v. United States, 202 F. 401, 120 C. C. A. 575, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206, is a case very similar to the present action. This case arose in this state, but was brought in the federal courts, and the decision rendered by the Circuit Court of Appeals was made in reference to the practice established by our Penal Code in criminal actions. In that action a second indictment had been returned against the defendant, in which he was accused of the identical crime embraced in the first indictment after he had entered his plea and the case had been set for trial. It does not appear that the court made any order permitting the district attorney to amend the indictment or directing the case to be resubmitted to the grand jury. The court said, at page 403 (120 C. C. A. 577):

"The contention is that under the law of California, which it is said became the rule of practice for the federal courts in that state, a grand jury which has once indicted a defendant is disqualified to bring in a second indictment against him charging him with the same offense. * * * Counsel for plaintiff in error cite three decisions: People v. Hanstead, 135 Cal. 149, 67 P. 763; People v. Bright, 157 Cal. 663, 109 P. 33; People v. Landis, 139 Cal. 426, 73 P. 153. * * * It is to be observed that all of the decisions of the Supreme Court of California above cited were rendered prior to the change in section 1008 of the Penal Code, which was made in 1905. * * * The section as amended substitutes for the last clause the following: 'Directs the case to be submitted to the same or another grand jury'—thereby declaring the law of the state to be that a grand jury which had once found an indictment against a defendant was not disqualified to find a second indictment against him upon the same facts, a wise provision of law, and we may well wonder why it should ever have been held otherwise, as no substantial reason is apparent why a grand jury, after having once found an indictment which is discovered to be defective in form, may not, upon the information which it has acquired, and with the same conviction, based upon that information, that the defendant should be brought to trial, present a second indictment for the same offense."

It may be true, as suggested by appellant, that the point made in that action in support of the motion to quash the indictment was that "a grand jury which has once indicted a defendant is disqualified to bring a second indictment against him, charging him with the same offense," but the court, in deciding said motion adversely to the accused, must necessarily have held that the grand jury had a right to return the second indictment without any order of court directing a resubmission of the case, for the reason we think the record plainly shows that no such order was made by the trial court.

In Kalloch v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 229, the defendant was prosecuted by information. After an order made setting aside the first information, a second information for the same offense was filed by the district attorney, without any order by the court directing the filing of the same. Prior to the making of said order of dismissal, however, a second complaint had been filed against the defendant, charging him with the same crime set out in the first information. The defendant moved to set aside the second information, and his motion was denied. The defendant then instituted a proceeding to prohibit the superior court from proceeding with the trial of the defendant on the ground that all proceedings under the second information were absolutely void and the court was without jurisdiction of the defendant. In denying this petition, the Supreme Court, on page 236, disposes of this question as follows:

"But was it a material fact in the case, that the second prosecution was commenced before the first was ended? Suppose the prosecution had been by indictment, would the pendency of the indictment affect the right of the prosecution to present another for the same offense? This question is answered in the negative by a multitude of authorities, a few of which we will notice. In the case of Dutton v. The State, 5 Ind. 534, it was held, that 'another indictment pending for the same offense constitutes no ground of abatement. This, in criminal prosecutions, seems to be the settled rule.' 1 Chitty's Crim. L. 447. In the case of the Commonwealth v. Murphy, 11 Cush.

(Mass.) 472, the court says, that 'the pendency of one indictment is no ground for plea in abatement to another indictment in the same court for the same cause.' In the case of Miazza v. The State, 36 Miss. 616, the court decided, that 'the motion in arrest of judgment, on the ground that other indictments of similar import were then pending in the same court against the same defendant, was properly overruled.' In United States v. Herbert, 5 Cranch, C. C. 87, Chief Justice Cranch said, that 'the pendency of another indictment against the defendant for the same offense is no ground for arresting the judgment.' The last authority to which we will refer on this subject is Wharton's Criminal Pleading and Practice, § 452, where the author says: 'It has been ruled that, though the defendant has pleaded to a former indictment for the same offense, the fact of the former indictment being still pending is no bar to a trial on the second.' It is true, that all the foregoing cases refer to indictments, but the rule is equally applicable to an information, as the latter is simply designed to serve the purpose and take the place of the former. Each is but an accusation, in legal form, of the offense with which the prisoner stands charged, and for which he is to be placed upon trial. We can, therefore, see nothing in the provisions of the Penal Code, or in the general principles of law, applicable to proceedings in criminal cases, which in any manner affect the regularity and validity of the second information, on the ground above stated."

In People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 50 P. 15, the court had under consideration section 1008 of the Penal Code. In that case the information had been filed charging the defendant with the crime of robbery. The defendant pleaded not guilty to the charge, and his case was set for trial. After the jury had been sworn to try the case, the district attorney discovered that the information was fatally defective in that it failed to allege the ownership of the property stolen. Thereupon, and upon his motion, the court dismissed the information and discharged the defendant, without making any order that a new information be filed. The district attorney, nevertheless, thereafter filed a new information charging the defendant with the same crime which had been attempted to be charged in the original information. It was claimed by the appellant therein that under section 1008 of the Penal Code the prosecution was barred because of the failure of the court to direct the filing of a new information. The Supreme Court, however, held that section 1008 was applicable only when a demurrer had been filed to the information and had been allowed by the court. The court on page 28 (50 P. 16), disposed of appellant's contention as follows:

"The question does not, in my opinion, necessarily arise, for the reason that no demurrer to the information appears to have been filed. It is by the terms of the statute in the case of demurrer allowed that the judgment becomes a bar unless the court directs a new information to be filed. The section does not apply to a case where no demurrer is interposed, or, if interposed, is disallowed. This clearly appears from preceding and subsequent sections of the same chapter."

We can conceive of no reason why any different rule should prevail in the case where the accused is being prosecuted by an indictment instead of by an information. There are a few cases in other jurisdictions holding a contrary doctrine, but these cases we think are exceptions to the general rule which permits the return of a second indictment without any order of court directing the case to be resubmitted.

Important changes have been made in recent years in the criminal procedure of our state, the evident purpose of which was to remove the restrictions which were formerly placed upon prosecuting officers in instituting and conducting criminal proceedings. In 1905 (St. 1905, p. 773), section 1008 was amended so as to permit a resubmission of the case to the same grand jury in the event of a demurrer thereto being sustained, and, in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 436), this section was further amended so as to permit an indictment or information to be amended by the district attorney without leave, before the defendant pleads, and by leave of court thereafter. The strict rules prevailing prior to these amendments often hampered prosecuting officers in their attempts to enforce the law, and resulted in many miscarriages of justice. In view of the more liberal rules now prevailing in the institution and conduct of criminal proceedings and after a consideration of the above authorities, we are of the opinion that there is nothing in the law of this state which affects the regularity or validity of the second indictment presented against the defendant.

[3] Neither do we think the court erred in denying appellant's motion to set aside the said indictment on the ground that the grand jury failed to take further evidence before returning the same. The general rule appears to be that when the second indictment is returned by the same grand jury which found the original one, the grand jury may rely upon the evidence given on the hearing, which resulted in the return of the original indictment, and need not hear any additional testimony. 31 C. J. p. 600; People v. Baff, 99 Misc. Rep. 684, 166 N. Y. S. 136; Whiting v. State, 48 Ohio St. 220, 27 N. E. 96. There are a few cases holding a contrary doctrine. Among these latter cases is that of State v. Ivey, 100 N. C. 539, 5 S. E. 407, and cited and relied upon by appellant. Regarding this case the court, in People v. Baff, supra, says:

"To sustain the point made in the first motion, counsel rely on the case of State v. Ivey, 100 N. C. 539, 5 S. E. 407, which supports their contention. I am, however, not inclined to follow that decision, for the reason that it is too technical. It seems to me that it would be an idle ceremony for the same grand jury to rehear the same witnesses, where it is of opinion that sufficient evidence was taken in the first proceeding to meet the objections which resulted in a demurrer being allowed to a defective indictment."

To the same general effect is the case of Whiting v. State, supra.

[4] Appellant interposed a general and special demurrer to the second indictment, which was overruled by the court. Appellant assigns this action of the court as reversible error. The principal contention of appellant in support of his demurrer is that more than one offense was charged in the indictment. The indictment in question consisted of one count, and covered nearly 50 typewritten pages of the clerk's transcript. It contained a large portion, although by no means all, of the testimony given by the appellant while testifying as a witness before the grand jury in an investigation then being made by said grand jury of an attempt to bribe a deputy sheriff of said county. The testimony charged to be perjurious was all given in one proceeding before the grand jury. Appellant contends that, under the practice followed by the district attorney in this action, it is impossible for the appellant, or for that matter for the court, to know of what particular false statement defendant was found guilty; that while all the jurors may have believed that he falsified in some material portion of his testimony, they might wholly disagree as to the particular portion thereof which was false and untrue. Appellant further claims that each violation of his oath, if material, constituted a separate and distinct offense, and, under section 954 of the Penal Code, should be pleaded in separate counts. No authorities have been called to our attention which support this contention of appellant. On the other hand, there appears to be quite an agreement among text-writers and in the adjudicated cases that it is proper to include in an indictment all the material testimony which it is claimed is false. "An indictment or information charging perjury may join, in one count, all the particulars in which the accused is alleged to have testified falsely, although the assignments are in relation to separate and distinct false statements, where all the statements assigned as false were made under oath and in one proceeding." Wharton's Criminal Procedure, vol. 2 (3d Ed.) § 1069. "An indictment for perjury may embrace in a single count all the particulars in which the defendant is alleged to have sworn falsely." 30 Cyc. of Law and Procedure, p. 1439; Cover v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 8 A. 196; Commonwealth v. Johns, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 274; State v. Bishop, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 120; State v. Bordeaux, 93 N. C. 560; State v. Taylor, 202 Mo. 1, 100 S. W. 41; State v. Joiner, 128 La. 876, 55 So. 560. The court, in State v. Taylor, supra, said:

"Some of the assignments of perjury were more clearly established than others, but there was ample testimony to establish the guilt of the defendant on a number of assignments, and on matters which were material to the issue on the trial of Kelleher, and where this is the case, it is proper to join the various assignments of perjury in one count where they all relate to the same transaction, and, if the evidence sustains one or more of the assignments, it is not necessary that the state should prove all of the charges."

[5] It is next the contention of appellant that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict. A consideration of this claim on the part of appellant will necessitate a statement of some of the facts as shown by the testimony. The verdict being against the defendant, it will be only necessary for us, in stating the facts, to mention those which tend to sustain the verdict. The appellant at the time of his indictment was, and for some two years prior thereto had been, one of the six justices of the peace of the township of Los Angeles. On March 5, 1923, T. J. Gilbert and Sam Johnson, after a preliminary examination, were held to answer for the crime of grand larceny; their bail was fixed at $10,000 each, and, being unable to give the same, they were committed to the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles by Justice of the Peace W. S. Baird, before whom said preliminary examination had been held. While in jail these prisoners made the acquaintance of one Carl V. Lindquist, who was a fellow prisoner with them in the county jail of said county. Lindquist had become acquainted with appellant some time during the preceding December. On April 17, 1923, Lindquist was released from jail. On the same day he visited appellant at his office and, according to his testimony, he arranged with appellant for the release of Gilbert and Johnson from said county jail, for the sum of $1,400, which amount was paid to appellant by Lindquist and Mrs. Gilbert, wife of T. J. Gilbert. On the evening of the day Lindquist was released he appeared at the county jail with two orders, signed by appellant, directing the release of Gilbert and Johnson. On May 1st Gilbert's case was called in the superior court, and upon his failure to appear his bond was forfeited. It was found on investigation that there was no bond on file for either Gilbert or Johnson. Later appellant produced two bonds which he had either at his residence or private law office, and which purported to have been given for the release of Gilbert and Johnson. These bonds bore the names of A. E. Stensbad and T. E. Little, but it later developed that the names of these purported sureties had been forged to the said bonds. Thereupon Lindquist was arrested and charged with the crime of forgery in signing the names of Stensbad and Little to said bonds. While under arrest he attempted to arrange with Deputy Sheriff Reimer, who was investigating said charge of forgery, to "fix" the case for the sum of $700, which he agreed to pay Reimer. Reimer pretended to fall in with the plan, and some days thereafter, the exact date being May 17, 1923, Mrs. Lindquist, wife of Carl V. Lindquist, delivered said sum of $700 to the said Reimer. This money was traced back through Mrs. Lindquist to an attorney named Edgar B. Hervey, who obtained it at a drug store at the corner of Fifth and Broadway in the city of Los Angeles. Just before he had delivered it to Mrs. Lindquist, Hervey had been told by appellant to call at the drug store and ask for a package which had been left there to be delivered to George Allen or Ruth Allen. Upon doing so he was handed a package, which proved to be a loaf of bread wrapped in a towel, and in one end of the loaf of bread were seven $100 bills. These bills Hervey took from the package and delivered to Mrs. Lindquist.

Before a session of the grand jury, held during the latter part of May, 1923, for the purpose of investigating a charge of attempted bribery by Lindquist of said deputy sheriff, the appellant testified, among other things, that on the day the package was delivered to Hervey at the drug store and some hours earlier in the day, probably about 11 o'clock of said day, Hervey came to appellant while the latter was holding court and said that he had a chance to get Mr. Lindquist out on bail if they could raise $700. The transcript of the testimony taken on said hearing then continues as follows:

"I (appellant) asked him how he was to raise the $700. He told me Lindquist had said if he would come to me I knew where he could get the money. Now, Mr. Lindquist had told me, when he first got in this trouble, that if there was an opportunity for him to get out on bail, that he had a friend, whose name I don't know just now, but I can get it—I have a note that I made. As I recall, it was Mr. Rollins, who lives in an apartment house down here—he gave me the number; I don't know which apartment house it was. At the time he gave me the telephone number, and I called up the number, and it was the Pendleton or the Pelton Apartments, and I talked with this man—asked him if he knew Mr. Lindquist; that Mr. Lindquist wished to get $700, if he could, for the purpose of getting his bail produced; and that if he would communicate with Mr. Hervey about the matter, that Mr. Hervey was his attorney and would arrange it. I gave him Mr. Hervey's address, and told him what his phone number was; I am quite sure that that conversation occurred—well, I know it occurred in the morning, because it was after I went to lunch that I got a call back. He wanted to know who I was—very suspicious, apparently. Well, I told him who I was; I had no reason to hide it. I told him I was Channing Follette; that I had known Mr. Lindquist; that this Mr. Lindquist was in trouble, and I didn't believe he was involved in any dishonesty connected with the transaction. He said, 'All right; I will see what I can do, and I will communicate with Mr. Hervey.' I said, 'See Hervey about it and come right down here to the courthouse.' I didn't make any bones about it, and had no reason to. I then heard from this man; it must have been about 12:30 or a quarter to 1 or 1 o'clock. It was either the day or the day before that Mr. Hervey was involved in some trouble. I didn't know anything about Mr. Hervey getting in trouble until after he was involved; I think the next day or two days after. I received a call that an effort had been made to reach Mr. Hervey, and that Mr. Hervey was not available, and the money, for the reason he didn't want to be known in the matter, and he felt his safety and protection required it—this same man that I talked to.

"Q. That is where you got the $700? A. I didn't get the $700; Mr. Rollins was Mr. Lindquist's friend, and he agreed to produce the money; Mr. Rollins said he would check this money for Mr. Hervey—he didn't say 'Mr. Hervey,' but he said he would check the money at the drug store, and if Mr. Hervey would call for the money at the drug store—no, if Mr. Hervey would call and get the check in a telephone booth at the Angelus Hotel, that he could then go and get the money, and Mr. Rollins would not be known—didn't want to be known in the transaction—he would consider himself better off. It looked pretty funny to me, that here is a man going to produce $700, and going in this foolish surreptitious manner to get the money to Mr. Lindquist or Mr. Hervey. He said, 'I don't want to be known; I don't want to be mixed up with Lindquist's affair. I am ready to produce the money, but I don't care to be mixed up in it.'

"Q. That is, Mr. Rollins? A. Yes. I said, 'Well, all right.' And I called up Mr. Hervey on the telephone. I didn't get him right away but apparently when he came in from lunch he called me, or I called him, I don't remember which may have answered or called. I told him about this, where he could get the money. I asked him if he knew anything about Rollins, if Lindquist had talked to him about Rollins, or anything about it; and I told him just what he told me. He said, 'Well, that is all right'; he would get the money. * * * and Mr. Hervey was to go there at a certain time; that is, the money would not be available until a certain time that day—I forget just when it was, but I think around 1 or 1:30—and I went about my business, forgetting about it until I got another telephone call, saying that the money was left in a check room at a drug store, from this same fellow Rollins, whom I had no doubt is available. I have his phone number and all that. Mr. Rollins told me that they didn't give him a check; that one had to call for the money in person. He didn't know who was going to call for it, so he left it for a Mr. or Miss Allen; and that if Mr. Hervey, he didn't say 'Mr. Hervey,' he said if we would go and get the money there, to simply call for a package for that party, and it would be available. I couldn't get Mr. Hervey then, as he had gone out, and I went down to the hotel where I thought Mr. Hervey would be to get the check to get the money, and delivered the message I had received.

"Q. You had told him previously, had you, that you had told Mr. Hervey to go down there to get it? A. I delivered the message I received, that if he would go down there he would get it.

"Q. What was it to be in? A. He said it would be in a package. I then told Mr. Hervey he would have to call for it in person, without a check; that he would simply have to go and ask for this package.

"Q. This was a package of bills, was it, or currency? A. I presume so, he didn't say what form it would be in, but it would be in a package, he said—I don't know.

"Q. You don't know whether it was silver or currency? A. I really don't know; but I don't imagine they would have that much silver; that would be a pretty heavy package. It may have been, though, I don't know; but it was the money, no doubt; and I don't imagine he would leave a check.

"Q. What size was the package? A. I don't know what size the package was. A package of bills would be, I imagine, about that size (indicating), but I don't know; I never saw the package. I didn't go down there and get it, and I didn't talk with him further about it. It may have been silver; I don't know.

"Q. Let's check back a minute: Hervey had gone down here to the hotel, and you had phoned to him at his office and found he had left, and then you went to Hervey? A. I tried to get the message to Mr. Hervey over the telephone that no check—that there wouldn't be anybody there for a check at all; that he would have to go and call for the package in person; and he apparently went and did so. Now, it is just dime novel foolishness that, as I reflect on it, has got my goat.

"Q. Let's see; Hervey, you found him at this hotel; which hotel was it? A. Mr. Hervey was waiting at the hotel.

"Q. Which hotel was it? A. The Angelus Hotel.

"Q. This was about what time of the day? A. Well; it must have been about 1:30.

"Q. What did you say to Hervey then? A. I said I had gotten a phone message that there would not be any check for him; that he would have to go in person and get a package, and ask for a package for Mr. Allen. I had told him that; I remember that very definitely, and whether or not he got it, I don't know. I asked Mr. Hervey if he wouldn't let me know if he got it all right, and let me know what the darned thing was all about, or something of that sort. The mystery of this business of chasing around hotels and things with packages didn't appeal to me very much; but I couldn't see anything wrong in it.

"Q. You didn't see the package? A. No.

"Q. Where did Rollins tell you he had placed the money? A. He told me it was in a drug store, an Owl drug store on Broadway.

"Q. Whereabout in the drug store? A. In a check room in a drug store on Broadway.

"Q. In a check room? A. Yes; he said it was checked—I don't know as he said a check room, but he said it was checked up in an Owl drug store on Broadway. * * *

"Q. Isn't it true that you described to Hervey the character of the package? A. No; I didn't. I didn't know the character of the package; I haven't seen the package to this day, and I couldn't tell you whether it was currency or cash, or what it was. * * *

"Q. And you positively say that you didn't leave that package there? A. Absolutely yes; I did not.

"Mr. Stafford: And you never saw the ticket, or anything at all? A. No, sir.

"Q. I ask you to examine this ticket, and examine the handwriting, 'George Allen or Ruth Allen': Is that your handwriting (showing check to witness)? A. No, sir.

"Q. You never saw this ticket before? A. Never saw it in my life. * * * A. I just called Mr. Rollins once, but he called me twice.

"Q. And he stopped at this apartment house, the one of two names? A. They told me over the phone it went in through an exchange, and they gave me the name of the apartment house.

"Q. And they knew who he was, did they; no trouble about finding him, or who he was? A. I had no trouble at all; they just connected me right away.

"Q. And the house was one of two, you thought? A. The Pendleton or Pelton Apartments."

This testimony, together with numerous repetitions and reiterations of the same, was set out in the indictment. In substance the testimony of appellant before the grand jury might be briefly summarized as follows: That Lindquist, after he had gotten into this trouble regarding the forged bail bonds of Gilbert and Johnson, had told appellant that if there was an opportunity for him to get bail, that he, Lindquist, had a friend whose name was Rollins who would assist him in raising the money necessary to pay for a bail bond; that Rollins lived either at the Pendleton or the Pelton Apartments, and that Lindquist then gave to appellant Rollins' telephone number at these apartments, which appellant then wrote down on one of his cards; that thereafter Hervey came to appellant and told him that Lindquist had a chance to get out on bail if he could raise $700; thereupon appellant rang up Rollins at the Pendleton or Pelton Apartments and told him that Lindquist wished to get $700 with which to get bail, and that if Rollins would communicate with Mr. Hervey, Lindquist's attorney, the latter would arrange it, and that appellant then gave to Rollins Hervey's address; that Rollins said, "All right, I'll see what I can do and I will communicate with Mr. Hervey;" that this conversation occurred sometime before noon, and about 12:30 or a quarter to 1 o'clock, Rollins rang up appellant and told him that he, Rollins, did not want to be known in the matter, but that he would check the money at the drug store, and that a check for the same could be found in a telephone booth at the Angelus Hotel; that thereupon appellant called up Hervey by telephone, or Hervey called up appellant, the latter was not certain, but in this telephone conversation appellant told Hervey where and how he could get the money, but that it would not be available until around 1 or 1:30 o'clock; that later Rollins again called up appellant and told him that the money would be left at the drug store at the corner of Fifth and Broadway, but that there would not be any check for it, but that it would be delivered when asked for in the name of Mr. or Miss Allen; that appellant, on receiving this second message, endeavored to telephone Hervey, but not being able to reach him by phone, he went to the Angelus Hotel, where he found Hervey and communicated to him the contents of Rollins' second message; that appellant did not place the money in the drug store, and that he did not write "George Allen or Ruth Allen" on the card or check which was left with the package containing the money, and that he never saw this card or check before it was shown him at the time he testified before the grand jury, and that he had never seen the money which was delivered to Hervey at the drug store.

At the trial it was shown that there was no apartment house in the city of Los Angeles by the name of Pendleton, but there was one by the name of Pelton Apartments, and that Gilbert, Johnson, and Lindquist resided there during a part of the months of April and May, 1923, when they were not public charges at the county jail. Lindquist testified that he did not know of any person by the name of Rollins; that he never had any conversation with appellant in which the name of Rollins was mentioned; that he never gave appellant any telephone number at which any person by the name of Rollins could be reached, and that he did not know at any time during the months of April and May, 1923, the telephone number of the Pelton Apartments so that he could repeat it without referring to a telephone book, and that the defendant did not in his presence write the name of Rollins with the telephone number on a card; that he knew Gilbert and Johnson, and that he knew Gilbert went at times by the name of Gates, but never knew him by any other name; and that he never knew him by the name of Rollins.

The Pelton Apartments were owned and conducted by two brothers, C. R. Brown and R. B. Brown, during the months of April and May, 1923, and for a long time prior and subsequent thereto. These men testified that no person by the name of Rollins was stopping at said apartment house during the months of April and May, 1923, or at any other time; that they knew Gilbert by the name of Gates, but never knew him by the name of Rollins; that Gates, or Gilbert, registered at the Pelton Apartments on April 18th and left on the night of May 2, 1923, and that they had never seen him at the apartment house since that date. Olive McPherson and Lucille E. Fennell, two telephone operators who had charge of the switchboard at the Pelton Apartments, testified that they knew of no such person as Rollins being at the Pelton Apartments during the months of April or May, 1923. Neither of these witnesses had any recollection of any call being received at the Pelton Apartments for a man by the name of Rollins during the month of May, 1923. Miss Fennell testified that she knew and remembered Gilbert under the name of Gates, but did not know him by any other name. Mr. John S. Cooper, the attorney of Gilbert, testified that Gilbert resided at the Pelton Apartments prior to and on and about May 1, 1923, but that he had not seen him nor heard from him since said last-named date. In addition to these witnesses, B. F. Anderson, an investigator of the district attorney's office, testified that he visited the Pelton Apartments the last part of April or the first part of May, 1923, in search of Gilbert, and that he was not able to find him there, although he went to the room formerly occupied by Gilbert and his wife and searched for him in other parts of the house.

The witness Hervey testified, as did also the appellant, that appellant met Hervey at the Angelus Hotel and told him that he could get the money by calling at the drug store at Fifth and Broadway and asking for a package left there for "George Allen or Ruth Allen." Hervey went direct from appellant to the drug store, only one city block distant, and secured the money by asking for a package according to the instructions given him by appellant. The two attendants at the drug store testified that this package had been left there less than an hour before it was delivered to Hervey by a person described as a man of medium build, and that at the time he left the package he wrote in their presence on a card or check, "George Allen or Ruth Allen." One of these attendants testified that the person leaving the package at the drug store was a man just about the size of appellant. This card or check was produced at the trial, and a witness by the name of Milton Carlson, who qualified as an expert on handwriting, testified that the handwriting upon the card or check was the handwriting of appellant.

[6] The indictment, as we have already observed, contains a large number of assignments of perjury. It may be that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain all of such assignments, but the rule is well settled that, while the indictment may embrace two, or more, or many assignments of perjury, if the evidence sustains one or more of the assignments it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove all of the charges. State v. Taylor, supra. It will not be necessary, therefore, to examine the evidence with a view of ascertaining whether it is sufficient to sustain all of the assignments of perjury set forth in the indictment. Some of these assignments may possibly be upon immaterial matters. Others were upon collateral issues to the real subject under investigation by the grand jury at the time appellant testified before that body. It will be remembered that the grand jury had under investigation the attempted bribery of Deputy Sheriff Reimer. The money which was to be used to bribe this officer was the $700 which Hervey procured at the drug store at the corner of Fifth and Broadway. In determining, therefore, who were the guilty parties in this crime, if any had been committed, it became of vital importance to determine the identity of the person leaving at the drug store the package containing the $700. Hervey testified that he went to the drug store and procured the money under the direction of appellant. It therefore became material for the grand jury to know whether or not the appellant himself had left the money at the drug store for Hervey. As for the appellant, this was the crux of his whole testimony before the grand jury. It was charged in the information that appellant's testimony, denying that he had been at the drug store and there left the package containing the money, was false and untrue, and, as this is the most serious and vital assignment of perjury against the appellant contained in the whole indictment, we will examine the evidence offered by the prosecution with a view of ascertaining whether the same supports this assignment. If the evidence supports this assignment, then it will be unnecessary to consider the testimony in the light of the remaining assignments. On the other hand, if the evidence fails to support this assignment, then, as we view the case, a verdict of conviction upon any other assignment would be based upon mere collateral, if not immaterial, matters.

In proof of the falsity of the testimony of appellant that he did not leave the money at the drug store for Hervey, the two attendants at the drug store with whom the money was left testified at the trial that the person who left the package containing the money was a man of "medium build," and that he wrote "George Allen or Ruth Allen" on the check left with the package. The witness Carlson testified that the writing on the card was that of appellant. This testimony in any ordinary action, if believed by the jury, would be sufficient to prove that appellant was the person who left the money at the drug store. But in prosecutions for perjury, the falsity of the statement claimed to be perjurious must be proven by two witnesses or the testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances. Pen. Code, § 1103a. Was the testimony, therefore, of the drug store attendants and that of Carlson, the handwriting expert, if legally corroborated, sufficient to support the verdict finding the defendant guilty of perjury?

[7] Under the decisions of the appellate courts of this state, positive evidence is absolutely necessary to support a charge of perjury, and circumstantial evidence alone is never sufficient. People v. Wells, 103 Cal. 631, 37 P. 529; People v. Burcham (Cal. App.) 232 P. 149. Yet this does not mean that there must be the positive and direct evidence of a witness who has testified to the falsity of the testimony given by the accused. It does not mean, in order to sustain the verdict in this case, based upon the assignment under consideration, that at least one witness must testify that he actually saw and identified the appellant as the person who did leave the money at the drug store, but such conviction must stand if there is any testimony showing a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by appellant before the grand jury and incompatible with his evidence there given, provided the same is legally corroborated.

In People v. Porter, 104 Cal. 415, 38 P. 88, the Supreme Court, in considering the sufficiency of the evidence in that action to support a verdict of conviction for perjury, states the rule as follows:

"It is contemplated by the statute that there must be the testimony of one witness to facts that are absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused before a conviction is justified by the law."

In People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 63, 87 P. 384, the court says:

"'Direct evidence' is declared in section 1831 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be 'that which proves the fact in dispute directly without an inference or presumption and which in itself, if true, conclusively establishes that fact.' Upon a trial for perjury, direct evidence * * * includes any positive testimony of a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by him at the former trial, or which is absolutely incompatible with his evidence or physically inconsistent with the facts so testified to by him."

And in People v. Casanova, 54 Cal. App. 439, 202 P. 45, the same rule is expressed by the court and in the following language:

"That there was such legal evidence, sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute, we have no doubt. The statute respecting the quantum of evidence necessary in perjury cases will be satisfied if there be the testimony of one witness to facts that are absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, corroborated by circumstances which, of themselves and independently of such directly inculpatory evidence, tend, with a reasonable degree of certitude, to show that the accused is guilty as charged. 'Upon a trial for perjury direct evidence is not limited to a denial in ipsissimis verbis of the testimony given by the defendant, but includes any positive testimony of a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by him at the former trial, or which is absolutely incompatible with his evidence, or physically inconsistent with the facts so testified to by him.'"

[8] Viewed in the light of these decisions, the testimony in this case of the two drug store attendants and that of the handwriting expert is positive evidence tending to prove that appellant left the money at the drug store, and it is therefore absolutely inconsistent with his sworn statement before the grand jury that he did not do so, and is consequently incompatible with his innocence of the charge against him. This testimony, if believed by the jury without any inference or presumption, conclusively proved the fact that defendant was the person who left the money for Hervey. The only doubt in our minds as to the sufficiency of this evidence was whether expert testimony would comply with the requirements of the rule prescribed in prosecutions for perjury. We have not been able to find any authority holding that expert testimony is not sufficient in such a case. On the other hand, the decisions of our courts are to the effect that no distinction is to be made between expert testimony and other evidence as to its weight or preference. In the late case of Rolland v. Porterfield, 183 Cal. 466, 469, 191 P. 913, 914, the court said:

"Whatever the individual opinion as to the value of expert testimony, it has been clearly settled in this state that, as regards the preference or weight to be given the testimony in any particular case, the law makes no distinction between expert testimony and evidence of other character."

The same principle has been held in a long list of California cases. Estate of Blake, 136 Cal. 306, 68 P. 827, 89 Am. St. Rep. 135; People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 530, 111 P. 612; Estate of Hess, 183 Cal. 589, 192 P. 35; Estate of Nelson, 191 Cal. 280, 216 P. 368.

[9] The testimony of the drug store attendants and the handwriting expert being sufficient to establish the falsity of appellant's statements before the grand jury that he did not leave the package containing the money at the drug store, the next question that arises is whether there is sufficient corroboration of this testimony to meet the requirements of section 1103a of the Penal Code. In the first place, we have the testimony of the witness Hervey, who testified that appellant, only a few minutes before Hervey called at the drug store and asked for the money, had told him that the money was at the drug store, and that he could get it by calling for a package left there for "George Allen or Ruth Allen." This circumstance, standing alone, would amount to incriminating evidence against the appellant. That appellant informed Hervey where and how to get the money, which was to be used for the purpose of bribing the officer, raised a strong inference of appellant's complicity in said crime, and when this evidence is considered in connection with the other evidence in the case, that appellant actually left the money at the drug store for Hervey, it tended in a marked degree to corroborate this latter evidence.

In addition, however, to the testimony of Hervey, we have the witness Lindquist and the proprietors and employees of the Pelton Apartments. Lindquist testified that he had no friend by the name of Rollins, and that he did not tell appellant he had, or that any person by the name of Rollins would help him get bail. The witnesses from the Pelton Apartments testified that no person by the name of Rollins resided there at or near the 17th day of May, 1923, the day appellant testified that he telephoned to Rollins, and the latter informed him that the $700 would be left at the drug store. Appellant having given Hervey information as to where and how the latter could get the money, and having denied that he left the money where he told Hervey he would find it, was of necessity obliged to offer some explanation as to how he came into possession of the information he imparted to Hervey. This explanation was that Rollins had informed him of the place where the money would be left. The fact that his explanation as to the source from which he acquired this information was proven to be false, by the testimony of the witness Lindquist and the proprietors and employees of the Pelton Apartments, strongly corroborated the other evidence in the case that the appellant himself placed the money at the drug store for the use of Hervey.

[10] The corroboration required under section 1103a of the Penal Code is the same as that required under section 1111, regarding the testimony of an accomplice. "There is no essential difference between the provisions of section 1103a, of the Penal Code and section 1111 in so far as the law requires that the corroborating evidence 'shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense.'" People v. Woodcock, 52 Cal. App. 412, 418, 199 P. 565, 568. "The corroborating evidence may be slight; * * * nevertheless, the requirements of the statute are fulfilled if there be any corroborating evidence which, of itself, tends to connect the accused with the commission of the offense." People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 614, 616; People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 348, 15 P. 5; People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 24 P. 32; People v. Barker, 114 Cal. 617, 46 P. 601; People v. Martin, 19 Cal. App. 295, 125 P. 919. The testimony of appellant before the grand jury that he did not leave the money at the place indicated must be considered in connection with his further testimony that Rollins told him the money was there in a conversation which he had with Rollins over the telephone at the Pelton Apartments, and that he had such conversation with Rollins at the instance of Lindquist. Proof that Lindquist had no such conversation with appellant, and that he knew no such person by the name of Rollins, and that no such person by the name of Rollins was at the Pelton Apartments at the time appellant claims he telephoned to Rollins tended to prove the falsity of his testimony that he did not leave the money at the drug store. Especially is this true when we take into consideration the further fact that appellant had told Hervey where the money was left and how it could be obtained. These statements of appellant before the grand jury were so intimately connected and were so dependent, one upon the other, that proof of the falsity of one of such statements tended to prove the falsity of the others. We are therefore of the opinion that the evidence given by the drug store attendants and Carlson that defendant left the money at the drug store finds sufficient corroboration in the testimony of Hervey and also in the testimony of Lindquist and the proprietors and employees of the Pelton Apartments.

[11] In connection with appellant's claim that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict, he makes the further contention that he was acquitted of the charge set forth in the first indictment, and that such acquittal was an acquittal on all assignments of perjury set forth in the second indictment which were also contained in the first indictment, and that the court, in determining the question as to whether the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict, is precluded from considering any evidence in the case which is applicable to any of the assignments of perjury contained in the first indictment. As we have before noted, two indictments were found against appellant. In the first only a small portion of appellant's testimony before the grand jury was set out and charged to have been false, and in the second a much larger portion of his testimony before the grand jury was alleged to be untrue, including all that contained in the first indictment. By order of court the two actions were consolidated, and the appellant was placed on trial on both indictments. Thereafter the case was tried as one action. In the instructions given by the court, not only those given by it upon its own motion and those given at the request of the people, but also those given at the request of the appellant, the court made frequent references to "the indictment," and in no instance was any reference made to the first indictment or to the second indictment, or to any other fact or circumstances indicating that the defendant was being tried upon more than one indictment. In the instructions given at the request of appellant, "the indictment" is referred to 24 times, and in the instructions requested by appellant and refused by the court, appellant refers to "the indictment" 9 times, but in no instance in any of these instructions, which were either given or refused by the court, does appellant refer to the first indictment or the second indictment, nor does he ask or request the court that the jury be instructed to render separate verdicts upon the two indictments. The jury rendered its verdict finding "the defendant guilty of perjury as charged in the indictment." It was numbered, however, 21,289, being the number assigned to the action against the defendant upon the second indictment and before the actions had been consolidated. It would appear, from these references to the proceedings of the court, that not only the court and the prosecution, but the appellant himself, treated the indictments, after the order of the court consolidating the actions as one indictment. The jury, in rendering their verdict in the form in which they did simply followed the course pursued by the court and all the parties to the action, including the appellant, and we think under these circumstances their verdict may well be treated as a general verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged of the crime for which he was placed upon trial in the actions as consolidated. Even if the jury had plainly indicated that their verdict only applied to the second indictment, they would thereby have found appellant guilty of all charges contained in the first indictment, for the reason, as already stated, that all assignments of perjury set forth in the first indictment were included in the second indictment.

[12] But conceding for the sake of argument the contention of appellant that there were two distinct and separate indictments, upon which the defendant was placed on trial, and that the jury's verdict only applied to the second indictment, did the failure of the jury to render a verdict upon the first indictment acquit the defendant of those assignments of perjury contained in the second indictment which were also charged in the first? In support of appellant's claim that such verdict was an acquittal of all the charges which were contained in both indictments, he relies upon a statement of the law found in 16 Corpus Juris, at page 1107, as follows: "A conviction and judgment upon one of several counts, with no verdict upon the others, is an acquittal of the others." A large number of cases are cited in the above work in support of this text. We have examined these cases, but failed to find that any of them go to the extent claimed for them by appellant. And our attention has not been directed to any authority which holds that where a defendant is upon trial on two or more indictments and the jury renders a verdict of guilty upon the charge contained in one of said indictments, and fails to render any verdict upon the charge contained in the other indictment, that such failure of the jury to render a verdict upon one indictment affects in any manner whatever the verdict rendered upon the other of said indictments. The most that these authorities hold is that the failure of a jury to render a verdict as to all the charges upon which a defendant is being tried is equivalent to or operates as an acquittal of the defendant as to those charges upon which no verdict was rendered, and would be a bar to any subsequent prosecution of the defendant upon said charges. This result would arise, not from any verdict of the jury, but from the action of the court in discharging the jury without rendering a verdict. The same result would follow if the defendant had been placed upon trial upon a valid indictment before a jury and the jury discharged without the consent of the defendant and before the introduction of any evidence. The defendant could not thereafter be further prosecuted upon the charge contained in said indictment, not because he had been acquitted by the jury at the former hearing, for he had not been, but because he had been once placed in jeopardy at said former hearing, and therefore could not be again brought to trial upon the same charge. As far as the accused is concerned, the proceedings at the first hearing operated as and were equivalent to an acquittal of him, for the reason that he could not be further prosecuted on said charge. This is made clear in a number of the cases cited in Corpus Juris in support of the statement from the text above quoted:

"Doubtless, where a jury, although convicting as to some, are silent as to other counts in an indictment, and are discharged without the consent of the accused, as was the fact in the Dealy Case, the effect of such discharge is 'equivalent to an acquittal,' because, as the record affords no adequate legal cause for the discharge of the jury, any further attempt to prosecute would amount to a second jeopardy, as to the charge with reference to which the jury has been silent." Selvester v. United States, 170 U. S. 262, 18 S. Ct. 580, 42 L. Ed. 1029.

"Where on a trial on an indictment of different counts, there is a specific verdict of guilty on one count, and the verdict is silent as to the other counts, and there is a conviction on the verdict of guilty, it is a bar to further prosecution on the counts on which the verdict is silent. (Id.) So much is settled in this state." People of State of N. Y. v. Dowling, 84 N. Y. 478, 483.

"The question of guilt or innocence of both offenses charged was submitted to the jury, and that body found him guilty of but one, and designated which. Trial and conviction upon this indictment is a bar to any subsequent prosecution for the larceny therein charged. * * * It will be equivalent to a verdict of not guilty on such counts." Guenther v. People, 24 N. Y. 100.

[13] It follows therefore, in the present action, that the appellant was not acquitted of the assignments of perjury set forth in the first indictment by the failure of the jury to render a verdict upon the charges contained therein. If any advantage can accrue to appellant by such failure, it would be that he could plead once in jeopardy to any attempt which might be made in the future to prosecute him upon said charges. His claim, however, that the court is precluded from considering the evidence applicable to the assignments of perjury set forth in the first indictment, in determining whether the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict of the jury as rendered, is untenable and finds no support in law or reason. As we view the law, it is the right and duty of the court to resort to all such evidence in deciding the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment.

[14] The next point urged by appellant in support of his appeal is that the court erred in the admission of the following evidence: (1) That relating to an alleged conspiracy between appellant and Lindquist involving the forging and uttering of certain bail bonds, and in the refusal of the court to permit appellant to show by the records of a former case that he had been acquitted by the jury of said charge of uttering said forged bail bonds; and (2) in permitting the prosecution to impeach its own witness Hervey and in so doing to introduce incompetent evidence under the guise of refreshing his recollection.

The testimony relating to the conspiracy between appellant and Lindquist involving the forging and uttering of certain bail bonds was admitted over the repeated and strenuous objection of appellant. It tended to show that on the day Lindquist was released from prison, he called upon appellant and arranged with him for the release of Gilbert and Johnson, then in the county jail awaiting trial upon the charge of grand larceny. The bonds of each had been fixed by the magistrate at the sum of $10,000. The agreement between appellant and Lindquist was that for a consideration of $1,400, to be paid appellant, he would execute and deliver releases for these two prisoners. Accordingly, Lindquist appeared at the county jail on the evening of the same day with such orders, and upon them Gilbert and Johnson were released, and appellant was paid said sum of $1,400. Later on, appellant produced two bail bonds which purported to be given for the release of Gilbert and Johnson, but which were proven to be forgeries. Lindquist was thereupon arrested, charged with the forgery of said bonds, and while under arrest he attempted to bribe Deputy Sheriff Reimer, who had said matter under investigation, "to fix" said case, and was to pay him the sum of $700. It was this sum of $700, which was to be used to bribe Reimer, that was left at the drug store and which the witness Hervey secured therefrom and gave to Mrs. Lindquist. Evidence was admitted which tended to show that the money was left at the drug store by appellant, which evidence, if legally sufficient and if true, would prove the charge of perjury upon which defendant was then being tried. It was the theory of the prosecution at the trial, and the same contention is now made by the Attorney General, that the testimony relative to the conspiracy of appellant and Lindquist involving the forging and uttering of these bail bonds showed a motive on the part of appellant, and offered a reason for his assisting Lindquist to extricate himself from the trouble in which he found himself, to the extent of supplying the money with which he hoped to bribe the officer. The grounds upon which this evidence was objected to were that it showed or tended to show the commission of other crimes by appellant, and, furthermore, that he had theretofore been placed upon trial for uttering said forged bail bonds, and had by a jury been acquitted of said charge, and therefore, the prosecution was estopped from again litigating the issue decided in said former action. Appellant at the time of making said objection offered to prove by the record of said former action his acquittal of said charge of forgery, to which offer the district attorney objected and said objection was sustained by the court.

[15] It is unquestionably the general rule that evidence which tends to show that the accused is guilty of the commission of crimes other than that for which he is then on trial is inadmissible against him. There are, however, exceptions to this general rule, and one of these exceptions is that where the evidence, to which objection has been made, although it shows defendant guilty of other crimes tends directly to prove the crime for which he is then being tried, such evidence is admissible against him on said trial. People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513, 36 P. 16; People v. Wilson, 117 Cal. 688, 49 P. 1054; People v. Valliere, 123 Cal. 576, 56 P. 433; People v. Brown, 130 Cal. 591, 62 P. 1072; People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 P. 43; People v. Argentos, 156 Cal. 720, 106 P. 65. In the case of People v. Cook, supra, at page 341 (83 P. 46), the court said:

"The result of the discussion, I think, may be summed up in the proposition that evidence which is relevant to any material fact in issue in a criminal case cannot be excluded because it may prejudice the defendant by proving him guilty of other crimes than that for which he is on trial."

In People v. Argentos, supra, at page 725 (106 P. 67), the court said:

"Where it appears that evidence of the commission of such other crime has a direct and logical bearing upon the question of the guilt of the accused as to the crime with which he is charged, evidence of the commission of such other offense is admissible."

And on page 726 (106 P. 67), the court further said:

"What weight that evidence might have was a question for the jury, but that it was admissible, notwithstanding it showed the defendant was charged with some other offense than the one for which he was being tried, and though its tendency might have been to prejudice him in the minds of the jury, is not, under the authorities, open to question."

Such evidence is always admissible to prove motive. In the same case of People

v. Argentos, supra, at page 725 (106 P. 67), the court also said:

"But this evidence was not admitted with a view merely of proving that defendant had been charged with another offense. It was offered and, we think, properly admitted as bearing on the question of motive."

In People v. Cook, supra, at page 340 (83 P. 46), the following language was used by the court:

"But when some distinct offense is so connected with the crime charged in the indictment that proof of the former, in connection with other evidence, would sustain a probable inference of guilt as to the latter, such distinct offense may be proved—as, for instance, to show a motive on the part of defendant to commit the crime charged."

This evidence regarding the conspiracy between appellant and Lindquist in relation to these bail bonds would undoubtedly have a tendency to show a motive on the part of appellant for furnishing the funds with which the officer was to be bribed "to fix" the case against Lindquist. If the charge could be dismissed against Lindquist, it would probably result in the matter being dropped, and appellant might also escape prosecution thereon. While, as far as we have been able to ascertain from the record, it did not appear that appellant was then under indictment for uttering said forged bail bonds, it does appear that at some time subsequent thereto he was placed on trial on said charge. From this fact it is only reasonable to infer that he was then at least under suspicion, and that Reimer was then investigating his connection with the forged bail bonds, as well as that of Lindquist. He was therefore, equally with Lindquist, interested in having the investigation of said charges brought to a speedy end, and, to him and Lindquist a favorable termination. Any evidence, therefore, that would tend to show a motive on appellant's part for furnishing the bribe money would be material as tending to prove that said money was furnished by him, and proof that he furnished the money and left it at the drug store for Hervey went to the very gist of the charge that his statement before the grand jury that he did not leave it there was false. There was therefore no error in admitting this testimony, unless the verdict of acquittal rendered in appellant's favor on the forgery charge rendered it inadmissible.

[16] As to the effect of a verdict of acquittal under such circumstances, the authorities in this state are few, but we think they establish the rule that such a verdict does not render evidence of other crimes, although these other crimes were made the subject of prior indictments and the defendant had been tried on such charges and acquitted of them, inadmissible in a subsequent action against the defendant on another and different charge. In the early case of People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, the question was directly before the court and decided adversely to appellant's contention. On page 515 of the opinion in this case, the court said:

"The exception to the admission of certain other drafts claimed to have been forged and uttered by defendant about the same time, for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge, on the score that they had been the subject of other indictments upon which the defendant had been tried and acquitted, is not in our judgment well taken. It is well settled that in cases like the present it may be shown that the defendant uttered, at or about the same time, other forged notes or bills, whether of the same kind or a different kind, or that he had in his possession other forged notes or bills, tending to prove that he knew the note or bill in question to be forged. Roscoe on Criminal Evidence, 90 et sequens; 1 Phil. on Ev. Cowen & Hill's notes, 768; 3 Greenleaf on Ev. § 15. Nor does it matter if such other notes or bills are the subjects of other indictments pending at the time. Commonwealth v. Stearns, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 256. And in Houston's Case, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 300, it was held that the principle upon which such evidence is admitted is unaffected by the fact that the defendant has been tried and acquitted upon the notes or bills produced in evidence, although the force of the evidence may be thereby weakened."

The only other case in this state upon the subject, to which our attention has been called, is the recent case of People v. Berry, 191 Cal. 109, 215 P. 74. No reference was made in this latter case to the Frank Case, and there is nothing to be found therein which directly or indirectly overrules the earlier case or lays down any different rule than that enunciated in the Frank Case. In People v. Berry, 191 Cal. 109, 215 P. 74, the Supreme Court said:

"It cannot be successfully said that by the acquittal of the defendant of all but one of the crimes of the consolidated indictments, the jury found the defendant was not a member of a general conspiracy, but of only one conspiracy, and hence the evidence of the other offenses was inadmissible, and for that reason the defendant did not have a fair and impartial trial. We have no doubt that evidence of each and all of the enumerated transactions, whether covered by the indictments or not, was admissible under the similar offense rule as tending to prove a conspiracy. The interlocking of the participants in the various frauds, their common use of the same fictitious entities, their uniform insistence that their banking needs in carrying out their numerous swindling operations should be entrusted solely to the defendant as assuring an element of safety, were facts justifying an inference that a general conspiracy existed, and the defendant's guilty connection therewith was abundantly shown."

In addition to the above statement, and immediately following it, the court further said:

"If the defendant were to be tried again on the Herr transaction, the prosecution would, it appears clear, be entitled to prove each of the transactions, although the defendant had been acquitted on some of them. McCartney v. State, 3 Ind. 353, 56 Am. Dec. 510; Bryant v. U. S., 257 F. 382, 385 [168 C. C. A. 418]; Zobine on Federal Crim. Law Proc. § 451; Walsh v. U. S., 174 F. 615 [98 C. C. A. 461]; Bell v. State, 57 Md. 108. As these transactions would be admissible in a new trial, it follows that their admission in this case was not error."

Upon a rehearing the court struck out this latter paragraph from its opinion. No reason was given by the court for its elimination of this statement from its opinion, and appellant argues that the reason must have been that the court did not consider that the law was correctly stated therein, and therefore that this case is an authority supporting his contention. In view of the fact that the judgment of conviction rendered by the trial court was affirmed by the Supreme Court, we are not prepared to agree with appellant in his contention or to give to the case of People v. Berry, 191 Cal. 109, 215 P. 74, the construction claimed for it by appellant. On the other hand, we think the opinion in this case (as it now stands) is in accord with the opinion rendered in People v. Frank, supra, and that under the rule as enunciated in these cases the evidence relating to the forged bail bonds was admissible, notwithstanding that defendant had been previously acquitted of the crime of uttering said bonds.

[17] As we have already seen, appellant, at the time he interposed his objection to the introduction of the evidence relative to the forged bail bonds, offered to prove by the records of the former action that he had been acquitted by a jury therein of forging said bail bonds. It is now contended (in the reply brief of appellant for the first time) that even if said record was not admissible to show that the offered testimony was inadmissible, or, in other words, to show an estoppel as against the prosecution, appellant was still entitled to have said record of his acquittal before the jury for the purpose of weakening the effect of the evidence against him. In other words, as against the testimony of the prosecution that he had uttered the forged bonds, he claims he was entitled to show as a part of his defense that he had been acquitted of said charge. The authorities are not in entire accord upon this question, but we find it unnecessary to pass directly upon this question in this action. We have already attempted to show that said record was not admissible to prove an estoppel and thereby prevent the prosecution from proving appellant's connection with said forged bonds. This was the only purpose for which said record was offered. If it were admissible for that purpose, then it would have been proper for the appellant to have made said offer at the time he did; that is, before the introduction of any evidence by the prosecution regarding the forgery of said bail bonds. Had the court accepted said offer and admitted said record, it would then have been its duty to have passed upon the question of estoppel before admitting any evidence relative to appellant's connection with said forged bail bonds. But, if the record of the former action had been offered simply to weaken the case of the people, then it was a matter of defense, and could not have been properly offered or admitted during the people's case. Our attention has been called to a number of instances when appellant, during the trial, offered to prove by said record his acquittal of the charge of uttering said bail bonds, but these offers were all made while the prosecution was putting on its case and in connection with appellant's objection to the admission of evidence regarding the forged bail bonds. These objections to the admission of such evidence were, in our opinion, all properly overruled by the court, and the refusal of the court at said times to entertain appellant's offers to introduce the record in the former action was also proper and free from error. Our attention has not been called to any offer of appellant to prove said record as a part of his case or as a defense of the action against him. If said record were admissible at all, it was admissible only as a defense and as a part of appellant's case. As far as we are able to ascertain from the record, until the filing of the reply brief by appellant, neither in the trial court nor in this court had the claim ever been made by appellant that his said offers to prove the record of said former action were made as a part of his defense and for the purpose of rebutting the case made against him by the prosecution. On the other hand, the times at which said offers were made, and the language used on the occasion of the record being offered, indicate clearly that appellant's sole object in making said offer was for the purpose of stopping the prosecution from proving appellant's connection with said forged bail bonds. Under these circumstances, it was not error on the part of the court to have refused to admit said record. Had the offer been made at the proper time, that is, as a matter of defense, and for the purpose of rebutting the evidence offered on the part of the prosecution, and had the court then denied said offer, a different case would have been presented which might call for a different conclusion.

[18, 19] The other assignment of error in the admission of evidence was directed to the action of the court in permitting the prosecution, over the objection of defendant, to cross-examine and impeach the witness Hervey, a witness called on behalf of plaintiff, and to read to said witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory, as well as of impeaching him, portions of his testimony given before the grand jury. The witness Hervey testified that appellant, immediately on their leaving the Angelus Hotel and on their way from said hotel to the corner of Fourth street and Broadway, told him that if he would go to the Owl drug store at the corner of Fifth street and Broadway and inquire for a package which had been left there for George Allen or Ruth Allen, that one would be given him, and that acting upon these instructions from appellant he went to this drug store, asked for the package as directed by appellant, and a package was delivered to him containing a loaf of bread, in one end of which was the $700 in bills. He was then asked by the prosecution whether appellant had told him that he would find the money in a package with a loaf of bread, and he answered that he did not remember. The prosecution, over the objection of appellant, then read to the witness Hervey portions of his testimony given before the grand jury, in which this witness had stated that appellant had told him, on their way from the hotel, that the money would be in a package with a loaf of bread. In answer to questions by the district attorney as to whether he gave said testimony before the grand jury, Hervey stated that if it was in the transcript he believed he so testified, but that he had no recollection of appellant ever telling him that he would find the money in a loaf of bread or in a package with a loaf of bread. Appellant now contends that the admission of this testimony was error for the reason that Hervey gave no testimony that was adverse to the prosecution, but he simply stated that he was unable to recollect the conversation to which he testified before the grand jury. Appellant concedes that, had Hervey testified at the trial that appellant had not told him that the money was in a package with the loaf of bread, then it would have been proper for the prosecution to have shown that he made statements inconsistent with the testimony as then given, but, as Hervey only stated that he was unable to remember any such conversation with appellant, then it was highly improper and extremely erroneous to permit the prosecution to prove the statements made by Hervey before the grand jury. This question is not a new one to the courts of this state, but from the case of People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384, down to very recent times, the Supreme Court has consistently and persistently enunciated the rule contended for by appellant. People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384; People v. De Witt, 68 Cal. 584, 588, 10 P. 212; People v. Wallace, 89 Cal. 158, 164, 26 P. 650; People v. Mitchell, 94 Cal. 550, 556, 29 P. 1106; In re Kennedy, 104 Cal. 429, 431, 38 P. 93; People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 616, 44 P. 314; People v. Crespi, 115 Cal. 50, 55, 46 P. 863; People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 P. 101. In the last-named case of People v. Creeks at page 532

(75 P. 102), the court states the rule as follows:

"Where a witness called by a party has simply failed to testify to all that party expected or desired, but has not given testimony against him, it is not permissible for the party calling him to prove that such witness had previously made statements which, if sworn to at the trial, would tend to make out his case."

In the more recent case of Estate of De Laveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 631, 133 P. 307, 317, the court states the rule in the following language:

"Assuming that contestant had the right on the ground of surprise to impeach Mrs. Cebrian by showing that she had made, at other times, statements inconsistent with her present testimony (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049 and 2052), he had no right to show previous statements made by her as to matters concerning which she failed to testify at all on the trial, as for instance upon matters as to which she said that she did not remember."

We are unable to find anything at variance with this rule as above enunciated in any of the authorities to which our attention has been called in the brief of the Attorney General. We think this rule must therefore be held to be the settled law of this state. According to this rule it was clearly error for the court to permit the prosecution to prove the statements of Hervey before the grand jury as to what appellant told him in regard to finding the money in a package with a loaf of bread, in view of the fact that Hervey did not deny having such a conversation, but simply testified that he did not remember it.

[20, 21] Appellant makes the further contention that the court erred both in refusing to give certain instructions proposed by him and in giving certain other instructions at the request of the prosecution. Appellant offered five instructions, purporting to set forth a correct statement of the law requiring the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and corroborating evidence, in order to convict in prosecutions for perjury. The instructions were all refused by the court, and, at the request of the prosecution, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"Perjury must be proved by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and corroborating circumstances, and it is not sufficient where the testimony of two witnesses are relied upon that each of the witnesses testified to different false statements made by the defendant, but the law requires in such case that the two witnesses testify to one or more statements found by the jury beyond all reasonable doubt to have been falsely made by the defendant while under oath.

"In this case it is not the theory of the prosecution that any two witnesses have testified to false statements made by the defendant, but it is the theory of the prosecution that one witness has testified directly to the false statements made by the defendant, and that the testimony of such witness is corroborated by the circumstances and that each of the two witnesses who have testified to false statements made by the defendant corroborate.

"It is therefore necessary for you to understand what is meant by the word 'corroborate' and 'corroboration.' To corroborate means to strengthen; to make more certain; to add weight or credibility to a thing; to confirm by additional security; to add strength. Evidence which does any of these things is evidence which corroborates, and is corroborating evidence. It does not mean facts which, independent of the evidence being corroborated, will warrant a conviction, but it is evidence which tends to prove the defendant's guilt independent of the evidence which is corroborated."

[22] If this instruction contains a correct statement of the law relative to the character of the evidence required in prosecutions for perjury, we are of the opinion that there was no error on the part of the court in refusing appellant's proposed instructions upon the subject of corroborating evidence. Appellant criticises this instruction in two respects: First, because, as he contends, it assumes that the defendant made false statements; and, secondly, because it does not correctly state the law. As to the first criticism, that is, that this instruction assumes that appellant made the false statements with which he was charged, we are not of the opinion that, assuming this criticism to be well taken, the jury were misled by the instruction. The jury were repeatedly told by the court in other instructions that the defendant could not be convicted of perjury unless the statements charged to be false were proven so beyond a reasonable doubt by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and corroborating circumstances. In support of the further criticism that this instruction does not correctly state the law, appellant directs our attention to the following portion thereof:

"It is therefore, necessary for you to understand what is meant by the words 'corroborate' and 'corroboration.' To corroborate means to strengthen, to make more certain, to add weight or credibility to a thing, to confirm by additional security, to add strength. Evidence which does any of these things is evidence which corroborates and is corroborating evidence."

In People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 411, 56 P. 44, 48, in discussing an instruction in some respects similar to that under consideration, the Supreme Court said:

"Here the jury was told that it is sufficient if such corroborative evidence tends in any way to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Such is not the law. It could tend to connect him with the crime by considering it with the testimony of the accomplice; yet, if it is necessary so to consider, it would not be legally sufficient. It is legally sufficient only if, standing alone, it tends so to connect him."

Had the instruction under consideration in the present action ended with the portion thereof last quoted, it might come within the objection indicated in People v. Compton, supra, but it will be noted that the instruction continues with the following sentence:

"It does not mean facts which independent of the evidence being corroborated, will warrant a conviction, but it is evidence which tends to prove the defendant's guilt, independent of the evidence which is corroborated."

In this concluding sentence of the instruction, the jury were correctly told that corroborating evidence in a prosecution for perjury "is evidence which tends to prove defendant's guilt independent of the evidence which is corroborated." This statement in the instruction not only states the law upon the subject correctly, but renders the instruction as a whole free from the criticism of the appellant. We are therefore of the opinion that the court did not err in giving the foregoing instruction, nor was any error committed by the court in refusing the five instructions proposed by appellant and hereinbefore referred to. It is conceded that the corroboration required in perjury cases is the same as that required of testimony given by an accomplice. In either case it is a sufficient compliance with the statute if the corroborating evidence, standing alone, tends to connect the defendant with the crime. "The corroboration of an accomplice's testimony, as has been said, may be slight. * * * But it must in and of itself, and independent of the testimony of the accomplice, tend to inculcate the defendant on trial with the commission of the crime." People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 119 P. 901, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704. Reading the instruction, therefore, as a whole, we are of the opinion that it contains a correct statement of the law upon the subject of corroborating evidence, and is not subject to the criticism made against it by appellant.

[23] The court instructed the jury in the language of section 125 of the Penal Code. Appellant contends that this was error, and in support of this contention relies upon People v. Von Tiedeman, 120 Cal. 128, 52 P. 155. In that action the court said:

"This section of the code was given to the jury, and the application of the principle there declared to the facts of the case stated in various forms by the judge in his charge."

After setting out a number of these "various forms," the court continues:

"Such a construction of section 125 absolutely eliminates the whole question of criminal intent; and criminal intent is the vital element in every crime of perjury. * * * The court omitted to instruct the jury that this was an essential element of the crime; that, in order to find the defendant guilty of the crime charged, they must find that the statement which he was charged with having made was made by him 'willfully.'"

The court finally concludes that:

"Under the instructions given, the jury were at liberty to find the defendant guilty, even though they should find that the statement had been made by him in the honest belief that it was true."

In the present action the court, in another instruction, told the jury that:

"The false testimony must have been corrupt and willful, and ignorance of the true facts, inadvertence, or mistake, are not substitutes for willfulness or corruptness."

This last-mentioned instruction supplied that which was lacking in the instructions in the case of People v. Von Tiedeman, supra, and rendered the giving of the instruction in the present action, in the language of section 125 of the Penal Code, proper and free from error.

[24] It was not error for the court to refuse the following instruction, requested by appellant:

"You are instructed that a magistrate, in approving bail bonds, has a legal right to assume that the persons qualifying thereon are in truth and in fact the persons whom they purport and claim to be, when they appear before such magistrate to justify."

[25] Such an instruction could only have confused the jury. Besides, it is not a correct statement of the law upon the subject. If this were the law, then John Doe and Richard Roe, two men well known personally to the magistrate, might qualify upon a bail bond as John Smith and William Jones, and it would be the legal right of the magistrate to assume that they were the persons whom they purported and claimed to be, even though the magistrate knew of his own knowledge that they were not such persons. It is the duty of a magistrate, in accepting bail, to the very limit of his knowledge and in the exercise of the greatest care, to see that the bail bond he accepts is legal in form, that the sureties whose names are signed thereto are the persons they purport to be, and that they are able to respond to the full extent of the penalty thereof in case the principal fails to comply with the conditions of said bond. The magistrate accepting bail is the sole representative of the law, standing between the people of the state on one hand, and those accused of crime upon the other, and if he fails in his duty, then efficient law enforcement is rendered impossible.

[26] Neither did the court err in refusing to give an instruction, requested by appellant, that "any committing magistrate may accept bail or approve bail bonds whether the person admitted to bail was so admitted by such committing magistrate or any other committing magistrate." We find nothing in the law of this state that would warrant the giving of such an instruction. On the other hand, the plain provisions of the Penal Code are directly opposed to any such promiscuous exercise of authority by magistrates. Section 1277 of the Penal Code provides that "the admission to bail may be made by the magistrate by whom he is so held, or by any magistrate who has power to issue the writ of habeas corpus." Section 1280 provides that "the bail must in all cases justify by affidavit taken before the magistrate," etc. And the provisions of section 1281 are that "upon the allowance of bail and the execution of the undertaking, the magistrate must, if the defendant is in custody, make and sign an order for his discharge." From these sections of the Code it is apparent that it is the intent of the law that the magistrate admitting the defendant to bail is the only one before whom the bail may justify, and the only magistrate authorized to make and sign the defendant's discharge upon the allowance of bail and the execution of the undertaking. It is true that there was evidence indicating that it was the practice among the township justices of Los Angeles township for any one of them to approve bail bonds, notwithstanding the fact that the justice approving the bond was not the committing magistrate in the proceeding in which the bond was given. Appellant was not only permitted to offer evidence tending to prove this fact, but the court instructed the jury that if they should find that such a practice existed, that they might take that into consideration as going to the matter of intent of the appellant in approving bonds in actions in which he was not the committing magistrate. In our opinion, the court was as favorable to the appellant in its instructions upon this phase of the action as he could reasonably ask or expect.

Numerous other assignments of error were contained in the record, and exhaustive arguments in support thereof are presented by appellant in both his opening and closing briefs. Many of these assignments go to the action of the court in refusing to instruct the jury as requested by appellant, and the others are based upon the court's rulings in giving certain instructions proposed by the prosecution. We have carefully considered the arguments advanced by appellant in support of these alleged errors, but are not convinced that appellant has sustained any substantial injury by the rulings of the court in these matters.

[27] The only question remaining for decision is whether the error of the court in permitting the prosecution to cross-examine the witness Hervey, by reading to him portions of his testimony given before the grand jury, was of such a nature as would justify this court in reversing the judgment herein. If appellant really had the conversation with Rollins which he claims to have had, in which the latter told him that the money would be left at the drug store, it would not be unreasonable to suppose that Rollins might have informed him in this conversation as to the kind of a package in which the money would be found. And if Rollins so informed appellant, it would not be anything strange or unreasonable for appellant to have given Hervey the same information that he received from Rollins. Therefore proof of these facts would not have materially injured appellant. While it must be admitted that this manner of sending money is somewhat unusual and out of the ordinary, there was nothing criminal in the mere fact that the money was left in a package with a loaf of bread, any more than if it had been left in a leather pocketbook. But appellant had testified before the grand jury that he did not know the size, kind or character of the package in which the money was left, and later at the trial he testified that he did not know that it was wrapped in a package with a loaf of bread, and, furthermore, that he did not tell Hervey that he would find it in a package with a loaf of bread. Taken, therefore, in connection with the testimony of the appellant, the testimony given by Hervey before the grand jury was directly contradictory to the testimony of appellant at the trial. In itself it was of slight moment, and did not prove directly any of the assignments of perjury set out in the information, but, as testimony contradictory to that given by appellant, its importance and materiality was greatly enhanced, and accordingly the injury to appellant in having it improperly brought before the trial jury was correspondingly augmented.

Notwithstanding this error and its consequent injury to appellant's case, we are not prepared to say that this court is justified or even authorized to reverse the judgment by reason of such error. Eliminating this improper evidence given by Hervey entirely from the record, it remains highly improbable that the jury would have rendered any other verdict than that of guilty. With this evidence out of the case entirely, there was still remaining the testimony of Lindquist that he knew of no person by the name of Rollins, and that he had no conversation with appellant about Rollins, or any one else, in reference to assisting him to raise bail money; there is also the evidence of the Pelton Apartment House owners and their employees that there was no such person as Rollins stopping at the apartment house at the time appellant states he phoned Rollins regarding bail money for Lindquist; also that of Hervey that appellant told him that the money was left at the drug store for "George Allen or Ruth Allen," and the admission of this fact by the appellant himself; and that of the drug store attendants that the money was left there by a man who wrote on a card "George Allen or Ruth Allen," and left it with the package; and finally the testimony of the handwriting expert that the handwriting on this card was that of appellant. While this evidence was not without contradiction, yet the jury must have believed it in order to have rendered a verdict of conviction, and we are unable to perceive how their view of this evidence would have been materially, if at all, different, had the examination of Hervey been confined within proper limits. The error was not, therefore, of such a nature as would justify a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment and order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

2. Adverse possession §112 — Burden of proof on plaintiff.

In action to quiet title, plaintiff, relying on adverse possession of his assignor, had burden of proof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action by Harrison R. Ward against E. A. Parkford and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Poole, of Los Angeles, and H. E. Gleason, of Madera, for appellant.

A. L. Abrahams and Paul Barksdale D'Orr, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to quiet title against a large number of defendants. One of the defendants, E. A. Parkford, appeared and answered. In his answer he denied the material allegations of the plaintiff's complaint, and set forth a special defense in which he pleaded certain facts which he claimed would constitute an equitable estoppel that would preclude the plaintiff from any recovery. Still later the defendant Parkford filed a cross-complaint. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, and a trial was had in the trial court on all of the issues so made by the pleadings. The court made findings on the material allegations of the plaintiff's complaint and the answer thereto, and it made findings on some of the issues presented by the other affirmative allegations made in the above-mentioned pleadings of the defendant Parkford. A judgment was entered in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff, and from that judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] In his brief the appellant contends: (1) That John S. Baker, his assignor, acquired title to the property in dispute by adverse possession acquired under a written instrument consisting of a certificate of sale made by the tax collector of the irrigation district in which the land in dispute was located; (2) that there was no evidence to support the finding that a trust relation existed between the plaintiff and the defendant so that the plaintiff could acquire no title to said property adverse to that of the defendant; and (3) that the tax deed produced by the defendant was void and conveyed no title, and in this behalf he specifies six different infirmities in said deed. When the respondent's brief came in, it contained a reply to the first and second point, and made no reply to the third point, for the reason that the appellant must recover, if at all, by reason of the strength of his own title, and not by reason of a weakness in the title of his adversary. In replying to the first point made by the appellant, the respondent is at some pains to show (1) that the appellant's assignor never had the property inclosed by a fence for the period of 5 consecutive years; and (2) that the appellant's assignor never, for five consecutive years, plowed and pastured, or plowed or pastured, the land in dispute. In his reply brief the appellant states that he does not contend that he or his assignor had the land inclosed with a fence in such a manner as to give the appellant's assignor or the appellant title to the land. However, the appellant strenuously contends that the witness Baker testified to a set of facts showing that he held the adverse possession by plowing or pasturing the land. In this connection he cites particularly that portion of the transcript which reads as follows:

"Q. And when would you say you first plowed lot 83 after you got your deed from Koontz? A. I know I plowed it in '94.

"Q. In 1894. And what with reference to each year thereafter and up to what time? A. Sometimes there was quite a voluntary crop and I pastured it and next year I would plow it again.

"Q. And that continued for how long? A. For 10 or 12 years.

"Q. That is, for 10 or 12 years after 1894 you continued to either pasture the land or plow it? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. And during all that time you claimed it as your property? A. Certainly."

The passages cited by the appellant are the strongest and clearest passages supporting or tending to support his claim that we can find in the transcript. However, the few lines quoted are excerpts culled from an examination that covered approximately 125 pages of the transcript. To nearly every other question propounded to him the witness gave an evasive answer. As quoted, he claimed to have obtained his deed from the tax collector in 1893, and that, commencing with 1894, for 10 or 12 years he continued to either pasture the land or plow it. That would lay the foundation for the action as being from 1894 to 1904 or 1906. In reply to a direct question on the subject he testified that he plowed the land twice. He plowed it in the spring and later he plowed it in the fall of the same year. In answer to another direct question he stated that he plowed the land years before the boom in 1886. Asked if he plowed it about 1884 and 1885, he testified that it was probably 1885, he couldn't tell—he was tangled up a little about it. At no place in the testimony except as quoted above did the witness designate any certain period of time including 5 consecutive years when he had the land fenced, or when he plowed it or pastured it, or both. In no part of the record do we find the claim made that, when the land was not fenced and the witness was pasturing the land, his stock pastured it to the exclusion of the stock of other owners. Asked if he pastured the particular lot in suit, the witness answered that he had lots adjoining. The witness gave his testimony on July 10, 1923. On that date he was asked if in a conversation between himself, Mr. Parkford, and Mr. Abrahams, in the latter's office on July 8, 1923, that is, 2 days before, he had not made the statement that he had abandoned all claims to the land in question since 1914. His replies were numerous, but one answer that came the nearest to being responsive was as follows:

"I did tell you something or say something about that I had lost my deed, that I did not think they were worth enough to administer on and under the circumstances that I did not think that I owned anything."

The appellant does not call to our attention any evidence in the record which purports to make the appellant's case any stronger than the testimony quoted above. Neither party calls to our attention any testimony in the record that was given by any other witness on the subject-matter which we have discussed. Under such circumstances it is apparent that the trial court, in rendering its judgment, in effect held that the witness Baker had not convinced the mind of the court. Under all of the circumstances we think that the trial court was entirely within its rights in so holding. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 638, 645; Baker v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 79 Cal. 34, 41, 21 P. 357; Prewett v. Dyer, 107 Cal. 154, 159, 40 P. 105;

County of Sonoma v. Stofen, 125 Cal. 32, 35, 57 P. 681; Brown v. Peterson, 25 App. D. C. 359, 4 Ann. Cas. 980, 982.

[2] However, the record is entirely silent as to any evidence establishing the fact that Baker's possession was adverse to the individual owning the record title or to any one else. Baker testified that he plowed the land twice. There was no evidence that others did not plow the land many times. Baker testified that he pastured the land. There was no evidence that the record owner did not do the same thing, and there was no evidence that the record owner had any knowledge of any kind or nature that Baker ever pastured the land. Baker testified that he thought he plowed the land in 1885—8 years before he obtained a tax deed. If he followed his usual custom, then he pastured the land during the intervening years between that date and 1893, the date of his deed, that is, during such years as he did not plow it. Nevertheless, he did not claim these acts done prior to 1894 to be adverse. He testified to no facts showing that his conduct toward the title of the record owner was any different after the date he obtained a tax deed than it was before he obtained a tax deed. The burden of proof showing that Baker's possession was adverse rested on the appellant, and the burden was not sustained. De Frieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 653, 663, 30 P. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 151; Ball v. Kehl, 95 Cal. 606, 613, 30 P. 780; Jordan v. Beale, 172 Cal. 226, 229, 155 P. 990.

If we are correct in the propositions which we have discussed above, and we think that the record abundantly supports our conclusions, then it becomes unnecessary to discuss any other point made by the appellant or the respondent.

The judgment is affirmed.

McFAYDEN v. TOWN OF CALISTOGA.
(Civ. 2667.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 16, 1925.)

1. Towns ⇨39(1)—Town could return truck, hired by town clerk and president of board of trustees without authority, at any time, and thus avoid further liability for its use.

Contract, made by president of board of trustees and town clerk in name of town without authority, for hire of truck, being void, town was not bound to keep truck for any fixed period, but could return it to seller at any time and thus avoid further liability for its use.

2. Bailment ⇨3—Town, repairing and using leased truck after discovering defective condition, without notifying lessor or requesting him to repair it, held not misled by his false representations.

Town, not returning leased truck or notifying lessor of defective condition or requesting him to repair it after discovering such condition, but causing it to be repaired and thereafter used for many weeks, held not misled by lessor's alleged false representations.

3. Bailment ⇨31(2)—Evidence of condition of truck when delivered to town for hire admissible on issue of compensation for its use.

Evidence of condition of truck when delivered to town for hire under unauthorized contract by president of board of trustees and town clerk held admissible on issue of compensation to owner for its use.

4. Bailment ⇨32—Damages for condition of truck when redelivered to lessor by lessee not recoverable, in absence of evidence that lessee negligently used it, or that condition was not due to ordinary wear.

In absence of evidence that town's use of truck, delivered to it for hire, was negligent, or its condition, when redelivered to lessor, due to any other cause than ordinary wear, owner could not recover damages under Civ. Code, §§ 1928, 1929, because of its condition when redelivered to owner by town.

5. Bailment ⇨20—Measure of compensation for use of hired truck stated.

Measure of compensation for use of hired truck, in absence of proof of lessee's negligence, is reasonable value of its use in work contemplated and to which put by lessee considering its condition, capacity, and character of work, and costs of repairs, not necessitated by lessee's want of ordinary care or use of truck for purpose not contemplated by parties, cannot be recovered.

6. Towns ⇨37—Agreement by three members of town board of trustees at special meeting, of which fourth member not present was not notified, not binding on town.

Agreement by three members of town board of trustees at special meeting, of which no notice was given fourth member, not present thereat, authorizing president of board and town clerk to purchase truck, held not binding on town.

7. Towns ⇨46(4)—Contract held unenforceable as contract of sale postponing time of payment beyond fiscal year in which signed.

Contract for lease of truck to town for 20 months at stated rental, on payment of which in installments with interest on deferred payments lessor was to execute bill of sale, held contract of sale postponing time of payment beyond fiscal year in which signed, in violation of Const. art. 11, § 18, and hence not enforceable by seller.

8. Bailment ⚡26—Notice by lessee to lessor of truck to make repairs prerequisite to recovery of sums expended therefor by lessee.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1955, 1957, notice by town to one from whom it leased truck to repair deteriorations, not caused by town's fault nor natural result of use of truck, was prerequisite to recovery from lessor of sums expended by town for repairs.

9. Towns ⚡46(4)—Town accepting and using truck hired by trustees liable for reasonable value of use, subject to constitutional inhibition against incurring indebtedness exceeding year's revenue.

While contract in violation of Const. art. 11, § 18, and Municipal Corporation Bill, § 865, prohibiting municipalities from incurring indebtedness in any year exceeding income and revenue provided therefor, is void and incapable of ratification, town board of trustees could make valid contract for use of truck at agreed rental, and, having accepted delivery of and used truck, town is liable on implied contract to pay reasonable value of such use, subject to such constitutional inhibition.

10. Evidence ⚡158(17)—Parol evidence of business transacted at meeting of town board of trustees admissible.

Minutes of meeting of town board of trustees are prima facie evidence of business transacted thereat, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1920, 1926, but parol evidence is admissible for same purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by Jack McFayden against the Town of Calistoga. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wallace T. Rutherford, of Napa, for appellant.

E. S. Bell, of Oakland, and Herbert V. Keeling, of Lakeport, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that on the 25th day of November, 1919, "the plaintiff delivered to the defendant for hire" a truck; that continuously thereafter, until the 6th day of September, 1920, the defendant "had the possession of said truck, and during such period of time used the same on and upon the public streets and highways of said town, and in the municipal work thereof; that on or about the said 6th day of September, 1920, defendant notified plaintiff that it would redeliver the possession of said truck to him, and thereupon plaintiff did receive the possession thereof from defendant; that the sum of $5,160 was and is a reasonable sum for the hire of said truck during the aforesaid period of time"; that the plaintiff duly filed and presented his claim for said sum, but that the trustees of the defendant refused to allow any part thereof; that "at the time of the creation of said indebtedness, and at the time (of) the presentation of the claim therefor, * * * there were funds in excess of the available money in the treasury that could have been legally apportioned and appropriated for the purpose of paying said claim"; and that plaintiff has been paid but $500 of said indebtedness. For a second cause of action the complaint alleges that the defendant, "through its neglect, carelessness, and ill use" of the truck, damaged it in the sum of $513.44.

The answer admits that the defendant used the truck "for a period of not exceeding 40 days"; denies all the other material allegations of the complaint; and alleges that the president of the board of trustees and the town clerk, in the name of defendant, entered into the contract hereinafter considered; that plaintiff was thereupon paid the sum of $500 as a first payment thereon; that neither the execution of such contract nor the payment of said money was authorized by defendant; that at a regular meeting of the board, prior to the execution of the contract, the plaintiff misrepresented the qualities and condition of the truck; that the "truck was in a run-down condition, and many of the parts of said truck * * * were in poor repair, and in a worn-out condition" at the time it was delivered to defendant; that, by reason of such condition, the defendant necessarily expended the sum of $575.82 "in labor and repairs on said truck, in replacing broken and worn-out parts"; and "that the use of said truck * * * was more than amply repaid by the expenditures made * * * in repairing said truck." The defendant also filed a cross-complaint for the recovery of the said sum of $500 alleged to have been illegally paid to plaintiff at the time of the execution of the contract. Verdict and judgment went for plaintiff in the sum of $1,700, and this appeal is from the judgment.

The complaint is based upon the theory that the contract executed in the names of the parties is void, and respondent states in his brief on appeal that the contract "was undoubtedly void." In his reply brief counsel for appellant states:

"We admit, if the truck had been in proper condition, and could have done the work it was delivered to the town to do, and there were available funds, the town would have to pay a reasonable rental for its use."

[1-3] The defendant's alleged defense of false representations is without support in the evidence. The contract being void, the defendant was not bound to keep the truck for any fixed period, but it had the absolute right to return it to the plaintiff at any time and thus avoid further liability for its use. Within a few days after its delivery the defendant discovered its condition. It did not return the truck or notify plaintiff of its condition or request him to put it in a condition fit for use, but caused the truck to be repaired, and thereafter used it for many weeks. The evidence is conflicting as to whether the condition of the truck which made such repairs necessary existed at the time of its delivery to defendant or resulted from its use by defendant. The evidence tending to show the falsity of the representations made by the plaintiff is very weak, but, if it were otherwise, the defendant's continued use of the truck after discovery of its condition shows that such use was not induced by the alleged representations. One cannot be misled by a false statement after he has learned that it is false. Evidence was admissible, of course, of the condition of the truck at the time of its delivery as bearing upon the compensation to which plaintiff is entitled for the use thereof.

[4, 5] The evidence does not support plaintiff's claim for damages. It fails to show that the defendant's use of the truck was negligent, or that its condition upon redelivery was due to any cause other than the ordinary wear naturally resulting from the work contemplated by both parties. "The hirer of a thing must use ordinary care for its preservation in safety and in good condition." Civ. Code, § 1928. "The hirer of a thing must repair all deteriorations or injuries thereto occasioned by his want of ordinary care." Civ. Code, § 1929. Respondent states in his brief that the appellant left the truck exposed to the weather from April to September, 1920, but the plaintiff's witnesses assigned other causes as the basis of their testimony to the effect that the truck was in a damaged condition when redelivered, and there is no evidence to show that such damage was caused by exposure to the weather. The measure of compensation to which the plaintiff is entitled, in the absence of proof of negligence, is the reasonable value of the use of the truck in the work contemplated by the parties, and to which it was in fact put by defendant, taking into consideration its condition and capacity and the character of such work. To add to such compensation the cost of repairs not made necessary by defendant's want of ordinary care or the use of the truck for a purpose not contemplated by the parties would be to award double compensation. The question of plaintiff's right to recover the alleged damages was submitted to the jury without any instruction that such damages could be awarded only on proof of want of ordinary care by the defendant.

[6] On the 25th day of November, 1919, there was held what purported to be a special meeting of the board of trustees. Notice of the meeting was not given to the trustees, and only three of them were present thereat. The trustees in attendance adopted a resolution purporting to authorize the purchase of the truck involved in this action, and pursuant to such resolution the president of the board and the town clerk executed the contract herein before referred to. The contract provided for the lease of the truck to defendant for 26 months at a rental of $3,500; $500 thereof to be paid upon the execution of the contract, $1,500 January 1, 1921, and $1,500 January 1, 1922, "with interest on the deferred payments of 6 per cent. from date until paid." The contract contained the following terms:

"The lessee admits receipt of said personal property in good order and condition, and, in the event that any installment of rent shall not be paid when due, hereby agrees to deliver the same to the lessor in as good order and condition, reasonable use and wear thereof being excepted, upon demand being made therefor by the lessor or his assigns, and the lessor is hereby authorized to take immediate possession thereof. The lessee hereby agrees to keep said motor truck in good order and repair, and to keep the same insured in the name of the lessor during the life of this agreement in the sum of not less than $1,500. The lessor agrees that in the event that the full amount of $3,500 rental shall be paid, that he will immediately execute and deliver to the lessee a good and sufficient bill of sale of the above described personal property."

Over defendant's objections, the court admitted in evidence the minutes of the aforesaid meeting of the three trustees and also the said contract. The court refused to give the following instruction requested by defendant:

"I instruct you that the agreement of November 25, 1919, offered and received in evidence, is not a binding obligation on the town of Calistoga, nor are any of the recitals or conditions in said agreement in any way binding upon them if you find from the evidence that no notice of the special meeting of November 25, 1919, was ever given to J. G. Finch, one of the town trustees, and that he was not present at said meeting."

[7] The proposed instruction correctly states the law applicable to an important feature of the case which was not covered by any instructions given by the court. The jury doubtless gave weight to the terms of the contract relative to the rental to be paid for the use of the truck and the obligation therein imposed upon defendant "to keep said motor truck in good order and repair." Looking at the substance of the contract rather than its form, it appears to be a contract of sale, the consideration being fully furnished by plaintiff upon the execution of the contract and his delivery of the truck, the time of payment only being postponed beyond the fiscal year in which the contract was signed. It has been held that such a contract is violative of the provisions of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution. Chester v. Carmichael, 187 Cal. 287, 294, 201 P. 925. The void contract afforded no basis for a recovery. Ayres v. Lipschutz (Cal. App.) 228 P. 720, 721.

[8] The defendant's claim of offset in the sum expended by it for repairs is without merit. The parties knew that the truck had been used for several years prior to the time of its delivery to defendant. The evidence produced by defendant shows that at that time the truck was in "fair condition." It is shown without conflict that the defendant made the alleged repairs without any notice to plaintiff or request that he make them.

"One who lets personal property must deliver it to the hirer, * * * put it into a condition fit for the purpose for which he lets it, and repair all deteriorations thereof not occasioned by the fault of the hirer and not the natural result of its use." Civ. Code, § 1955. "If a letter failed to fulfill his obligations, as prescribed by section nineteen hundred and fifty-five, the hirer, after giving him notice to do so, if such notice can conveniently be given, may expend any reasonable amount necessary to make good the letter's default, and may recover such amount from him." Civ. Code, § 1957.

If it be conceded that the repairs made by the defendant were such as the plaintiff was under obligation to make, notice as required by section 1957 was a prerequisite to a recovery by the former from the latter.

[9] The case was tried upon the theory that the inhibitions against incurring indebtedness by a municipality exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, prescribed by section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, and section 865 of the Municipal Corporation Bill (Stats. 1883, p. 93), have relation to the time of the presentation of a claim for such indebtedness rather than the time of its creation. In Arthur v. City of Petaluma, 175 Cal. 216, 221, 165 P. 698, 699, it is said:

"Lack of available money of the revenue of the fiscal year against which the claim constitutes a charge, from whatever cause, and entirely regardless of the absolute validity of the claim, is a complete answer to any attempt to enforce payment from what are styled in some of the later of the cases cited, 'the ordinary revenues' of the city for succeeding years. * * * Having a valid claim, one valid when the indebtedness was incurred, the subsequent exhaustion of funds from which the same could be paid before the claimant was able to obtain formal allowance and payment does not make his claim bad, but only affects his remedy to obtain payment, and he is entitled to have his claim established by a judgment for the amount due. * * * The judgment should not be drawn in such a way as to preclude enforcement in the possible event that legal provision is subsequently made for the payment thereof."

While a contract made in violation of the constitutional inhibition is void and incapable of ratification, the trustees could have made a valid contract for the use of the truck at an agreed rental therefor. Having accepted delivery of the truck and having used it, the defendant is liable, not on the contract of November 25, 1919, but on its implied contract to pay the reasonable value of such use.

Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 555, 45 P. 824, 50 P. 670. Such implied contract, however, is subject to the constitutional inhibition against incurring an indebtedness in any year in excess of the revenues thereof. Buck v. City of Eureka, 124 Cal. 61, 68, 56 P. 612, 615. In that case it is said:

"The validity of the liability depends upon the fact as to whether there were unappropriated revenues when the liability was incurred; and no judgment should be entered until that fact is established. The liability was incurred when from time to time the services were fully rendered, and the city with knowledge accepted the benefit of them; * * * and evidence should be received as to the condition of the revenues at that time."

[10] Some question arose at the trial as to whether parol evidence is admissible to prove the official acts of the board of trustees at a meeting thereof. The minutes of such a meeting are prima facie evidence of the business transacted thereat. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1920 and 1926. Parol evidence, however, is admissible for the same purpose. Gordon v. City of San Diego, 108 Cal. 264, 269, 41 P. 301; People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 638, 84 P. 205; Westerman v. Cleland, 12 Cal. App. 63, 69, 106 P. 606. The foregoing discussion covers all the points made by the parties; and it seems clear that the judgment cannot be affirmed.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. REMINGTON et al. (Cr. 1209.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 14, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 12, 1925.)

1. Criminal law § 622(2)—Not abuse of discretion to deny defendant separate trial on ground that codefendant had made implicating statements respecting him.

On trial of defendants jointly indicted for robbery, held it was not an abuse of discretion to deny motion of one defendant for separate trial made on ground that codefendant had made statements implicating him in robbery.

2. Criminal law § 730(3)—Reversal for asking prejudicial and improper questions not granted, where not asked in bad faith, and court promptly ruled on same and instructed jury to disregard them.

In prosecution for robbery, where defendant contended that district attorney was guilty of misconduct in asking defendant improper and prejudicial questions, held, that reversal was not required, since it did not appear prosecuting officer sought to get incompetent evidence before jury knowing it to be inadmissible, or that questions were asked in bad faith for purpose of creating prejudice against defendant, and court properly ruled on such questions and instructed jury to disregard them.

3. Criminal law §683(1)—On surrebuttal, defendant in criminal action entitled to rebut only new matter adduced by state.

On surrebuttal, defendant in criminal action entitled to rebut only new matter adduced by state.

4. Criminal law §683(1)—Rebuttal by state, denying defendant's testimony in indirect rather than direct manner, held not new matter in a substantial sense, authorizing surrebuttal.

In a prosecution for robbery, where defendant testified that he had scar on nose on a certain day, and prosecution in rebuttal offered testimony to show that scar had had time to heal, held that such rebuttal could not be substantially regarded as new testimony, it being new only in the sense that it was an indirect rather than a direct denial of defendant's rebuttal; and hence offer of surrebuttal was properly denied.

5. Criminal law §1186(4)—Evidence held so conclusive of defendant's guilt that offer of surrebuttal, if erroneously refused, did not require reversal.

In a prosecution for robbery, held that evidence was so nearly conclusive of defendant's guilt that error, if any, in rejecting defendant's offer of surrebuttal would not justify reversal, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

6. Criminal law §1172(1)—Instruction, incorrect or insufficient as abstract proposition, may not be erroneous or injurious when considered in relation to facts to which it relates.

An instruction which is incorrect or insufficient as abstract proposition may not be erroneous or injurious when considered in relation to the facts to which it relates, and if it appears under the evidence taken into consideration by jury that jury must necessarily have found existence of element of guilt which instruction specifically fails to mention, such omission cannot be said to be prejudicial to accused.

7. Criminal law §1172(1)—Instruction failing to include as essential element of guilt that money taken must not be property of accused held not erroneous, where jury necessarily found that it was not.

In a prosecution for robbery, failure of court in stating facts warranting conviction to include essential element, namely that money taken was not property of accused, held not error, since jury must necessarily have found under evidence that money taken by accused was not his own property but that of bank from which stolen.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Raymond R. Remington was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Perky & McConnell, of Long Beach and Clarence S. Hill, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Erwin W. Widney,

Deputy Atty. Gen., and Hamish B. Eddie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. The appellant, Remington, and one Shevlin were jointly charged with the crime of robbery. Remington, who was found guilty as charged, appeals from the judgment of conviction, and likewise from an order denying him a new trial.

It is charged in the indictment that the two defendants, armed with a pistol, a dangerous and deadly weapon, feloniously and through the use of force and fear, took from the possession and immediate presence of one P. N. Fox the sum of $6,373, lawful money of the United States, which belonged to the First National Bank of Watts. The robbery, which seemingly is conceded to have been committed by some one, was perpetrated in the vault of the bank on August 29, 1924. Remington denied that he was the robber or that he had aught to do with the crime, and sought to prove an alibi. He was, however, positively identified as the robber by two of the bank's employees—Fox, the assistant cashier, and one H. F. Logan. That both of these witnesses had ample opportunity to become familiar with Remington's general appearance and identifying marks, if any, is shown by the following circumstances to which they testified: Two days prior to the robbery, at about the hour for closing the bank, Remington called and asked for the cashier. He pretended to be a reporter for a Los Angeles newspaper, and said that he had information that the bank was to be "held up," and that he was there to get a "scoop" for his paper. On the morning of the following day, at about 9:30 o'clock, Remington returned to the bank and asked Fox if he had left a brief case in the bank when he was there the day before. On the same day Remington again called at the bank, at about the hour of noon, and pretended to call a newspaper office on the telephone. He talked to Fox upon this occasion. Later on that day Remington returned and again pretended to call the newspaper on the telephone. At the hour for closing the bank Fox and Logan left the building, accompanied by Remington and Shevlin, the latter having come into the bank a few minutes previously. On the third day, the date of the robbery, as Fox and Logan were preparing to close the place and while Fox was setting the time lock and Logan was carrying books into the vault, Remington appeared, drew two pistols, pointed them at the two bank employees, and compelled them to enter the vault, where he tied them with heavy cords. While Fox and Logan were thus helpless Remington took from the vault the sum of $6,373 and made his escape. There is other evidence in the record besides that of the two bank employees tending to show that Remington was the robber who rifled the vault and stole the bank's money.

[1] At the time of his arraignment and again just prior to the commencement of the trial Remington demanded that he be tried separately. In support of his motion for a severance he presented an affidavit by his attorney to the effect that his codefendant had made statements to the arresting officers implicating him in the commission of the robbery. The request for a separate trial was denied.

Appellant's first point is that where two persons are jointly charged with a crime and it is brought to the attention of the court in an appropriate legal manner, as, for example, by affidavit duly presented before trial, that the prosecution will adduce evidence of declarations made by one of the accused which are not admissible as to the other, it is an abuse of discretion to deny the latter a separate trial. The point is not well taken. The question was considered by our Supreme Court in the recent case of People v. Perry, 234 P. 890, and was there disposed of adversely to appellant's contention.

[2] It next is urged that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in asking of appellant during his cross-examination certain questions which it is claimed were improper and prejudicial. To the first of the questions thus asked the court sustained an objection upon the ground that it was too broad. Whereupon the district attorney re-framed his question to accord with the court's views. Later on in the cross-examination the district attorney propounded another question cognate to the one first asked, but differing from it in certain important particulars. The court sustained an objection to this question in the form in which it was asked. When giving its charge to the jurors the trial court instructed them as follows:

"If counsel has intimated by questions which the court has not permitted to be answered that certain things are or are not true, you must disregard such questions and refrain from any inference based upon them."

It does not appear that by asking the questions the prosecuting officer contumaciously sought to get before the jury incompetent evidence knowing it to be inadmissible. There is nothing in the record to indicate bad faith or that the questions were asked for the wanton purpose of raising a prejudice against appellant. People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 P. 1078, a case upon which appellant seems to place much reliance, was an exceptional one in its facts. It was an aggravated case, in which the court evidently believed that the public prosecutor had wantonly and repeatedly transcended the limits of a fair investigation with the object of prejudicing the rights of the defendant and poisoning the minds of the jurors. The case here is very different. There is no reason to believe that the district attorney harbored a desire or a design to do appellant a wanton injustice. As we had occasion to say in People v. Peete, 54 Cal. App. 369, 202 P. 67:

"It frequently happens that in the heat of a trial counsel ask improper questions. But judgments cannot be reversed for an inadvertence of this character, unless, from an examination of the record, we may be of the opinion that it has caused a miscarriage of justice. In view of the court's prompt rulings and instructions to disregard the questions, which it will be presumed were heeded by the jury, it cannot be said that defendant's cause suffered by reason of anything contained in these questions, however improper they may have been."

[3, 4] Appellant assigns as error the refusal of the trial court to permit him to introduce surrebuttal testimony. It seems that a witness for the people, one of the two bank employees, testified, while the prosecution was putting in its case in chief, that upon the occasion when he first saw appellant in the bank prior to the robbery the latter had no marks or scars upon his face. It will be recalled that appellant's first visit to the bank, according to the testimony of the people's witnesses, was on August 27, 1924. Appellant took the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and, in response to his counsel's questioning, testified that he was cut on the nose by flying glass during an automobile accident on August 11, 1924—16 days prior to the time when the bank employees testified that they first saw him. He also testified that on the 27th, 28th, and 29th days of August, i. e., on the day of the robbery and on the two preceding days, a scab over the healing cut was still on his nose. When putting in its rebuttal the prosecution adduced the testimony of two witnesses who testified that they saw appellant on the 25th of June preceding the robbery, and that at that time he had a sore on his nose covered by a piece of plaster or cotton. By this testimony it evidently was the purpose of the prosecution to afford a basis for the inference that the injury to appellant's nose did not occur on August 11th, as testified to by him, but at some time prior to June 25th, and that therefore the scab resulting therefrom had had time to disappear when he was seen by the bank employees on the 27th, 28th, and 29th days of August. At the close of the prosecution's evidence appellant's counsel offered to call his client in surrebuttal to testify that on June 25th he had no sore or scab on his face. The court refused to permit the offered evidence to be introduced.

On surrebuttal the defendant in a criminal action is entitled to rebut only new matter educed by the people. If the evidence which appellant offered as surrebuttal may be deemed to be such, it was so in only a limited and extremely technical sense; for the evidence which the witnesses for the prosecution gave on rebuttal can be regarded as new and substantive testimony in only a literal and not a substantial sense. It tended merely to contradict appellant's testimony that his nose had a scab upon it on the 27th, 28th, and 29th days of August. Its purpose and effect was, instead of denying appellant's testimony directly, to deny it indirectly. As was said in People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 566, 48 P. 711, "It was only the method of meeting defendant's evidence, and not the matter which was new or different."

[5] But conceding that the testimony offered by appellant was proper surrebuttal, nevertheless its rejection does not warrant a reversal. By a careful examination and consideration of the record before us we have been irresistibly constrained to the conclusion that the evidence of appellant's guilt is so nearly, if not entirely, conclusive that the error in rejecting the offered surrebuttal, if error it be, did not and could not result in a miscarriage of justice, and therefore, in view of the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, we would not be justified in ordering a reversal.

[6] Finally, it is claimed that error was committed in giving an instruction wherein the court undertook to state the facts which, if found to exist, would warrant a conviction. It is claimed that in its enumeration of the circumstances which would justify a conviction the court failed to include an essential ingredient of guilt, namely, that the money was not the property of the accused. It does not necessarily follow that prejudicial error was committed simply because the instruction is lacking in this particular. An instruction which is incorrect or insufficient as an abstract or general proposition may not be erroneous or injurious when considered in connection with the particular case and the facts to which it relates. If it appear that under the evidence which the jurors are to take into consideration they necessarily must have found the existence of that element of guilt which the instruction fails specifically to mention, then the omission to directly charge respecting it cannot be said to have been prejudicial to the accused. People v. Morine, 138 Cal. 631, 72 P. 166; People v. Whalen, 154 Cal. 475, 98 P. 194; People v. Lee Nam Chin, 166 Cal. 573, 574, 137 P. 917; 8 Cal. Jur. p. 634.

[7] Here the jury necessarily must have found that the money taken by appellant was not his property. Never for one instant was he so bold as to claim that any part of the $6,373 was his; nor could he consistently do so in the light of the uncontradicted facts, which show beyond the shadow of a doubt that it was the bank's money. As men of ordinary intelligence and common sense the jurors must have known that they would not be warranted in convicting appellant if the money taken by him was his own. For these reasons the court's failure to mention this fact in its enumeration of the circumstances which would warrant a conviction could not possibly have prejudiced appellant.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

74 Cal. App. 286

WITHERILL v. BREHM et al. (Civ. 2855.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 31, 1925.)

1. Waters and water courses ⇨158½(1)—Agreement for division of water held not shown.

In action to quiet title to water rights, defendant's claim that predecessor in title had by agreement divided water in the creek held unsupported by weight of evidence; agreement in question appearing to constitute merely temporary, permissive use on part of defendant's predecessor in title.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨127—Requisites of prescription stated.

Requisites for acquiring title to water by prescription are that use must have been open, continuous for a period of five years or more under a claim of right, must have been beneficial, and taxes paid by claimant.

3. Waters and water courses ⇨137—Statutory period necessary to acquire prescriptive right.

To acquire prescriptive right to water, statutory period need not necessarily be five years immediately preceding action.

4. Waters and water courses ⇨143—Appropriator entitled only to amount reasonably necessary for purpose of diversion.

Appropriator of water of public streams is entitled only to an amount necessary for the purpose for which the diversion is made, and, in determining extent and right to water, object in view at time of appropriation, intent of appropriator, amount and character of land owned by him, and his ability and surroundings must be considered and rights exercised with reference to condition of country and needs of community subject to prior rights acquired.

5. Waters and water courses ⇨137—To acquire title by adverse possession, water must be used with claim of right, uninterrupted, and for beneficial purpose.

To acquire title to water by adverse possession, it must have been used with claim of right, uninterrupted, and for beneficial purpose.

6. Waters and water courses ⇨143—Appropriator's right limited by quantity applied for beneficial purposes.

Extent of user's right in waters is limited, not by quantity of water actually diverted, nor by capacity of ditch, but by quantity which is applied for beneficial purposes.

7. Waters and water courses ☞137—Title by adverse possession acquired by continuous use during portions of time required for beneficial use.

In order to acquire title to water by adverse possession, it is not necessary that a claimant should use water at all times for prescribed statutory period to establish uninterrupted or continuous use, but it is only necessary that he use it continuously during such portions of the time as is required for the beneficial use to which it is put.

8. Waters and water courses ☞152(8)—Evidence held to show title by adverse possession.

In action to quiet title to waters, held that evidence was sufficient to show that plaintiff and his predecessors in title had sufficiently conformed to the law in acquiring title thereto by adverse possession.

9. Waters and water courses ☞127—Right as against lower riparian owner may be acquired by prescription.

The right to take water from a stream as against a lower riparian owner may be acquired by prescription.

10. Waters and water courses ☞154(1)—Water diverted passes with deed as appurtenant to land.

Water, diverted from a stream and flowing through a ditch for irrigation or for domestic purposes, is appurtenant to land, and is real property, and passes with deed to property without being specifically mentioned, in view of Civ. Code, § 662.

11. Evidence ☞11—Common knowledge that in early days open ditch was usual method used to convey water for mining and irrigation.

It is common knowledge that in early days the open ditch was usual method for conveying water for mining and irrigation purposes, and that modern methods would have then been practically prohibitive.

12. Waters and water courses ☞144½—Open ditch method of transporting water held not unreasonable under circumstances.

In an action to quiet title to waters, held that, under the circumstances disclosed, open ditch method of conveying water and applying it to land was not unreasonable or extravagant, though large quantity of water was thereby wasted.

13. Waters and water courses ☞21—Prior appropriator's rights superior to riparian rights acquired through grant from railroad company.

Plaintiff's rights, acquired by prior appropriation of water from public streams, held prior and superior to riparian rights subsequently acquired by defendants through grant of railroad company, regardless of whether plaintiff's land or water rights were within grant made to railroad company (Act July 25, 1866), and regardless of whether such grant was prior to the enactment of Act July 26, 1866, § 9 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4647), recognizing prior rights of appropriators in public domain.

14. Costs ☞32(1)—Costs properly taxed against defendants in suit to quiet title to water.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, held that costs were properly taxed against defendants in suit to quiet title to water rights alleged to have been acquired by prescription.

15. New trial ☞119—Court's continuance of defendant's motion for new trial to time beyond limitation within which motion must be made not erroneous, in view of defendants' lack of diligence.

In action to quiet title to water rights, court's continuance, in absence of counsel, and without opposition, of defendant's motion for new trial to time beyond limitation within which motion must be made under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, held not erroneous or prejudicial, in view of fact that defendants were not diligent in presenting and prosecuting motion for new trial; it being their duty to see that it was set within statutory time.

16. Waters and water courses ☞152(11)—Court must fix "duty of water."

In absence of statute, court must fix the reasonable "duty of water," which is defined as the quantity of water necessary to properly irrigate a given tract of land.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Duty of Water.]

17. Waters and water courses ☞152(11)—Allowance held erroneous as in excess of amount of water necessarily required.

In an action to quiet title to water, a judgment allowing 75 inches of water held excessive under evidence showing cultivation by plaintiff during prescriptive period of not more than 20 acres.

18. Waters and water courses ☞143—Judgment quieting title to use of water year round held erroneous.

In action to quiet title to water, judgment quieting title to 75 inches of water for the year round held excessive, where it was shown that waters were not used during certain months; since one may acquire by prescription right to waters only for period of time during which it is beneficially used.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action to quiet title to water rights by Alice Witherill, executrix of the last will and testament of Andrew Witherill, deceased, against A. Brehm and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Taylor & Tebbe, of Yreka, and John S. Partridge, J. W. McCaughey, and Vincent Surr, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

B. K. Collier and Jas. P. McNamara, both of Yreka, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action to quiet title to certain rights alleged to have been acquired by prescription to 75 inches of the water of Grouse creek, which is a branch of Scott river in Siskiyou county, Cal. The judgment awarded plaintiff title to 75 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure, to be used for domestic and irrigation purposes. This was conveyed to the premises of plaintiff by means of an open ditch which has been maintained for that purpose since 1854. The defendants were restrained from interfering with plaintiff's right or title thereto.

Plaintiff claims title by mesne conveyance to some 200 acres of land in section 18, township 40 north, range 7, in Siskiyou county. This land is not riparian to Grouse creek. Appurtenant to the land, however, is a certain irrigation ditch a mile and a half in length, two feet in width and a foot and a half in depth. This ditch taps the water of Grouse creek near the point where it empties into Scott river above the premises of plaintiff. For more than 50 years plaintiff and his predecessors in title have owned the land, maintained the ditch, and used the water thus conveyed to their land for mining, agricultural, and domestic purposes. The amount of water which the creek and ditch contains varies greatly according to the season. In summer both are frequently dry. The ditch passes through a porous serpentine soil, and practically half the water is lost in transit by seepage and evaporation. The evidence is conflicting as to the number of acres of land actually irrigated by this means, and as to the continuousness of its use. It appears to a fair degree of certainty that plaintiff and his predecessors in title have used the ditch and water continuously when the ditch was not dry, and when required, for more than 50 years, for mining, domestic purposes, and irrigation of from 20 to 30 acres of land. This use appears to have been open, notorious, adverse, and with a claim of title.

One Frawley first dug and used the ditch in 1854 for mining purposes. After this mining venture it appears to have been used continuously for domestic and irrigation purposes. The witness Parker testifies to this, and claims that from 90 to 100 acres were under cultivation. But the majority of this land was above the dwelling house, and appears to have been irrigated from the water directly from Scott river. It is doubtful whether the court is warranted in assuming that more than 20 acres of land have been continuously irrigated by means of the water from Grouse creek ditch. The use of the water by plaintiff and his predecessors in title does not appear to have been interrupted or interfered with until Andrew Welker broke the dam in 1918. At this time plaintiff's title had fully matured.

The first claimant to plaintiff's title was a mere appropriator of the public domain, a miner of the early California type. His use and claim long antedates the presence of any claimant under defendant's claim of title.

From Frawley, the miner, plaintiff's title first passed to one Wm. W. Agee, thence to Haslip by deed dated March 5, 1866, thence to Schmitt, and then to Louis Schneider, to Vaughn, and, finally, to Andrew Witherill, the plaintiff. The first direct reference to the water rights and the ditch is in a deed of conveyance from Katherine Schneider, the widow of Louis Schneider, to Blattner Vaughn in February, 1915. The ditch and water rights were duly assessed with the land to plaintiff's predecessors in title ever since 1894. A homestead patent was issued by the United States to Louis Schneider February 3, 1883.

The defendants claim title to the water of this creek and ditch as riparian owners of about 6 acres of land adjacent to Grouse creek. They are successors to the title of Andrew Welker, the Central Pacific Railroad Company by patent dated March 14, 1896, granted pursuant to an act of Congress dated July 25, 1866, thence to J. F. Welch, to the Grouse Creek Mining Company, and finally to the defendant Latchem as lessee, for mining purposes. Latchem operated his mining project in the name of Northern California Mines Company. The defendants claim: (1) That their riparian rights are superior to the adverse title of plaintiff; (2) that the source of water rights claimed by plaintiff are within the grant of railroad lands from the United States to the Central Pacific Railroad Company; (3) that adverse possession on the part of plaintiff has not been established; (4) that 75 inches of water under a 4-inch pressure is excessive for the necessary use of plaintiff; (5) that costs were improperly taxed against defendants, and (6) that defendants were prejudiced by a continuance of their motion for new trial, on the court's own motion, to a time when it would be deemed to be automatically denied pursuant to section 660, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] Andrew Welker, whose father was a former owner of defendant's title, testified that his father mined along Grouse creek between 1893 and 1911, but did not resort to the ditch for water supply. It is claimed there was a division of the water of Grouse creek ditch by agreement. In 1902 or 1903 Andrew Welker claims his father and Louis Schneider had trouble over the water; that his father went to Schneider and procured an agreement to divide the water equally. He said:

"Schneider owned the water at that time. My father went over to see Billy and told him he was going up there and break the dam and turn the water down."

He was then asked if he was present at that conversation, and replied that he was not; whereupon that evidence was stricken from the record.

Defendant's claim that the water was divided by agreement is supported by evidence that is very uncertain and unsatisfactory. The weight of evidence indicates that no such agreement was made. Welker did irrigate a few acres of land below plaintiff's ranch. In the dry season, when water was scarce, he claims to have gone to Mr. Vaughn, the then owner of plaintiff's premises, and to have obtained permission to use one-half the water from Grouse creek. Andrew Welker was asked: "Isn't it a fact that you told Vaughn you needed a little water down on your garden, and he said if you needed some to go and take it?" To which the witness replied, "Yes, I did." This would indicate nothing more than a temporary and permissive use.

It is claimed there was an agreement with defendant's predecessor in title, Mr. Brehm, to divide the water in 1919. Upon being asked if he had not agreed to such a division, Mr. Vaughn replied:

"No; no division. I can state to you the little understanding we had. Fourth of July, 1918, * * * Mr. Welker went up and broke the dam. * * * That evening they came up to my place and asked me, 'Ain't there some way you and Ande can get along with your water without quarreling with it?' * * * I says, 'There would be if Ande wanted to do what is right, and recognize my rights.' He says, 'Why don't you use all the water and wet up the field good, and let Ande take it two or three or four days, whatever it might take to wet up his garden and alfalfa, and then turn it all back to you again?' 'Well,' I says, 'if Ande wanted to do that way * * * that would be all right.' Next morning Joe and I went over to Andrew's and suggested this to him, and he agreed to it. I told him to go and turn down all the water that he thought he could by leaving me sufficient water for the house and domestic use. Which he did. * * * In possibly four or five days he came back to my place and said, 'I got my field all wet up, and I turned you back the water this morning.' I told him all right, and I went on to use it probably a week or ten days. * * * He came to my place again and asked how I was getting on irrigating. I told him my field was pretty well soaked up. * * * Then he said, 'I would like to wet mine up again.' And I said, 'All right, go ahead and take the water; only leave enough for domestic use.' * * * He goes and takes the water, and in two days he came back past my place and said, 'I couldn't get that water down to my garden; the ditch dried out, and I turned it all back to you this morning.' That is the last words Mr. Andrew Welker and I ever had about the water."

The record contains absolute denials on the part of Mr. Vaughn that he ever agreed to any permanent division of the water with Mr. Welker. The most that can be said of the agreement, appearing from the statement above quoted, is that it constituted merely a temporary, permissive use on the part of Welker.

[2-4] It is true that the requisites for acquiring title to water by prescription is that the use must have been open, continuous for a period of five years or more, under a claim of right, and must have been beneficial, and the taxes paid by claimant. 1 Wiel on Water Rights, No. 522, p. 628; 2 Kinney on Irrigation, No. 1048, p. 1876. The statutory period necessary to acquire prescriptive rights need not necessarily be the five years immediately preceding the commencement of the action. In the case of Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg (C. C.) 81 F. at page 94, many of the principles involved in adverse title to water rights have been concretely stated as follows:

It is well settled that the right to water flowing in public streams may be appropriated for a beneficial use; if it is used for irrigation the appropriator is entitled to only the amount necessary to irrigate his land; by making a reasonable use of the water; the object in view at the time of the appropriation of the water should be considered in determining the extent and right of the water used; the quantity of water actually beneficially used, and not the capacity of the ditch or aqueduct through which it passes, will determine the title to water appropriated for irrigation, watering stock, or domestic use; one cannot acquire title to any more water than is necessary for the purpose of his appropriation; the intention of the appropriator, his object, and purpose in taking the water, his acts and conduct in regard thereto, the amount and character of land owned by him, his necessities, ability and surroundings must be considered in determining and defining his rights; the rights acquired must be exercised with reference to the general condition of the country, and the needs of the community; and must be subject to any prior rights acquired.

The foregoing principles are supported by a uniform line of authorities in California and all the states where the question to water rights from public streams has arisen.

[5-7] It is equally well settled that, to acquire title to water by adverse possession, it must have been used with a claim of right, uninterrupted, and for a beneficial purpose. California Pastoral Co. v. Madera Canal & Irr. Co., 167 Cal. 78, 138 P. 718. The extent of the user's right is limited, not by the quantity of water actually diverted, nor by the capacity of the ditch, but by the quantity which is applied for beneficial purposes. Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 P. 811; Smith v. Hawkins, 120 Cal. 89, 52 P. 139. It is not necessary that a claimant should use the water all the hours of each day, nor every day in the year for the prescribed statutory period, in order to establish uninterrupted or continuous use; it is only necessary that he shall have used it continuously during such portions of the day or year as is required for the beneficial use to which it is applied. 1 Wiel on Water Rights, No. 583, p. 630.

[8] So far as the necessary elements which constitute adverse possession to water rights is concerned, the record indicates that the plaintiff and his predecessors in title have sufficiently conformed to the law. Their use of the water does not appear to have been by mere permission of any other claimants. The entire record indicates that they were constantly asserting a claim of title by all their acts and conduct.

[9] A portion of defendant's land is riparian to Grouse creek below the point where plaintiff's ditch diverted the flow of water. It does not satisfactorily appear whether any portion of plaintiff's land is also riparian to this creek or not. But assuming that plaintiff's land is nonriparian to this creek, and that defendant's land is riparian to it below the mouth of the diverting ditch, still it is the settled law of this state that the right to take water from a stream, as against a lower riparian owner, may be acquired by prescription. Arroyo Ditch Co. v. Baldwin, 155 Cal. 280, 100 P. 874; Gallagher v. Montecito Valley Water Co., 101 Cal. 245, 35 P. 770; Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal. 144, 58 P. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158; Rice v. Meiners, 136 Cal. 292, 68 P. 817; Coonrad v. Hill, 79 Cal. 587, 21 P. 1099; American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 360; Southern Cal. Inv. Co. v. Wilshire, 144 Cal. 68, 77 P. 767; Pyramid Land Co. v. Scott, 51 Cal. App. 636, 197 P. 398; Williams v. Costa, 52 Cal. App. 396, 198 P. 1017.

[10] It is claimed that the evidence fails to show that the ditch or water rights in question were included in any assessment of taxes on plaintiff's property, or that such water rights appear in any of the earlier deeds of conveyance. The evidence does, however, show that the ditch and water rights were duly assessed with plaintiff's property in 1894. The earlier deeds do not refer to the ditch or water rights. But, in order to convey an easement in water flowing through a ditch for the purpose of irrigating land, the water rights need not be mentioned in the deed. Water diverted from a stream, and flowing through a ditch to irrigate land, or for domestic purposes, is appurtenant to the land, and is real property, and passes with the deed to the property without specifically mentioning such appurtenance. Civ. Code, § 662; 9 Cal. Jur. 286; Coonrad v. Hill, 79 Cal. 587, 21 P. 1099; 8 R. C. L. No. 125, p. 1070; Farmer v. Ukiah, 56 Cal. 11; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 717, 93 P. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359. Each deed in form, in plaintiff's chain of title, contained the language conveying the real property, "together with the appurtenances thereunto belonging." This was sufficient conveyance of the water rights as appurtenant to the land.

[11, 12] Extravagance in transit of the water by means of an open ditch through porous serpentine soil is charged, as well as in the mode of application of the water for irrigation purposes. No doubt a considerable loss of water from evaporation and percolation might be saved by the use of wooden troughs or metal pipe lines. But in determining the method to be pursued in transmitting water for irrigation, a court should consider all the conditions and surrounding circumstances of the case. This open ditch has been used for conveying the water in question ever since its appropriation in 1854. It is common knowledge, of which the courts will take notice, that in the early mining days of California this was the usual method resorted to for mining and for irrigation. The more modern means of conserving water in transportation were then little used, particularly in the remote mountainous regions. The expense and labor of such modern methods would have then been practically prohibitive. In Middelkamp v. Bessemer, 46 Colo. 102, 103 P. 280, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, it is said:

"All irrigation canals must, of necessity, seep more or less along * * * their lines, * * * until prevented by other means than [by the exercise of] ordinary diligence. * * * We do not think the time has yet been reached * * * when the owners * * * can be held to such a high degree of diligence in their construction as to be compelled to prevent them from seeping at all."

The loss of from 30 to 50 per cent. of water in transportation in arid districts is not uncommon. The method of transporting the water and applying it to the land in this case was not unreasonable under the circumstances and conditions disclosed by the evidence.

[13] Defendants claim title to the water, as riparian owners of land acquired by mesne conveyance through the Central Pacific Railroad Company, of land included within the 20-mile grant of railroad lands on either side of its tracks by patent from the United States dated March 14, 1896, pursuant to the act of Congress of July 25, 1866. This act of Congress was passed just one day prior to the act of that legislative body which recognized and acknowledged the prior rights of appropriators of water on the public domain for mining, irrigation, or manufacturing purposes. It is claimed no reservation was made in this act of July 25, 1866, in favor of such appropriators.

The act of Congress granting railroad lands to the Central Pacific Railroad Company is found in United States Statutes at Large, vol. 14, p. 239, and provides in part:

It is enacted "that there be, and hereby is, granted to said companies, * * * every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile (ten on each side) of said railroad line; and when any of said alternate sections * * * shall be found to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands, designated as aforesaid, shall be selected by the companies in lieu thereof. * * *"

The very day following the preceding enactment Congress, recognizing the prior rights of individuals on the public domain passed an act found in United States Statutes at Large, vol. 14, p. 251, entitled:

"An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands, and for other purposes."

The ninth section of that act provides:

"Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes aforesaid is hereby acknowledged and confirmed. * * *" U. S. Comp. St. § 4647.

The custom and the decisions, even prior to the enactment of Congress recognizing these rights of California, assured the protection of such vested claims. In a number of well-considered opinions of Mr. Justice Heydenfeldt, as early as 1856, it was held that the rights of possession of water and of easements for ditches and canals on public lands would be protected. These rights were declared to be founded on the doctrine of a presumption of a grant to the appropriator. In view of the notorious occupancy by citizens of this state, in public lands and the water of public streams, used for mining, manufacturing of lumber, construction of canals and ditches, the cultivation of farms, and various industries, the government recognized their right of ownership and acquiesced in their appropriation by failure to interfere with these industries. Conger v. Weaver, 6 Cal. 548, 65 Am. Dec. 528; 1 Kinney on Irrigation, No. 610, p. 1060.

In the case of Drake v. Earhart, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 750, 23 P. 541, Chief Justice Beatty of that state said: All the patents granted, or pre-emptions of homesteads allowed, shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches. The rulings have been uniform that the patentee of lands has no claim upon the water flowing through the same as against a prior appropriator. South Yuba Water Co. v. Rosa, 80 Cal. 333, 22 P. 222. As far back as 1855 the Supreme Court of California in Irwin v. Phillips, 5 Cal. 145, 63 Am. Dec. 113, and in Tartar v. Spring Creek Water Co., 5 Cal. 395, distinctly held that the prior appropriator of water should hold it against the riparian claim of the owner of land through which it flowed, and also in all branches of industry the prior appropriator of land, water, and easements would be protected. Not only had such become the law by custom, by the legislative will and the decisions of the courts, without dissent, but the general government for many years, without protest, acquiesced in such occupation and use of its lands and waters by its citizens, while valuable properties and industries were building upon this principle. To put the question beyond uncertainty, and to prove and adopt what already existed as the common law of the West, Congress passed the Act of July 26, 1866.

The United States Supreme Court has uniformly upheld the same doctrine. In the case of Broder v. Natoma Water & Mining Co., 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. Ed. 790, wherein a similar contention was made, Mr. Justice Miller said:

"In reference to the lands of plaintiff held under conveyance from the Pacific Railroad Company, it might be a question of some difficulty whether the right was so far a vested right in that company before the passage of this act of 1866, that the latter would be ineffectual as regards these lands. But we do not think that defendants are under the necessity of relying on that statute. We are of opinion that it is the established doctrine of this court that rights of * * * persons who had constructed canals and ditches to be used in mining operations and for purposes of agricultural irrigation, in the region where such artificial use of the water was an absolute necessity, are rights which the government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged and was bound to protect, before the passage of the act of 1866, and that the section of the act which we have quoted [section 9] was rather a voluntary recognition of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one. This subject has so recently received our attention, and the grounds on which this construction rests are so well set forth in the following cases," that without further comment, we will rely upon them. Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 507, 22 L. Ed. 414; Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. 670, 22 L. Ed. 452; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. Ed. 313; Wyoming v. Colorado, 259 U. S. 461 (42 S. Ct. 552), 66 L. Ed. at 1012.

Under the foregoing authorities, regardless of whether plaintiff's land or water rights were within the twenty-mile grant of railroad lands to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and regardless of whether that grant was made by Congress prior to its enactment recognizing the prior rights of appropriators of the public domain, the plaintiff's prior rights were bound to be protected. Plaintiff's rights were prior and superior to the riparian rights afterward acquired by defendants through the grant from the railroad company.

[14] The costs were not improperly taxed against defendants. Plaintiff was entitled to recover his costs of suit. This is an action to quiet title to water rights alleged to have been acquired by prescription. Plaintiff's title was quieted as to at least a portion of the water claimed by him. It has been repeatedly held that the Code provisions awarding costs apply to an action affecting conflicting claims of water rights. Code Civ. Proc. § 1022; 7 Cal. Jur. 257; Northern Cal. Power Co. v. Waller, 174 Cal. 377, 163 P. 214; Stimson v. Lemoore, 31 Cal. App. 396, 160 P. 845; Peake v. Harris, 48 Cal. App. at page 380, 192 P. 310.

[15] Nor was it prejudicial error for the court, in the absence of counsel, and without opposition, to continue defendant's motion for a new trial to a time beyond the limitation within which the motion must be made under section 660, Code of Civil Procedure. His notice of intention was filed April 30, 1923, setting May 11th as the time for presenting the motion. Seven several continuances were had; one at the motion of defendants, five by consent of respective counsel, and finally, on July 21st, at the court's own motion, in the absence of counsel, it was again continued. The last continuance appears to have been inadvertently made. It does not appear that any counsel were present, although this was the regular time set by consent for the hearing of the motion. On July 14th, preceding, when respective counsel were present and consented to a continuance, the two months allowed by section 660, Code of Civil Procedure, had already elapsed. This record shows a lack of diligence of the part of defendants in the prosecution and presenting of their motion for new trial. They were bound to take notice of the limitation of time within which to present it. It was their duty to be present and see that it was set within statutory time. If it had been inadvertently continued by the court at a time while the right to present the motion was still alive, defendants should have moved the court to advance the matter on the calendar. No diligence is shown on the part of defendants. They cannot complain of this inadvertence.

[16, 17] We now come to the consideration of defendant's final contention that 75 inches of water is greatly in excess of the reasonable quantity which should be allowed in this case. We think this contention must be sustained. The evidence is very conflicting as to the number of acres of land actually irrigated, and as to the quantity of water necessary. The evidence as to the number of acres actually irrigated varies from 8 to 80 acres. Probably the weight of evidence may be said to support a claim that about 20 acres were actually irrigated for the purposes of raising hay, grain, and garden. In addition to this, water was also required for domestic purposes in supplying 4 or 5 cows, a span of horses, a small flock of chickens and turkeys, and a household composed of two members.

Grouse creek, characteristic of these California mountain streams, was practically dry a portion of the season until the fall rains occurred. In traversing the mile and a half through a porous, serpentine soil, nearly one-half of the water was lost in transit from seepage and evaporation. In the absence of statute, the court must fix the reasonable duty of water. In this state there is no statute regulating the duty or amount of water reasonably necessary for irrigation. Many states have adopted such statutes. The term "duty of water" has been defined to mean the quantity of water necessary to properly irrigate a given tract of land. Hough v. Porter, 51 Or. 318, 95 P. 732, 98 P. 1083, 102 P. 728. In Idaho the statute allows one second-foot of water for 50 acres; in Nebraska, New Mexico, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Wyoming the statute allows one second-foot for 70 acres; North Dakota allows one second-foot for 80 acres, and Nevada allows 3 acre-feet per year for five months, and one-half acre-foot in addition per month for three additional months. In the absence of statute the duty of water is usually figured in inches under a given pressure. An inch per acre is generally considered liberal. 1 Wiel on Water Rights, 523. It is apparent there can be no exact or uniform rule for computing the duty or reasonable quantity of water for irrigation. The needs of the soil for developing plant life depend upon the properties of the soil, the climate, and various other conditions.

There are three methods of measuring water in California: The miner's inch, the second-foot and the acre-foot or acre-inch. These measurements are also sometimes reduced to gallons. It would avoid much confusion if our engineers and Legislature were to adopt a uniform method of measuring water. The standard miner's inch is equal to $1\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet of water per minute passing through a given orifice. Stats. of Cal. 1901, p. 660. A cubic foot of water equals about 7.48 gallons. In California the miner's inch represents the quantity of water that will flow in one second through a 1-inch aperture in a board or planks obstructing the stream, which aperture is located 4 inches below the surface or head of the stream. Fifty miner's inches are equivalent to 1 second-foot. King on Irrigation, 241. There are 43,560 square feet in an acre of land. An acre-foot of water is such a quantity of water as will cover the entire acre 1 foot in depth. It would therefore take 43,560 cubic feet of water to constitute 1 acre-foot of water. Seventy-five inches of water is therefore equivalent to $1\frac{1}{2}$ second-feet, or $112\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet per minute, or 841.40 gallons per minute. Since the miner's inch is equal to $1\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet per minute, the 75 inches of water allowed by the trial court in this case each day of 24 hours, during the entire 12 months of the year, would supply 20 acres of land with $112\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet of water per minute, or 6750 cubic feet per hour, or 162,000 cubic feet per day, or 4,860,000 cubic feet per month, or 58,320,000 cubic feet per year. Reducing this quantity of water to gallons it will be necessary only to multiply these figures by 7.48, since there are that number of gallons in a cubic foot.

Since it would take 43,560 cubic feet of water to cover an acre of land one foot deep, it would require 871,200 cubic feet to furnish 1 acre-foot of water for 20 acres of land; 4,860,000 cubic feet per month would be equivalent to about 5.58 acre-feet per month, or 66.96 acre-feet per year. Allowing a loss of one-half of this quantity in transit by evaporation and percolation, there would still be an excessive amount to irrigate 20 acres of land, together with the use for domestic purposes.

Assuming that 1 second-foot of water is equivalent to about 50 miner's inches, this judgment has provided for $1\frac{1}{2}$ second-feet of water to irrigate 20 acres of land, plus the necessary water for domestic purposes. Undoubtedly the trial court calculated on the basis of much more land to be irrigated. But we think the weight of evidence will not warrant a finding of more than 20 acres during the time the prescriptive rights were maturing. And again, assuming that one-half of this quantity is lost in transit, there would still be allowed three-fourths of a second-foot for 20 acres, which would be equivalent to 1 second-foot for 26.6 acres. This is excessive.

Compared with the statutes of other states governing the duty of water for irrigation the quantity allowed by the trial court is excessive. As we have seen, Idaho allows only 1 second-foot for 50 acres. Nebraska, New Mexico, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Wyoming allow only one second-foot for 70 acres, while North Dakota allows only one second-foot for 80 acres. In the case of Gardner v. Wright, 49 Or. 636, 91 P. at page 297, it is said:

"It being shown * * * that defendant has between 60 and 70 acres of land in cultivation, including orchard, upon which good crops have been raised each year, it will be assumed that a flow of 60 inches of water is ample for defendant's irrigation and domestic requirements."

The amount of water allowed by the judgment is clearly excessive in view of the rule that one may acquire by prescription only such quantity as has been actually, necessarily, and beneficially used by the claimant for the statutory period of time.

[18] It also appears without contradiction that plaintiff did not require or use any of the water for irrigation purposes for November to April or May. In other words, there was a part of each year during which the plaintiff did not actually take or use any part of this water from Grouse creek ditch for necessary irrigation purposes. It follows that during such portion of the year he therefore could have acquired no prescriptive right to the water. The judgment has erroneously quieted title to 75 inches of water the year round without regard to those months during which it was not in fact used. To this extent the judgment is not supported by the evidence. In Northern California Power Co. v. Flood, 186 Cal. at page 306, 199 P. 317, it is said:

"The value of water for irrigation is too great in this state to allow a landowner to gain a right thereto * * * by using the same for only a half or any other portion of the time less than the whole."

It is there held that one may acquire prescriptive right to water for the period of time only during which it is actually beneficially used. Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 211 P. 11.

For the reason that the judgment allows an excessive quantity of water, and that it is not confined to those months during which it was actually and necessarily used for beneficial purposes the cause must be remanded.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

Action by Kathryn W. Hutton against William Chapman and another. Judgment for plaintiff and defendants appeal. On motions by plaintiff to dismiss appeals by defendants from judgment and from an order striking from files notice of intention to move for a new trial. Motions denied.

Charles Lantz, W. P. Hyatt, and F. C. Huber, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles S. Conner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. [1] The respondent moves to dismiss two appeals taken by the defendants; the first being an appeal from the judgment, and the second an appeal from an order striking from the files the defendants' notice of intention to move for a new trial. As to the first of these motions, the record upon which it is based discloses that the action is one to quiet title; that judgment in favor of plaintiff was rendered on May 2, 1924, and entered on May 8, 1924. No notice of the entry of judgment was ever given, served, or filed. Notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed on May 27, 1924, and an amendment to such notice of intention was filed on August 27, 1924. Notice of motion to strike from the files the notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed on August 22, 1924, and was granted on September 3, 1924. Both notices of appeal were served and filed on the last-named date. The motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment is based upon the ground that said appeal was taken too late; the basis of said motion being that the defendants having, by the serving and filing of their notice of intention to move for a new trial on May 27, 1924, waived notice of the entry of judgment, the power of the court to pass upon said motion for a new trial expired within two months thereafter, under the terms of section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This precise question was determined by this court adversely to the respondent's contention in the case of Strehlow v. Mothorn, 239 P. 850, and upon the

1. Appeal and error Cal. Civ. Proc. § 345(1)—On failure to serve notice of entry of judgment, power of court to pass on motion for new trial did not expire in two months after serving and filing notice of intention to move for new trial, so as to require dismissal of appeal.

On failure to serve notice of entry of judgment, power of court to pass on motion for new trial did not expire in two months after serving and filing notice of intention to move for new trial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, on theory authority of that decision the motion of the respondent herein to dismiss the appeal from the judgment must be denied.

[2] As to the respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal from the order striking the defendants' notice of intention to move for a new trial from the files, said motion being based solely upon the ground that, if the appeal from the judgment is dismissed for the reason urged, the appeal from said order would be ineffectual, this being the sole ground of the latter motion, it follows that, since the motion to dismiss the appeal is to be denied for the reasons stated, the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order striking the defendants' notice of intention to move for a new trial from the files must also be denied.

The motions are denied.

SEID PAK SING et al. v. BARKER et al.
(two cases). (S. F. 9935; Sac. 3352.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 29, 1925.)

1. Contracts ⇨152—Maxim of noscitur a sociis is applicable in determining scope and meaning of words, sentences, and clauses of contract.

While a written instrument as to interpretation of any particular clause therein is to be read as a whole, and particular clause or sentence thereof under scrutiny is not to be controlled as to its meaning by its position or context in the instrument, maxim of noscitur a sociis is applicable to use of context in determining scope and meaning of words, sentences, and clauses of contract.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨159(2)—Lessees entitled to include expenditures in making leased premises cultivatable and losses from breaches of lessor's covenants in arriving at amount of return which their mortgage on leased premises was to secure.

Under lease of land for agricultural purposes, providing that lessor should give to lessees a mortgage on part of lands as security for his performance of covenants therein to drain and render cultivatable the lands covered by lease, if lessor breached such covenants, lessees, in arriving at amount of return which their mortgage was to secure, were entitled to include their expenditures for drainage and rendering lands cultivatable, and for protection of their crops when planted, and damages resulting from their losses in crops occurring through breach of such covenants.

3. Appeal and error ⇨854(2)—Disallowance of difference between sum found to have been actually expended by lessees and amount allowed on account of such expenditure held not to require reversal.

On issue as to amount of expenditures in rendering leased premises cultivatable lessees were entitled to include in amount of return which mortgage given by lessor for faithful performance on his part of covenants in lease was to secure, disallowance of difference between sum found to have been actually expended, and amount allowed on account of such expenditure will not require a reversal, even though reasons given by trial court for making deduction were erroneous, where lessees were granted by the judgment substantially all that they asked.

4. Damages ⇨78(6)—Provision in lease limiting recovery for destruction of crops through failure of lessor to protect lands from overflow held invalid, as for stipulated damages.

Under lease of lands for agricultural purposes, provision limiting lessees' recovery to $40 per acre in event of a total destruction of crops growing on leased premises through failure of lessor to keep his obligation to protect such lands from overflow, held invalid, in view of Civ. Code, § 1670, prohibiting stipulated damages, such provision not coming within exception to rule embodied in section 1671.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨159(2)—Measure of lessees' damages for destruction of potato crop through failure of lessor to protect land from overflow stated.

Where lessees' crop of potatoes was destroyed by overflow through failure of lessor to keep its obligations to protect such lands therefrom, measure of plaintiffs' damages was market value of crop at date of its destruction.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇨154(2)—Tenant may recover damages from breach of landlord's obligation to repair, though he undertakes to make repairs himself.

A tenant who undertakes to make repairs in premises he occupies which landlord has covenanted, but failed or refused to make, and who uses due care and skill in attempting to make such repairs, but damage nevertheless results from defects which it was duty of landlord to repair, tenant may recover such damages as have been caused by breach of landlord's obligation.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇨158—Tenant in attempting to do work which landlord is obligated to perform must use such care as man of ordinary prudence would use under circumstances.

Duty of tenant in attempting to do work which landlord was obligated to perform is to use such care and diligence as man of ordinary prudence would use under the circumstances, although they may not have done the very thing nor used the very means that should have been used, as developed by subsequent information.

8. Landlord and tenant ⇨158—Tenants did not assume risk of losses resulting from defects in levees which lessor had expressly covenanted to repair.

Under lease of land for agricultural purposes, with covenants by lessor to protect lands from overflow, tenants held not to have assumed risk of losses resulting from defects in levees, where lessor expressly covenanted to construct and repair such levees within a stated time, which time was made the essence of the contract, and it was only after failure of lessor so to do had been prolonged until danger of overflow became imminent that tenants undertook to do the work themselves.

9. Landlord and tenant ☞159(2)—Damages, claimed by lessees for loss of profits when unable to cultivate their crops on leased premises, held not so speculative as not to be allowable.

Damages, claimed by lessees to have been sustained by loss of profits from portions of leased lands which they were unable to cultivate and crop at all on account of lessor's breach of covenant to prevent such lands from becoming overflowed, held not too speculative or uncertain so as not to be allowable.

10. Damages ☞79(5)—Provision in lease, fixing sum per acre as agreed damages for general violations of lessor's covenants, held valid.

Provision in lease of land for agricultural purposes, fixing sum of $40 per acre as agreed damages for general violations of lessor's covenants, held valid in so far as it furnishes an agreed amount of damage for loss of prospective crops as within exception provided in Civ. Code, § 1671.

11. Landlord and tenant ☞159(2)—Tenants not entitled to double recovery on breach of landlord's covenants to keep leased premises free from overflow.

On breach of landlord's covenants to keep lands leased for agricultural purposes free from overflow, lessees, while entitled to recover rental actually paid by them, were not also entitled to damages sustained for crops destroyed and for prospective profits for crops unplanted.

12. Landlord and tenant ☞223(5)—Tenant not entitled both to return of rents and to set off damage for disturbance of possession in action against him for stipulated rental.

While a tenant who has been disturbed in possession of demised premises or damaged, but who retains possession, may have his election to sue for return of rents paid or to successfully set off his damages suffered in an action against him for stipulated rental, he cannot have both forms of relief.

13. Appeal and error ☞154(1)—Estoppel ☞62(1)—Plaintiffs not precluded by their efforts and erroneous decision of trial court from prosecuting their own appeal or electing upon a retrial as to which form of relief they would stand upon.

Plaintiffs who on breach of landlord's covenants were erroneously allowed by trial court to recover rentals and damages for such breach, and who sought to take advantage of trial court's erroneous action, held not precluded from prosecuting their own appeal or from electing upon a retrial as to which form of relief they would stand upon, where no prejudice to defendants had resulted.

14. Mortgages ☞590—Junior mortgagees not entitled to deficiency judgment against holder of prior deed of trust, if premises embraced in their mortgage on foreclosure failed to produce amount secured thereby.

In suit to establish right of lessees as owners of a junior mortgage given by lessor to secure covenants in lease and to redeem leased premises from lien of a prior deed of trust, lessees held not entitled to deficiency judgment against holder of prior deed of trust, if premises embraced in their mortgage on foreclosure failed to produce amount secured thereby, where makers of lessees' mortgage and persons primarily liable for breaches of covenants were not made parties to the action, and such breaches occurred prior to time defendant became holder of deed of trust.

RICHARDS, J. There are in this case two appeals, one by the plaintiffs from certain portions of the judgment, and it is taken upon the judgment roll; that other by the defendants from the whole judgment, and is based upon the entire record. The plaintiffs' appeal, though not first in the order of its taking, will be first considered and disposed of before passing to a determination of the larger questions embraced in the defendants' appeal. The action as originally brought was one to establish the right of the plaintiffs as the owners and holders of a junior mortgage upon certain premises to redeem said premises from the lien of a prior deed of trust upon the same owned and controlled by certain of the defendants, and to fix the basis of such redemption. The facts with relation to the earlier phases of this controversy are undisputed, and may be briefly summarized as follows: During the early part of the year 1917 one John Landers was possessed of certain large tracts of delta lands lying some 15 miles south of Stockton, containing in excess of 750 acres of land, and, being the whole of what is known in that region as "Mildred Island." During the summer of that year Landers borrowed $35,000 from the San Joaquin Valley Bank, a corporation, which was represented in a promissory note for said sum, dated June 21, 1917, executed by John Landers and Marie Landers, his wife, and as security for the payment of said note the makers thereof executed a deed of trust covering all of the lands known and described as Mildred Island, of which said deed of trust the San Joaquin Valley Bank was made the beneficiary, and two other certain persons were named therein as the trustees thereof. This deed of trust, while executed upon the said date, was, as the trial court found, not delivered until the 5th day of November, 1917. It was also not the first incumbrance upon certain portions of said lands, since at the date thereof there was an outstanding mortgage upon a portion of said lands in favor of one Henry E. Bothin, upon which, as the trial court found, there remained a balance due of $13,000, but which indebtedness has since been satisfied. There was also about 145 acres of said tract which was still standing of record in the names of persons and corporations other than John Landers and wife. On or about the 21st day of September, 1917, the said John Landers, purporting to act as the owner of the above premises as a whole, made and entered into a lease thereof to Pak Sing, also known as Seid Pak Sing, and Sing Kee Company, a copartnership, for a period of two years, commencing on the 1st day of January, 1918, and ending on the 31st day of December, 1919. The premises described in said lease as comprising the whole of Mildred Island were therein estimated as containing a total acreage of 1,237.58 acres, the annual rental of which was for the first year to be $25.50 per acre of the lands leased as so described, and for the second year the sum of $26 per acre of the lands so leased. The acreage was to be measured and determined by the area within the compass of the center of the levee. No deduction was to be made therefrom of the pieces or parts of the land used for canals, ditches, or drainage purposes, but it was provided that, though the measurement thus prescribed should determine the acreage for the purpose of fixing rental, the levee itself and all convenient space thereabout was not to be included within the lease, but the absolute possession, control, and custody thereof should remain in the owner, nor was the cultivation of the land by the tenant to extend beyond the base of the levee. In this portion of the lease thus designating the area and measurement of the land upon the basis of which the rentals were to be estimated it was provided as follows:

"But if any part of the land should not be sufficiently drained to make it susceptible of cultivation in the proper season, then the rental for the year of such season shall be diminished pro rata according to the amount of acreage so excluded from cultivation."

The tenants covenanted and agreed to pay the rent prescribed in said lease in the following manner, to wit: $10,000 on the 1st day of September, 1918; $10,000 on the 1st day of October, 1918; the balance for the year 1918 on the 1st day of November, 1918; $10,000 on the 1st day of September, 1919; $10,000 on the 1st day of October, 1919; the balance for the year 1919 on the 1st day of November, 1919. Upon the date of the execution of the lease the tenants were to make and deliver to the lessor three promissory notes each in the sum of $10,000, which should be evidence of the rental to be paid for the first year of the term of the lease, and which notes should be absolutely negotiable and not subject to any equities between the parties arising out of the lease or however arising. As security for the payment of the rent reserved for the second year of the term of the lease and of the performance of all of the terms and conditions thereof the tenants were to deposit with the lessor on the 5th day of January, 1918, the sum of $5,000 with which they were to be credited upon the last installment of their rent. The tenants were also to make and deliver to the lessor on the 1st day of January, 1919, a chattel mortgage upon an undivided one-fourth of the growing crops upon said lands as further security for the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants of said lease by the said lessees to be performed during the second year of the term thereof. On the part of the lessor it was agreed that, "if during the life of this lease any part of the crops grown by the tenant shall be destroyed by reason of the breaking of the levee or by reason of the failure of the owner to keep and perform the terms and conditions of this lease, the owner shall pay to the tenant for each acre of crop totally destroyed the sum of $40. If the destroyed and damaged crops should be less than total, then the owner shall pay to the tenant therefor for each acre of crop so partially destroyed and damaged a due and proper pro rata of said sum of $40, the amount of such pro rata to be determined by the parties hereto," or in the event of disagreement by arbitration. There was also a provision to be commented upon hereafter, fixing a like amount as damages for any and all breaches of the terms and covenants of said lease by the lessor or his assigns. As further security for the performance of the obligations of the owner to the tenants under the terms of said lease it was provided that the owner should give to the tenants a mortgage upon the southerly 780 acres of the leased lands which should be prior to and prevail over any other lien or incumbrance except the deed of trust above referred to. The covenants of the owner with the tenants followed. They were: (a) To clear the land of tule and willow roots; (b) to plow the land once; (c) to erect certain camps, buildings, barns, and warehouses of designated dimensions upon the land; (d) to install all siphons necessary for the growing of potatoes, beans, and other crops; (e) to drain to the necessary depth seepage water, as desired by tenants; (f) to install ditches and pipes necessary for seepage water; (g) to install, maintain, and operate the necessary pumping plant and apparatus for drainage of land; (h) to construct and maintain all necessary drainage ditches, canals, and bridges. The owner further covenanted that the camps and buildings should be ready for occupancy on the 1st day of January, 1918; that the said land should be ready for cultivation as follows: The southerly 780 acres thereof on the 1st day of February, 1918, and the remaining acres thereof on the 1st day of March, 1918. There were certain other minor and auxiliary covenants on the part of both of the parties to the lease, and it was provided therein that every term, condition, and covenant of the lease, whether expressed or implied, is of the essence thereof, and shall at the option of the party not offending constitute ground for the forfeiture thereof or for the enforcement of such other covenants as were therein or by law provided. Finally it was provided that the terms, conditions, and covenants of the said lease should inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the heirs, executors, successors, and assigns of the parties thereto.

The parties to this lease, having executed the same, entered upon the performance of its terms, covenants, and conditions at the times provided therein, and as a result of the performance and nonperformance on the part of the respective parties thereto the lessees thereunder commenced the present action by filing their original complaint on January 26, 1919; wherein, after alleging their own qualification to bring and maintain this action, they alleged that said John Landers was, on or about June 21, 1917, the owner of the lands in question with the exception of the portions thereof above noted, and that on said date he with his wife executed the deed of trust above referred to, and that the said deed of trust became effective by delivery on or about the 3d day of November, 1917; that the said John Landers, as lessor on the 21st day of September, 1917, entered into and executed the lease above referred to, pleading in substance and effect its terms, particularly with reference to the provisions therein relating to the execution by the former of the mortgage to the plaintiffs which forms the basis of the present action as presented in plaintiffs' original complaint. In so doing the plaintiffs set forth in hæc verba the provision in said mortgage that the same was given "as security for the faithful performance by said John Landers of the obligations, terms, and conditions of the lease of all the above described lands," etc. The plaintiffs proceeded to allege that the deed of trust to which said mortgage had by its terms been subordinated was on January 10, 1918, duly and regularly assigned to the Bank of Italy, a corporation, and was thereafter, and on December 9, 1918, by said Bank of Italy assigned to Harry B. Baker, one of the defendants herein, who thereupon appointed one H. B. M. Miller, another of the defendants herein, as trustee thereof in the place and stead of the trustees theretofore named therein; that at the time of these respective assignments of said deed of trust each of the said assignees thereof, and also the trustee substituted therein, had actual notice of said mortgage and of the fact that the plaintiffs were the owners and holders thereof, and had also actual notice of the obligations for which said mortgage had been given as security, and of the fact that the said plaintiffs advanced and paid a sum in excess of $50,000 under the terms of said lease, a large part of which said sum the plaintiffs had been obliged to pay by reason of the failure of said John Landers to keep the obligations to be by him kept and performed under the terms of said lease; that on February 27, 1918, the said John Landers and wife conveyed and transferred to Midland River Land Company, a corporation, all of the premises described in said deed of trust; that on October 1, 1918, said Midland River Land Company conveyed said premises to Joseph Basile, Jr.; and that on December 4, 1918, Joseph Basile, Jr., and wife conveyed the said premises to Leonard J. Grossman, another of the defendants herein; that said John Landers, and each and all of his said successors in the ownership or possession of said premises, in violation of the terms of said lease, have failed and refused, and still fail and refuse, to give to the plaintiffs herein the possession of the lands described in said lease with the exception of 152 acres thereof, and have failed and refused to clear said lands of willows or tules, or to plow the same, or to perform the said work agreed to be performed by said John Landers under said lease, and that said plaintiffs have been damaged thereby in the sum of $54,000, consisting in the sum of $30,000 paid by plaintiffs upon their said three notes, each for $10,000, and of the further sum of $24,000 damages sustained by the failure of the said Landers and his transferees to perform the said covenants of said lease. The plaintiffs proceed to allege that the defendants H. B. Barker, H. B. M. Miller and Leonard J. Grossman are each agents and representatives of the defendant Chicago Bonding & Surety Company, a corporation, and that the acts and transactions of each of the said persons as above set forth, including the acquisition of the properties covered by said deed of trust by said Grossman, have been done as the agents of and for the benefit and on behalf of the said Chicago Bonding & Surety Company; that prior to the commencement of this action the said defendants, acting for and on behalf of said corporation, have been purchasing outstanding claims and liens against the properties described in said deed of trust, but which outstanding claims and liens were and are upon portions of said properties upon which said deed of trust was not a first lien, and which said liens and claims are subsequent to the lien of the plaintiffs' said mortgage upon the lands covered thereby, and upon which said deed of trust is a first lien. The plaintiffs then proceed to allege that according to their information and belief the defendants herein have entered into a fraudulent and unlawful conspiracy, scheme, and plan to cause the said properties described in said deed of trust to be sold, not primarily for the payment of the promissory note for the sum of $35,000, which it secured, but mainly and chiefly for the payment of many large and fictitious obligations which the said defendants allege they have purchased, and for the payment of which they wrongfully allege they are entitled to sell said premises, but in order, in fact, to defeat and destroy the force and effect of the plaintiffs' said mortgage upon said premises, and that in furtherance of said scheme and plan these defendants procured the said Grossman to purchase the legal title to said premises prior to the 21st day of December, 1918, which was the date upon which an installment of interest fell due upon the said promissory note which said deed of trust secured, and conspired and agreed that said Grossman should not pay said installment of interest when so due in order to effect a default under the terms of said promissory note, which would render the whole of said promissory note, both principal and interest, due and payable, and thus enable the holder of said promissory note and the trustee under said deed of trust to proceed to sell said premises; and that in accordance with said scheme and conspiracy the said defendant Miller, as the trustee under said deed of trust, did, on the 6th day of January, 1919, cause notices of such sale to be given and published to the effect that said premises would be sold under said deed of trust on January 29, 1919, at public auction to the highest bidder; that thereupon, and upon learning of the fact and date of said proposed sale, the said plaintiffs on the dates of January 17 and 21, 1919, demanded of said defendant Miller that he advise them as to the amount necessary to redeem said premises from the operation and effect of said trust deed, and particularly from that portion of said premises upon which said deed of trust is a first lien; and that upon the 22d day of January, 1919, said Miller served upon said plaintiffs a notice to the effect that the sum of $185,000, with interest thereon from various dates, would be required to redeem said premises from the lien of said deed of trust, but that said Miller has failed and refused to advise plaintiff of the amount required to redeem that portion of said premises upon which said deed of trust is a first lien and upon which plaintiffs' said mortgage is a second lien from said deed of trust; that the aforesaid amount claimed as necessary to redeem said premises from said deed of trust is a padded and misleading amount, and was made and furnished in an endeavor to prevent said plaintiffs from redeeming from said deed of trust as a first lien that portion of said premises upon which their said mortgage is a second lien, and also of preventing other persons from purchasing or bidding for said premises at said trust sale, so that the defendants might purchase said property at a sum far below its real value, but free and clear of the plaintiffs' said mortgage thereon, and thus defeat the right of the plaintiffs to foreclose their said mortgage for the recovery of the said amounts advanced and paid out by said plaintiffs and secured thereby. Wherefore the plaintiffs seek by this action to have the court ascertain and determine the actual amount due upon and secured by said deed of trust by a proper accounting, and thus enable the said plaintiffs to redeem said premises from the same, and they also pray for an injunction and for general relief.

To this original complaint of the plaintiffs herein the defendants appeared and answered separately; the answers of these defendants being, however, substantially the same, and consisting in certain admissions as to matters of writing and of record, but otherwise of denials of the averments of said complaint either directly or upon or for the want of information or belief. Certain of the defendants added to their answers certain special defenses not material to the present inquiry. In addition to the denials of the defendant Grossman's answer he presented an amended answer and cross-complaint, alleging in the latter certain matters upon which he sought affirmative relief. To this cross-complaint the plaintiffs filed an answer and later, by leave of the court, a supplemental answer, putting in issue its averments. The plaintiffs a little later applied for and were granted leave to present, and did present and file, an amended and supplemental complaint, wherein, after dealing with certain of the matters referred to in the defendant Grossman's amended answer and cross-complaint, the plaintiffs proceeded to set forth with much particularity the additional respects in which the said John Landers and his assigns had failed, refused, and neglected to perform the aforesaid covenants and obligations of said lease to be by them performed, and also to set forth in detail the damages sustained by plaintiffs as a result thereof, and to pray for an accounting and for general relief against all of said defendants. To this supplemental complaint the said defendants united in an answer, putting in issue its essential averments. The issues having been thus made up, the trial court proceeded with the trial of the cause, and upon its submission made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law. It is not necessary at this stage of the case and upon the plaintiffs' appeal to deal with these in detail or treat of any other portions thereof than those which are involved in the plaintiffs' said appeal from the portions of the judgment of which the plaintiffs by this appeal complain. These portions of the judgment thus appealed from by the plaintiffs may well, for clarity, be stated at this point in the language of the plaintiffs' notice of appeal:

"IV. That, by reason of the provisions of the lease from said John Landers to said plaintiffs and providing, 'But, if any part of the land should not be sufficiently drained to make it susceptible of cultivation in the proper season, then the rental for the year of such season shall be diminished pro rata according to the amount of acreage so excluded from cultivation,' plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the sum of $2,055.38 expended by them for levee work, by reason of the fact that said sum of $2,055.38 was not expended by plaintiffs in order to protect any crop or crops planted by plaintiffs on said Mildred Island and growing thereon at the time said sum was expended for levee work, and that plaintiffs are only entitled to recover under the terms of said lease the amounts expended by them for such levee work during the time said crops were planted or growing upon said Mildred Island, and in order to protect said crops.

"V. That, by reason of the provision of the said lease from said Landers to the plaintiffs herein, which provision is set forth in paragraph IV of this judgment, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the sum of $17,850.09 expended by them for cleaning the land upon Mildred Island of brush, willows, and tules.

"VI. That, by reason of the provision of the said lease from said Landers to the plaintiffs herein, which provision is set forth in paragraph IV of this judgment, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the sum of $51,274.58 as net loss of profits for the year 1918 upon land not turned over or delivered to plaintiffs by John Landers or his assigns.

"VII. That, by reason of the provision of the said lease from said Landers to the plaintiffs herein, which provision is set forth in paragraph IV of this judgment, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the sum of $206,735.85 as net loss of profits for the year 1919 upon land not turned over or delivered to plaintiffs by John Landers or his assigns.

"VIII. That, by reason of the provisions of the said lease from said Landers to the plaintiffs herein, which provision is set forth in paragraph IV of this judgment, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the sum of $4,500 as loss of potato seed purchased in the year 1918 by plaintiffs to be planted upon said Mildred Island."

The plaintiffs' said appeal being upon the judgment roll alone, we are now to look at the findings and conclusions of the trial court having relation to the foregoing portions of said judgment in order to determine whether they are or are not sustained thereby. With the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify its findings with respect to these particular matters we are not called upon at this stage of the case to deal. The trial court found in conformity with the pleadings and admissions of the parties that the lease in question had been entered into between them, and hence of necessity that the parties thereto had agreed to and were respectively bound by all of the conditions, covenants, and obligations therein which were on the part of the lessor and lessees respectively to be performed. The trial court further found, generally speaking, that the averments of the plaintiffs' original complaint, referred to in said findings by the numbers of the paragraphs thereof, were true. With respect to the averments of the plaintiffs' supplemental complaint the trial court found in the main, and with certain exceptions and limitations hereinafter to be noted, that the averments thereof referred to by the numbers of the paragraphs were true. In so doing the trial court found to be true, with the exceptions to be noted, the following averment of the said supplemental complaint embraced in paragraphs from XV to XX thereof, viz:

"XV. John Landers and his assigns failed, neglected, and refused to construct any (and during said term there was and there is no) levee whatever along said dredger cut on said upper division; that is to say, said 457.58 acres is, along said dredger cut, wholly unprotected. Said dredger cut extends from Middle river to Latham slough, and the waters of said slough and said river flow through said cut. Said levee not constructed was necessary and as necessary as any other levee referred to in said lease, but its construction was not even attempted by John Landers or his assigns, although its construction was a material part of the consideration for said lease, and, although by Landers' agreement to construct the same said tenants were induced to enter into said lease, as Landers and his assigns well knew. No canal or ditch has been dug nor attempted to be dug in or on said upper division. It has never been cleared nor attempted to be cleared of tules and willow roots. Neither has it been plowed once nor attempted to be plowed once by John Landers, nor by any of his assigns. It has never been made ready nor attempted to be made ready for cultivation. It has been of no use, advantage, benefit, or profit whatever to said tenants. It could have been safely leveed and protected and ditched and drained so that it could and would have been of use and profit to said tenants.

"John Landers and his assigns never constructed nor maintained, but failed, refused, and neglected to construct or maintain, on or around said lower division a levee of sufficient height to prevent the surrounding water, at times of high water or of high tides, from flowing over it in many places. It was never worked down nor smooth. It cracked, and its cracks were not filled. The material placed therein was never sufficient in quantity to weight it down and solidify the seepage of water seeping through the same. It was during all of said term like a sieve, and in many places below ordinary high tide levels. By reason of such neglect, failure, and refusal upon the part of John Landers and his assigns, there was not, at any time during said term, any necessary levee or any levee constructed or maintained in conformity with said lease. Said tenants, in an endeavor to protect themselves, prevent said lower division from being overflowed, and make it ready for clearing, plowing, and cultivation, at their own expense, caused work to be done on said levee around said lower division, and necessarily paid and incurred liability therefor during said term in the total sum of $7,574.81. Said work was properly and skillfully done, and said charge therefor was reasonable. The construction and maintenance by Landers and his assigns of a sufficient levee around said lower division was a material part of the consideration on said tenants' part for their execution of said lease, and by said Landers' said agreement to construct and maintain such necessary levee they were induced to enter into said lease, as Landers and his assigns well knew.

"XVI. John Landers and his assigns failed, neglected, and refused to clear said leased land, or any part thereof, of tules and willow roots, or to plow the same once, except that in 1918 they so cleared and plowed 142.58 acres of said lower division. Said tenants were, for that reason, themselves compelled so to clear and plow once as much of said leased land as was possible, and in that behalf were compelled to incur liability and have therefor paid or incurred liability in the sum of $17,850.09. Said clearing and plowing by said tenants were necessary, and the same was as well, carefully, and skillfully done as was under the circumstances practically possible. The said charge therefor was reasonable.

"XVII. John Landers and his assigns failed, neglected, and refused to install, maintain, and operate the necessary pumping plant and apparatus for the drainage of said lands after irrigation by siphons of the potatoes growing thereon; and, as a consequence, said tenants were, at their own expense, compelled to repair, supply with fuel, and operate the pumping plant and apparatus installed by Landers, and, as the capacity thereof was insufficient for such purpose, to hire a larger floating pump—all at an expense of $6,638.48. Said repairing, supplying, operation, and hiring were necessary, and said charge therefor was reasonable.

"XVIII. John Landers and his assigns failed, neglected, and refused to install all siphons necessary for the growing of potatoes, and, as a consequence, said tenants were, at their own expense, compelled to install siphons necessary for such purpose, at an expense of $410.66. Said installation thereof was necessary, and said charge therefor was reasonable.

"XIX. John Landers and his assigns failed, neglected, and refused to construct or maintain all necessary drainage ditches, canals, and bridges. As a consequence, said tenants were compelled at an expense of $2,202.45 to construct and maintain the same. These were necessary and said charge therefor was reasonable.

"XX. John Landers and his assigns failed, neglected, and refused to drain to the necessary depth seepage water as desired by said tenants."

With respect to the averments of paragraph XV of said supplemental complaint above quoted the trial court found the same to be true, with the exception "that the amount expended by plaintiffs in the building, maintenance, and repairs upon the levees mentioned in said paragraph was the sum of $9,620.81, instead of the sum set forth in said paragraph XV; that of said sum of $9,620.81 so expended by said plaintiffs in the said work referred to in said paragraph XV of said supplemental complaint the sum of $7,565.43 was expended by said plaintiffs in and for the protection of the crops planted by plaintiffs and growing or to be grown upon said premises."

With respect to the averments of paragraph XVII of the supplemental complaint above quoted the trial court found the same to be true, except "that the expense incurred by said plaintiffs for the work mentioned in said paragraph was the sum of $6,855.03, instead of the sum referred to in said paragraph" ($6,638.48). In its conclusions of law, and also in its judgment predicated thereon, the trial court, in dealing with the elements of the plaintiffs' alleged damages founded upon the foregoing alleged breaches of the covenants and conditions of the lease to be by the lessor and his assigns performed, and the consequences which flowed therefrom, concluded and adjudged that by reason of the clause in said lease providing as follows: "But, if any part of the land should not be sufficiently drained to make it susceptible of cultivation in the proper season, then the rental of the year of such season shall be diminished pro rata according to the amount of acreage so excluded from cultivation," the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the sum of $2,055.38 expended by plaintiffs for levee work as averred by them in paragraph XIX of their supplemental complaint, which the court in its findings had found to be true. The trial court further in its said conclusions of law and judgment concluded and adjudged that, by reason of the provision of said lease last above quoted, the said plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the sum of $17,850.09 alleged by them to have been properly expended by them for clearing the land of brush, willows, and tules according to the averments of paragraph XVI of their supplemental complaint, which the said court in its findings found to be true. The trial court further in its said conclusions of law and judgment concluded and adjudged that, by reason of the provisions of said lease last above quoted, the said plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the sum of $51,274.58 alleged by plaintiffs to be the net loss of profits for the year 1918 from lands not farmed by said plaintiffs by reason of the failure and refusal of said lessor and his assigns to keep and perform the terms of said lease, as found by said court in its foregoing findings of fact, and particularly in paragraph XLIV thereof, wherein the court specifically found the said sum of $51,274.58 to be the profit which said plaintiffs would have netted from said unfarmed lands had the said lease not been breached by the said lessor and his assigns in the respects so alleged and found. The trial court further in its said conclusions of law and judgment concluded and adjudged that, by reason of the provision in said lease last above quoted, the said plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the sum of $206,735.85 alleged by plaintiffs to be the net loss of profits for the year 1919 upon land not turned over or delivered to and not farmed by said plaintiffs by said lessor or his assigns, as found by said court in paragraph XLV of its said findings of fact, and which net loss to said amount the said court in its said findings found the said plaintiffs to have sustained. The trial court further in its said conclusions of law and judgment concluded and adjudged that, by reason of the provisions in said lease last above quoted, the said plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the sum of $4,500 for the loss of potato seed purchased by them in the year 1918 for planting upon said lands as averred in paragraph XXII of their said supplemental complaint, which said court in its findings of fact found substantially to be true.

[1] It is the foregoing five items in the conclusions of law and corresponding judgment of the trial court of which the plaintiffs complain upon this their appeal upon the judgment roll. The first question thus presented is as to whether or not the trial court was justified in so interpreting the provision in said lease last above quoted as to deny the plaintiffs the specific remedy in damages as to these items which they sought and which the trial court found they had sustained by reason of the failure and refusal of the lessor and his assigns to put and keep the major portion of the lands covered by said lease in condition for cultivation and use by the plaintiffs for the purposes for which said lands had been leased by them for the term of said lease. If the conclusions of law of the trial court in the foregoing respects are to find their justification solely in the interpretation which it has in each instance placed upon the last above quoted provision in said lease we are of the opinion that it was in error as to such interpretation and hence as to its legal conclusions based thereon. While it is true that a written instrument as to the interpretation of any particular clause therein is to be read as a whole, and that the particular clause or sentence thereof under scrutiny is not to be controlled as to its meaning by its position or context in the instrument, it is also true that the ancient maxim of noscitur a sociis has still some degree of application to the use of the context in determining the scope and meaning of the words, sentences, and clauses of contracts, and it may therefore be noted as a matter of some significance that the clause in this lease last above quoted is to be found in that portion thereof which deals with the amount of annual rent to be paid per acre by the lessees, and not in that portion of said lease which purports to deal with the covenants and obligations of the lessor with relation to the placing and keeping of said lands in a condition for cultivation, and with the penalties which are prescribed for the failure or refusal on the part of the lessor to perform his several covenants in that regard. Looking to this lease as a whole, it would seem to be obvious, from the location of these lands, from the amount of rental to be paid per acre therefor, from the large advance payments in the form of negotiable promissory notes which the lessees were to make on account of the rental of said lands for the first year, from the nature and extent of the obligations assumed by the lessor, and, finally, from the rather unusual requirement in the lease that the lessor shall give to the lessees a mortgage upon a large part of the lands leased as security for the faithful performance on his part of the covenants therein to be by him performed, that it was the manifest intent of the parties to this lease that practically all of the lands covered thereby should presently be put into condition for intensive cultivation by the lessees through the performance on the part of the lessor of his express agreements to clear, levee, ditch, drain, and plow the whole thereof, and to erect buildings thereon suitable for the uses of the lessees in the course of such intensive cultivation of the whole of said land. If we are correct in this conclusion, it would seem irresistibly to follow that the clause in said lease above quoted, which purports to limit the amount of rental per acre which the lessees were to pay to the acreage actually so drained as to be susceptible of cultivation, would afford little, if any, substantial remedy to the lessees for the failure and refusal of the lessor to do and perform those covenants which would, if unperformed, work a defeat of the entire purpose of the parties in engaging in the undertaking for the reclamation and cultivation of this large tract of land as contemplated by the terms of this instrument when read as a whole. It is to be noted that the trial court expressly found that the insufficiency of drainage which rendered any portion of such lands not susceptible of cultivation was that created solely by the lessor's breach of the lease in that regard.

The respondents, however, contend that this provision in the lease is to be interpreted to mean that as to whatever acreage of said lands had not been prepared for cultivation by sufficient drainage such portion thereof was thereby to be practically withdrawn from the terms of the lease so that, not only were the lessees to pay no rental therefor, but the lessor was to be entirely relieved from the covenants and obligations of said lease in respect to that portion of the premises, and no longer to be held liable to respond in damages for his failure to fulfill his agreement to do the various acts provided in said lease to be by him performed in order to properly drain said land and prepare the same for cultivation. The argument of the respondents in support of this contention is not convincing, and the case of Edward Barron Estate Co. v. Waterman, 32 Cal. App. 171, 162 P. 410, can hardly be said to be an authority in support thereof, since in that case it appears that the lease in question expressly provided that the sole penalty for the delay in the completion of the building for occupancy at the stated time was to be the abatement of the rent during the period of such delay, and that the lessees were not to be entitled to any damage, rebate, or recoupment on account of such delay other than that of the abatement of the rent. There is yet another reason why the failure of the lessor to perform his agreements to reduce said lands to such a proper state of drainage as to render them susceptible of cultivation should not be given the effect of removing the said undrained acreage thereof from the operation and obligations of said lease. It is to be found in the very terms of the clause in said lease upon which the respondents rely, since it is therein provided that the failure to so drain said lands as to render them susceptible of cultivation "in the proper season should only have the effect of diminishing the rental for the year of such season." It would thus seem that, since the terms of this lease were two years, covering two entire seasons of cropping, the failure of the lessor to properly drain the lands or any portion thereof during the planting season of the first year could have had no other effect than that merely of the diminution of the rental pro rata for that year, leaving the relations and the respective liabilities of the lessor and lessees as to the entire acreage of said lands entirely unchanged as to the occupation, preparation, and use of the whole thereof for the second year of the lease.

It is further to be noted that said lease contains certain specific provisions fixing the amount of damages to be recovered by the plaintiffs in the event of the lessor's failure to perform his covenant to properly drain said lands in order to render them susceptible of cultivation. This stipulation in the lease is not only inconsistent with the foregoing clause therein, as interpreted by said defendants, but would be entirely unnecessary and ineffectual if said clause is to bear such interpretation.

[2] It would follow from the foregoing considerations that, if, as the trial court found, the said lessor had breached practically all of his covenants and agreements in said lease to drain, clear, plow, and thus render cultivatable the lands covered by said lease, and if, as the trial court found, the plaintiffs had been thereby put to the necessity of making certain expenditures in the way of the drainage or clearing or of work upon the ditches or levees upon or surrounding said lands in order to the cultivation thereof and to the planting of crops thereon or of the protection of their said crops when so planted, the conclusion of law from such findings of fact should have been that the plaintiffs were entitled to the inclusion of some amount as to each of the aforesaid items of outlay by them in arriving at the amount the return of which the plaintiffs' mortgage was to secure; and that the plaintiffs were also entitled to a like inclusion of some amount as damages for their losses in crops occurring through the aforesaid breaches of some or all of the said lessor's covenants; and hence that, in allowing no amount whatever in its conclusions of law and judgment on account of these items of outlay and of damage, the trial court was in error.

When we come to estimate the extent and consequences of such error we are led to a consideration of each of the said several items which form the gravamen of the plaintiffs' present appeal.

[3] As to the first of the five items of alleged error on the part of the trial court there seems to be some confusion as between the plaintiffs' pleadings and the findings of the court which may render that particular item unavailable to plaintiffs upon their limited appeal. The plaintiffs in paragraph XV of their supplemental complaint alleged that by reason of the failure and refusal of the lessor to build or maintain proper levees the plaintiffs were obliged to expend, and did expend, the sum of $7,574.81 in doing the work to be done on said levees which the lessor had failed and refused to do in order to protect the said lands from being overflowed, and thus rendered incapable of drainage or cultivation. The court found that the plaintiffs had actually expended the sum of $9,620.81 in doing the work of building, maintaining, and repairing said levees, but also found that only $7,565.43 thereof was expended in and for the protection of crops planted by plaintiffs and grown upon said premises, in view of the fact that the plaintiffs were granted by the judgment substantially all that they asked, it would seem that the disallowances of the difference between the sum found to have been actually expended and the amount allowed on account of such expenditure would not furnish sufficient ground for reversal upon this appeal, even though the reasons given by the trial court for making the deduction should be deemed by us to be erroneous.

As to the second item for the exclusion of which the plaintiffs appeal, and which refers to the expenditure of $17,850.09 by plaintiffs to clear certain portions of said land from brush, willows, and tules after the lessor's failure to keep the covenants of his lease in that regard, it would seem that the conclusions of law and judgment of the trial court should have responded to its findings to the effect that such expenditure had been necessarily and properly made, and that its failure in any measure whatever so to do for the reason stated was error on the part of the trial court. The same reasoning, based upon similar findings and the proper conclusion to be drawn therefrom, applies also to the third and fourth items for the exclusion wholly from the judgment this appeal is founded, and which items refer to the plaintiffs' loss in profits in crops for the years 1918 and 1919, which they were unable to plant upon a large portion of said lands due to the lessor's failure to keep his aforesaid covenants; and a like reasoning and conclusion applies to the last of said items, which refers to the plaintiffs' loss of potato seed purchased but unable to be planted upon said lands by reason of the unavailability of a large part thereof for cultivation and the planting of said seed due to the lessor's breaches of said several covenants.

The respondents upon this appeal urge, however, several considerations in addition to those above referred to, touching upon the plaintiffs' present right to prosecute this appeal, and also to the extent, if any, of their right to a reversal of the judgment for the errors above adverted to. The defendants, in aid of the first of these considerations, presented a motion to dismiss this, the plaintiffs' appeal, or, in the event of the denial of that motion, to have the court limit the scope of said appeal as indicated in said motion. We have concluded to deny these motions upon the authority and for the reasons stated in the case of Sing v. Barker, 187 Cal. 587, 203 P. 737, and for the further and possibly more cogent reason that, in view of the questions presented upon this appeal, and also upon the defendants' appeal from the whole judgment, and upon the entire record in the case, we have deemed a review of the case in its entirety as presented upon both appeals expedient, if not essential to its ultimate determination upon a retrial, which appears to be inevitable.

The conclusion above arrived at to the effect that the plaintiffs were correct in urging upon this, their appeal, that they were entitled upon the findings to a judgment awarding them some measure of relief on account of the several items which form the gravamen of their case upon appeal brings us to a consideration of the question as to what that measure of relief should have been, and hence as to what the order of this court should be in returning this cause to the trial court for the correction of its aforesaid errors. If the plaintiffs' appeal were the only appeal in the case before us, the solution of this problem would be comparatively simple, requiring only a reference to such other of the findings of the trial court as the defendants and respondents upon this appeal rely upon as limiting the utmost measure in any event of the plaintiffs' remedies. The logical order is, therefore, to next consider the respondents' contentions in this regard. As to the item embracing the plaintiffs' outlay of $7,565.43 for the construction and maintenance of levees by the lessees, after the lessor had failed and neglected to so do, in order to prevent the overflow of said lands and to put them in condition for clearing and cultivation, the only objection which the appellants urge against the allowance of said item is that above considered and disallowed. The same may also be said of the item embracing the plaintiffs' expenditure of the sum of $17,850.09 for clearing the land of brush, willows, and tules after the lessor's failure to fulfill his obligation so to do. The respondents' main contention upon the plaintiffs' appeal other than those above considered is that as to the three last items for disallowance of which the plaintiffs complain the plaintiffs are not entitled to a ruling of this court that the trial court was bound to allow all or any of said items in their entirety based upon the court's findings as to the plaintiffs' losses in each of said regards, for the reason that, if any amount whatever should be allowed on account thereof, the terms of the lease as found by the trial court fix the amount of such allowance. The first two of the items last above referred to are those having to do with the plaintiffs' loss of profits for the years 1918 and 1919, arising out of the lessor's failure to deliver a large portion of the lands covered by said lease in a condition for the cultivation of crops with their resultant profits during each of these years. The third of said items relates to the plaintiffs' damage in the loss of potato seed purchased for planting upon said uncultivable lands. As to the damages which the plaintiffs claim to have sustained from these three sources, and which the trial court found to have actually amounted to a very large sum, the respondents contend that the following clauses in the lease limit the possible amount of the plaintiffs' recovery in any event to a fixed and much smaller sum. The clauses in said lease thus relied upon by the respondents read as follows:

(a) "If during the life of this lease any part of the crops grown by the tenant shall be destroyed by reason of the breaking of the levee, or by reason of the failure of the owner to keep and perform the terms and conditions of this lease by him to be kept and performed, the owner shall pay to the tenant for each acre of crop totally destroyed the sum of $40. If the destroyed and damaged crops shall be less than total then the owner shall pay to the tenant therefor for each acre of crop so partially destroyed and damaged a due and proper pro rata of said sum of $40; the amount of such pro rata to be determined by the parties hereto" (provision being made for arbitrators in the event the parties could not agree).

(b) "The liability of the owner hereunder shall not, however, exceed the said obligation to pay the $40 or the pro rata thereof as aforesaid; the amount so to be paid by him shall be the absolute measure of his responsibility or obligation to the tenant on any covenant, term and condition hereof.

(c) "The owners shall not be liable for damages to said land or to personal property sustained in or about said land however caused, otherwise than as hereinabove provided. The tenant shall hold the owner harmless of liability for damage or injury to person or property caused by the use of said land by the tenant."

While the respondents herein insist upon their own appeal that the foregoing provisions of the lease are to be given express application to that portion of the findings and judgment of the trial court which undertook to find and award a large sum in damages to the plaintiffs for the total or partial destruction of a crop of potatoes due to the lessor's failure or refusal to put and keep the levees in a proper state of maintenance and repair, and of which specific portion of the findings and judgment the plaintiffs do not upon this appeal complain, the respondents do herein contend that the aforesaid provisions of said lease are also broad enough in their terms or necessary implications to include every sort of injury which the plaintiffs might sustain by the breach on the part of the lessor of any or all of the covenants and obligations of said lease to be by him performed; and hence that whatever relief this court may conclude that these plaintiffs are entitled to upon this particular appeal in the form of pecuniary compensation for injuries sustained through the lessor's breach of his covenants must be limited to the sum of $40 per acre of the lands leased to them, and which, upon the finding of a leased area of approximately 970 acres, would amount, at most, to approximately $38,800.

In response to the foregoing contentions of the respondents as to the meaning and effect to be given to the foregoing provisions of said lease purporting to limit the amount of the plaintiffs' relief against the lessor's breaches of the obligations of said lease, the appellants do not seriously or very effectively argue that the said provisions of said lease are not susceptible of the broad interpretation which the respondents would have us place upon them; but they insist that, if they are to be given such interpretation, they amount to nothing more than an agreement for the payment of a penalty or of stipulated damages for the breach of said obligation or series of obligations, and that, if for a penalty, they are void under well-settled rules of law, and, if for the payment of stipulated damages, they are void under the provisions of sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code. The plaintiffs further in this connection contend that the question as to whether, under section 1671 of the Civil Code, "it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage" for the breach of the obligations of a contract is a question of fact for the determination of the trial court in each particular case; and that in this case the trial court has determined that question adversely to the defendants by its findings based upon the evidence in the case that the plaintiffs' damages for the lessor's several breaches of the obligations of said lease were ascertainable and by ascertaining the amount of the same for each separate breach thereof; and furthermore, that the presumption under section 1670 of the Civil Code, being that an agreement for the fixation in advance of liquidated damages is void, it was incumbent upon the defendants by proper pleadings and proof to repel such presumption by showing that the contract falls within the exception contained in section 1671 of the Civil Code; and that the defendants have not sustained that burden in this case as presented upon this appeal, citing Thomas v. Anthony, 30 Cal. App. 217, 220, 157 P. 823, and cases cited. The further discussion, however, of the application of the foregoing sections of the Civil Code to the facts of this case may, for reasons which will then appear, be more profitably considered upon the defendants' appeal from the whole judgment and upon the entire record to which we shall now address ourselves.

The point which the defendants first and most strenuously urge upon their said appeal is the point which we have already considered and determined upon the plaintiffs' appeal, viz. the interpretation to be placed upon the clause in said lease relating to the diminution of the rental according to acreage in the event portions of the lands leased shall not in any season be rendered susceptible of cultivation through insufficient drainage. We find in the very elaborate arguments of counsel for the defendants on their appeal upon this point no sufficient reason for changing our conclusions in that regard; nor do we think that the defendants' contention for the first time urgeable upon their appeal upon the whole record, to the effect that there was some evidence offered tending to show that during the preliminary discussion between the attorneys for the respective parties to said lease, during the preparation thereof, as to the protection to be afforded the lessor by the wording and insertion of said clause, is entitled to the controlling weight which the present appellants would assign to it. The said clause in the lease seems to us, from its position and terms, to be sufficiently clear in its scope and meaning as not to be aided by contemporaneous evidence touching its interpretation. We therefore hold that there is no merit in the first point urged upon the defendants' appeal.

[4] The next point urged by the defendants most earnestly upon their appeal is that already adverted to, viz. as to the application of sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code to the provisions in said lease fixing the liability of the defendants at the sum of $40 per acre for damages sustained by the plaintiffs through the lessor's failure to fulfill the covenants and obligations of his lease. The defendants urge that the phrasing of said provisions of the lease present the limited liability of the lessor and of his assigns in two aspects: First, that relating to the latter's liability for crops wholly or partially destroyed by reason of the breaking of the levees or by reason of the failure of the lessor to keep and perform the terms and conditions of said lease and to be by him performed; second, that relating to a like agreed liability of the lessor for any and all other damage suffered by the lessees for any breach or breaches whatever of the covenants and obligations of said lease or otherwise on the part of the lessor. Under the first of these stipulations the defendants contend that the lessor was to be exempted from liability for the destruction of the crops of the lessees caused by the breaking of the levees beyond the limitation of $40 per acre of such crops so destroyed; while under the second and much more inclusive fixation of liability the lessor was not to be held in damages beyond said limited amount for any breach of his said obligations, and particularly was not to be held liable beyond said sum for the loss of prospective crops and the profit therefrom due to the failure of the lessor to prepare, by drainage, clearing, plowing, and the maintenance of proper levees, a large portion of the leased premises for cultivation and cropping during both cropping seasons embraced within the two-year term of said lease. As to the loss of grown crops actually destroyed through the inundation of the cultivated lands due to the breakage of the levees, there would seem to be little doubt that the attempted fixation of liability on the part of the lessor for such losses in advance comes fully within the inhibition of section 1670 of the Civil Code against stipulated damages, and does not come within the exception to the rule embodied in section 1671 of said Code. The amount of $40 per acre of crops destroyed is denominated "damages" in the clauses of the lease limiting the recovery to that sum in the event of a total destruction of such crops occurring through the failure of the lessor to keep his obligations to protect such lands from overflow. The damages arising from the loss or destruction of merchantable crops is ascertainable under well-known rules of law. Tretter v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 147 Iowa, 375, 126 N. W. 339, 140 Am. St. Rep. 304, 309, and notes. The appellants, however, cite cases to the effect that it lies within the power of parties to such agreements to entirely absolve the lessor from liability for such damages, and that, this being so, they would have the power to fix the measure of damages to any sum short of such entire absolution. The chief authority upon which they rely in this behalf is the case of Stephens v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 109 Cal. 86, 41 P. 783, 29 L. R. A. 751, 50 Am. St. Rep. 17, wherein this court held that a railroad company, in giving a lease of lands adjoining its depot grounds, might insert a covenant wholly relieving the company from liability for damage caused by fire from its engines. The rule laid down in that case, and followed in others cited by appellants, is doubtless correct, but it by no means follows therefrom that parties to contracts, who may stipulate in advance that there shall be no liability for damages suffered by one or the other from breaches of their respective obligations, may also stipulate in advance for a fixed sum to be allowed in damages for such breaches, since so to interpret these cases would be to render wholly nugatory the provisions of section 1670 of the Civil Code respecting liquidated damages. In determining, however, that the trial court did not err in holding void the stipulation relating to the fixation of damages for the loss of the plaintiffs' potato crop at $40 per acre of such crop destroyed we are not to be understood as upholding its entire action in that regard, since the appellants further contend that in undertaking to admeasure such damages, in disregard of the stipulation in the lease, the trial court also disregarded and departed from the proper rules of law for determining the plaintiffs' actual damages for their loss of such crops. The finding of the trial court upon which its judgment was predicated allowing the plaintiffs the sum of $96,481.20 damages for the loss of their said grown but yet unharvested crop of potatoes reads as follows:

"That on or about the 9th day of October, 1919, said plaintiffs had and there was growing upon 222 acres of said 382.9 acres of said lower division, a crop of potatoes not harvested; that on or about said date the levee alongside of dredger cut on said lower division, without any fault, act, or omission of said plaintiffs, or of any one acting for or under them (but solely from the failure, refusal, and neglect of John Landers and his assigns to construct and/or maintain said necessary levee), broke, and by reason of such breaking said 222 acres of undug potatoes were overflowed, ruined, and totally destroyed, to plaintiffs' actual damage in the sum of $96,481.20; that said damages are arrived at as follows, to wit: That the average yield of potatoes per acre during the year 1919 upon said premises was 164 sacks per acre; that the average market price at the place of destruction of said potatoes during the year 1919 was the sum of $3.15 per sack; that the expense of sacks for said potatoes for the year 1919 was the sum of 18½ cents per sack, and that the cost of digging potatoes was the sum of 25 cents per sack, and that the cost of hauling said sacks of potatoes from the field to the levee was the sum of 5 cents per sack, leaving the net value of said potatoes in the ground at the time of their destruction at the sum of $2.65 per sack; that 36,408 sacks of potatoes were so destroyed, of the value of $2.65 per sack in the ground, making the total loss to plaintiffs of the said sum of $96,481.20."

[5-8] It thus appears that the rule adopted by the trial court for admeasuring the plaintiffs' damages sustained in the loss of said crop of potatoes was based upon the average market price for the year 1919, less certain expenses for digging, sacking, and hauling to market said potatoes. We are satisfied that such was not the proper rule to be applied to the admeasurement of said damages. The proper rule to be applied in such a case is that of the market value of the crop at the date of its destruction. It was so held in the case of Teller v. Bay and River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 P. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779, wherein, in a case similar in its main aspects with this one, the rule and the authorities supporting it are very fully discussed. In 17 Corpus Juris, p. 887, the principle is thus stated:

"The measure of damages for the entire destruction of a growing crop is its value at the time and place of destruction. A similar rule applies in case of the destruction of a matured crop"—citing many cases in support of the rule as thus stated.

We therefore conclude that the trial court was in error in the rule it adopted for the ascertainment of the plaintiffs' damages for the loss of their matured potato crop upon lands actually cultivated by them in the season of 1919. The effect of such error will be considered in the later discussion of another phase of this appeal. A more difficult question immediately arises, however, relating to the plaintiffs' alleged but disallowed claim for damages for the loss in profits for crops unplanted by them during the seasons of 1918 and 1919 upon portions of said leased lands which were not rendered susceptible of cultivation through the failure, neglect, and refusal of the lessor and his assigns to drain, clear, plow, and otherwise put into condition and protect for purposes of cultivation. It might be argued that this question does not arise upon this appeal since the trial court disallowed these claims. But, since the said disallowance of these claims for prospective profits was predicated by the trial court upon reasons which upon the plaintiffs' appeal we have held to be inadequate, and since the trial court will be called upon to reconsider this subject upon a retrial of the cause, we deem it proper to give to it such consideration as will hereafter appear. An interesting question arises as to whether such prospective damages for loss of profits to be derived by plaintiffs from those portions of said leased premises which they never did receive in a condition for cultivation, and never did cultivate, are not too speculative for admeasurement or recovery in this action, and also as to whether these damages are not so difficult of ascertainment as to give room for application of the limitation contained in the lease. These aspects of the case will be later herein considered.

We have thus arrived at a discussion of the most serious question which has been presented by the entire record upon this, the defendants' appeal. It is the question as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to be allowed any damages whatever for the consequences of the breaking of the levees surrounding these leased lands and their resultant overflow and the destruction of existing or loss of prospective crops growing or to be grown thereon. The findings of the trial court in that regard show that at the time the lessor and lessees entered into this lease the levees surrounding the leased premises were in a bad state, due to ill construction and disrepair; that the lessor undertook and covenanted to perform the work of placing and of keeping said levees in a proper state of construction, repair, and maintenance to protect said premises from overflow; that the lessor failed and neglected to keep his covenants in that regard; that in the latter part of the year 1918 the plaintiffs notified the said lessor of his failure to perform his covenants in the foregoing regard; and that it was necessary that such work should be done at once in order to protect the crops of the lessees growing on said premises from the danger of overflow; and that, the lessor still failing and neglecting to do said work, the lessees a little later notified him that if he did not immediately proceed to keep and perform the terms and agreements of said lease requiring the doing of said work by him the lessees would immediately proceed to do and perform said work and hold the same and the cost thereof secured by their mortgage; that, pursuant to said demands and notices, the lessees did immediately thereafter take possession of said levees, and did proceed to do work thereon by the aid of dredgers, pumping plants, and other machinery and activities; that, while they were so engaged in doing said work, the levees broke at a point about 60 feet from the place where the large pumping plant of the lessees was in operation, with the consequent flooding of the land and destruction, not only of the crop of potatoes then being grown thereon, but also with the effect of rendering practically all of the lands covered by said lease no longer susceptible of cultivation.

The trial court allowed the plaintiffs to include in the relief accorded them their claims for damages arising from the destruction of their grown crops of potatoes caused by said break in the levees, but it denied the plaintiffs any relief in the way of a recovery of damages for the losses in prospective profits from crops not susceptible of being grown upon the overflowed portions of said premises during the seasons of 1918 and 1919 for reasons which we have heretofore held to be an inadequate basis for such denial. It is, however, the further contention of the appellants herein that the plaintiffs are entitled to no recovery or relief for the damages sustained by them through the breaking of said levees, for the reason that, when the plaintiffs took the possession and control of said levees, and undertook to do the work thereon which the lessor had covenanted, but failed, to perform, they assumed responsibility for the state of said levees, and were to be held responsible for whatever happened thereafter by reason of the inadequacy of said levees to protect the lands of the plaintiffs under cultivation from overflow. The difficulty with this contention on the part of these appellants is that it leaves out of consideration the fact that the trial court in its findings, in dealing with the work done by the plaintiffs upon these levees after they had undertaken such work, expressly found that the said work so undertaken by the plaintiffs "was properly and skillfully done," and further found that "said levee, * * * without any act or omission of said tenants or of any one acting for or under them (but solely from said failure, refusal and neglect of John Landers and his assigns to construct said necessary levee), broke, and by reason of said breaking and consequent inundation said 200 acres of undug potatoes were overflowed, ruined, and totally destroyed." In the face of these express findings it will be seen that the cases cited by the appellants in support of their said contention have no application to the situation here presented, since in each and all of said cases the doing by the tenant or by the landlord negligently or inefficiently of work which under the terms of the lease they were not bound to do at all is made the basis of all of these decisions denying recoveries to those, whether tenants or landlords, for losses due to conditions created by the improper or negligent performance of work which they themselves, while not bound to do at all, had undertaken to perform. The case of Callahan v. Loughran, 102 Cal. 476, 36 P. 835, may be said to fairly state the rule which has quite uniformly been adhered to in the foregoing regard. That was the case of a landlord who, not being bound to make certain repairs upon a stairway of premises demised by him, nevertheless undertook to do so. The wife of the tenant was injured in descending such stairway at a time when she believed the landlord had completed the work of making said repairs. In an action for the recovery of damages by the tenants for such injuries, this court held that it was necessary to allege and prove, in order to such recovery, that said injuries had been caused by the want of skill and care on the part of the landlord or his workmen in making said repairs, and that, failing in such averment and proof, the tenant was not entitled to recover. See, also, 16 R. C. L. pp. 1057, 1058. The same rule has been held to apply to a tenant who undertakes to make repairs in the premises he occupies which the landlord has covenanted but failed or refused to make. If the tenant uses due care and skill in attempting to make such repairs, but damage nevertheless results from the defect which it was the duty of the landlord to repair, he may recover such damages as have been caused by the breach of the landlord's obligation in the first instance to effectually perform his covenant in that regard.

In 1 Sutherland on Damages (4th Ed.) p. 320, § 90, it is stated that the duty of the tenants in attempting to do work which the landlord was obligated to perform is such care and diligence as a man of ordinary prudence would use under the circumstances, although they may not have done the very thing nor used the very means that should have been used, as developed by subsequent information; and at page 321 it is further stated that the efforts of the tenants to reduce the effects of the landlord's wrong were to be confined to such efforts as were reasonable and made in good faith. The appellants, however, contend that, notwithstanding the found fact that the work which the plaintiffs undertook to do upon said levees after the lessor's default in keeping his covenants in that regard "was properly and skillfully done," such finding does not furnish an adequate reply to their contention that the plaintiffs are entitled to no relief or recovery in damages resulting from the breach in the levees, for the reason that the defects in the said levees were obvious when the plaintiffs took said lease and undertook to cultivate and crop said lands, and hence that in taking possession of the same and planting crops thereon in the presence and existence and with knowledge of these obvious defects and consequent danger of overflow they took the risk of whatever breaches in the levees occurred thereafter, and hence are not entitled to recover damages for the resultant overflow due to such original and obvious defects. We do not understand the rule invoked by the defendants in this regard to go thus far. It is true, as found by the trial court, that the levees in question were poorly constructed and at the time of the making of the lease had certain obvious defects; but it does not appear from the findings or otherwise that the levees in question were not for the time being sufficient to restrain the waters of the river from coming in upon said lands at their normal elevation, but that for the better part of the year 1918 these levees, though poorly constructed and not maintained in a proper state of repair, did in fact restrain said waters from breaking through said levees and entering upon said lands. The plaintiffs, in the presence of the express covenants of the lessor to properly construct and repair said levees within a stated time, which time was made the essence of the contract, had a right to rely upon the keeping of the said covenant by the lessor, and it was only after the failure of the lessor so to do had been prolonged until the danger of overflow became imminent that the tenants, after vainly insisting that the lessor immediately proceed to perform his covenant, undertook by doing work themselves upon the levees to prevent such threatened overflow. Under such conditions, as found by the trial court, we are unable to uphold the defendants' contention that the plaintiffs from the inception of their entry upon the premises pursuant to their said lease assumed the risk of losses to result from defects in the levees which the lessor had expressly covenanted to repair.

The appellants also contend that the evidence discloses that the breach in the levees from which the plaintiffs' chief damage arose was caused by the plaintiffs' own acts in placing and operating upon said levees certain large machinery, the operation of which and the jarring caused thereby were directly responsible for the breach in the levees which occurred within a short distance from where such machinery was being thus operated. There is some evidence which tends to support that contention, but the trial court did not deduce therefrom the conclusion which the defendants upon this appeal would have us draw. On the contrary, the trial court expressly found that the operations of the plaintiffs in seeking to repair said levees were "properly and skillfully done," and further expressly found that the said break in said levee was not due to said assigned cause, and we are unable to say that these findings are contrary to or are not supported by the evidence, taken as a whole in the case.

[9, 10] Having thus arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to be awarded some measure of damages for the lessor's breaches of the aforesaid covenants and agreements of said lease, the next question which presents itself is as to what the measure of such recovery should be with regard to those damages claimed by the plaintiffs to have been sustained by the loss of profits during the years 1918 and 1919 from the portions of said leased lands which they were unable to cultivate and crop at all on account of the lessor's breach of his aforesaid covenants. It is true that the trial court did not by its judgment award to the plaintiffs any damages whatever for the loss of such prospective profits; but it is also true that, as we have hereinbefore determined, the particular basis upon which it rested its said judgment was insufficient as a support for the same. Since this case must be retried, it is incumbent upon us to lay down a rule for the guidance of the trial court in the fixation of such damages. We do not agree with the defendants' contention that these damages are entirely too speculative and uncertain as to be beyond the realm of ascertainment or allowance. In the case of Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 P. 62, this court gave quite careful consideration to the question as to the recoverability of prospective damages arising from the failure of the defendant to permit the plaintiff to proceed with the management and cultivation of certain lands. It was the contention of the defendant in that case that the profits to arise from the cultivation of said hitherto uncultivated lands were too speculative and remote for recovery in damages; but this court held otherwise, and in so doing declared that, where loss of prospective profits is "the natural and direct consequences of the breach of the contract, they may be recovered; and he who breaks the contract cannot wholly escape on account of the difficulty which his own wrong has produced of devising a perfect measure of damages." In the case of Meer v. Cerati, 53 Cal. App. 497, 200 P. 501, the plaintiff, as lessor, sued the lessees for damages for their failure to plant rice and other crops upon premises upon which they held a cropping lease, and the defense was made that prospective profits from unplanted crops were too speculative and uncertain for recovery in damages. The trial court, however, allowed expert testimony to be introduced concerning the probable profits from the planting of the leased lands to the designated crops, and the appellate tribunal upheld its action in so doing on the authority of Shoemaker v. Acker, supra. The court, however, as in the latter case, referred to the disadvantages and difficulties in the way of providing in such cases an accurate measure of the actual damages sustained. In the case of McCready v. Bullis, 59 Cal. App. 286, 210 P. 638, the court, in dealing with a judgment for the recovery of prospective profits lost through the failure of the defendant to keep his covenant for the supply of water to agricultural lands valueless for cultivation without such supply, emphasized the difficulties of making the proof in such a case adequate to measure with reasonable certainty the actual damage, and, while affirming the principle, reversed the case upon the nature of the evidence admitted in support of the claim for such damages. In the case of Schumann v. Karrer, 184 Cal. 56, 192 P. 849, the rule as declared in the foregoing cases is adhered to, and the language made use of in Shoemaker v. Acker as to the difficulties in making adequate proof as to the actual damage sustained in such cases is quoted with approval. In none of these cases, however, were the courts called upon to consider the validity of provisions in the leases under review providing for liquidated damages, and we incline to the view that, in the presence of the suggested difficulties in fixing the actual damages in such cases, an inserted agreement in the lease for liquidated damages as to prospective profits in cases such as this should be upheld as within the exception provided for in section 1671 of the Civil Code. An examination of the lease in question will show that the provision therein for the fixation of $40 per acre for the destruction of growing crops through the breach of the lessor's covenant to repair and maintain the levees so as to protect such crops from inundation is severable from the provisions in said lease fixing the sum of $40 per acre as the agreed damages for the general violations of the lessor's covenants. While, therefore, we have held that the first above mentioned provision is void as to the damages to the grown crop of potatoes destroyed through the breakage of the levee, we are of the opinion that the later and severable provisions of the lease, in so far as they furnish an agreed amount of damage for the loss of prospective crops, are valid as within the exception provided by section 1671 of the Civil Code.

[11-13] The appellants' next contention, urged both upon their own appeal and upon their motion to dismiss the plaintiffs' appeal, is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a judgment for the return of rentals paid by them and also to a judgment for damages arising by reason of interferences with their use, occupation, and cultivation of the leased lands or for the loss of crops in the course of such cultivation. We are disposed to agree with this contention as supported both by reason and by a consistent line of authority. In an extended note to the case of Toy v. Olinger, 20 A. L. R. pp. 1366, 1369, will be found a full discussion, with abundant citation of cases, covering the rights of tenants who remain in possession of parts or all of the demised premises after breaches by landlords of covenants covering the tenant's use and enjoyment of the leased premises. From the cases therein considered it fully appears that, while a tenant who has been thus disturbed or damaged, but who retains possession, may have his election to sue for the return of rents paid or to successfully set off his damage suffered in an action against him for the stipulated rental, he cannot have both forms of relief. In the case of Stewart v. Murphy, 95 Kan. 421, 148 P. 609, Ann. Cas. 1917C, p. 612, such double damages were disallowed, and in the notes to that case the limits of the tenant's right of recovery in such cases are quite fully set forth. In the case of Cable v. Hanson (Tex. Civ. App.) 224 S. W. 922, the trial court, having allowed recovery for rent paid, also undertook to allow an extra item of damage for a stated breach of the lease. The court upon appeal disallowed the latter item by an application of the rule above stated. We are satisfied that the rule thus laid down has application to the facts of the case at bar. The plaintiffs were entitled to have a recovery of the amount of rental actually paid by them for the years 1918 and 1919, but they were not also entitled to a judgment for the whole damage sustained by them both for crops destroyed and for prospective profits for crops unplanted in the event the trial court allowed them a recovery of the rents paid. In so far, therefore, as the trial court made such double allowance, we think it was in error, and its judgment to that extent must be reversed. An examination of the record discloses that the plaintiffs did not, in either their original or their supplemental complaint, plead their right to or pray for the allowance of both of these forms of relief. Whatever recovery of such double remedy as was directed by the judgment of the trial court was without any express insistence of the plaintiffs up to the time of such judgment. It is true that the plaintiffs, in taking their limited appeal herein, have apparently sought to retain the benefit of both forms of relief, and it is also true that they have further accentuated that effort by their attempts to procure an enforcement of the judgment as to those portions thereof which awarded them such double relief and from which they did not appeal. But they have been thus far unsuccessful in both of these regards, and have not actually received the duplicated damages awarded them by such judgment or any portion thereof. The defendants' prior appeal from the whole judgment and the undertakings given by them upon such appeal have prevented these consequences, and it is therefore our opinion that the plaintiffs ought not, by any erroneous action of the trial court, or by their own ineffectual effort to take advantage thereof, be foreclosed either from prosecuting their own appeal or from making their election upon a retrial of this case as to which form of relief they will stand upon. These are the real considerations which move us to a denial of the defendants' motion to dismiss or limit the scope of the plaintiffs' appeal.

The appellants' next contention is that the trial court committed several errors in undertaking to define the scope of the plaintiffs' relief. The first of these is urged to be in the fixation of the amounts which the plaintiffs were to be required to pay in order to relieve the premises covered by their mortgage from the prior lien of the trust deed originally securing the indebtedness of John Landers to the San Joaquin Valley Bank, and which by various assignments had come to stand in the name of the defendant L. J. Grossman. It was the claim of the defendants upon the trial that the original amount of said indebtedness had been largely augmented by the payments of certain outstanding claims and liens affecting said leased lands, and which payments had been necessary for the protection of the lien of said trust deed, and that they should therefore be given priority under the terms thereof over the lien of the plaintiffs' mortgage. We do not deem it necessary to review the evidence in detail touching the alleged increments in the amount required to be paid by plaintiffs in order to entitle them to a cancellation of said trust and of the indebtedness secured thereby, since we are satisfied that the findings and judgment of the trial court thereon are supported by the evidence in the case, and will not therefore be reviewed upon this, the defendants' appeal.

The appellants' next contention under this head is that the trial court was in error in that portion of its judgment which required the holder of said promissory note and of the trust deed securing the same (neither of which original documents had been produced at the trial nor presented in evidence) to deposit the same with the clerk of the court within a stated time after the entry of said judgment, to the end that they might be surrendered to said plaintiffs upon their deposit and payment of the amount found due thereon and secured thereby; and that, in the event of the failure of the holder or holders of said instruments to so produce and deposit the same, they should be held and adjudged to be canceled without the making by plaintiffs of the payments on account thereof to be made upon their production pursuant to the order of said court. If such is to be deemed the scope and effect of the judgment and order of the trial court in the foregoing regard, then we think it would be clearly error, for, while the failure or refusal of the holder or holders of said original documents to produce and surrender the same in accordance with the direction of said court might be held to be contempt of the court and of its said order, this would not justify the court in entirely relieving the plaintiffs of the duty to pay and satisfy the amount found to be due upon said original indebtedness and the trust deed securing the same and which the trial court had properly held to be a first lien upon the premises upon which the plaintiffs' mortgage was held to be a second lien. We are not by any means assured, however, that the foregoing interpretation of the terms of said judgment, insisted upon by the appellants, is to be deemed the correct one, since the said judgment and order does not expressly so declare. The utmost that we think may be said in criticism of that portion of said judgment is that it fails to state with sufficient clarity what course should be pursued by plaintiffs to be relieved of the burden of said prior indebtedness and lien in the event of the failure or refusal of the holder or holders of said original documents to make surrender of the same pursuant to the court's direction. This is not a matter in itself calling for reversal but for clarification upon the otherwise inevitable retrial of the case.

[14] The appellants' next contention is that the trial court was in error in the insertion in its said judgment of the provision that as to the defendant L. J. Grossman, in the event that the premises embraced in plaintiffs' said mortgage should not upon the sale thereof under the order for the foreclosure of said mortgage produce an amount sufficient to pay the amounts found due to the plaintiffs and secured thereby, together with the costs and expenses of such foreclosure sale, a deficiency judgment should be docketed for the balance due against said Grossman, and that the said plaintiffs have execution against said defendant Grossman therefor. We think that for several reasons this contention must be sustained. John Landers and his wife, the original makers of said mortgage, and the persons primarily liable for the breaches of the covenants of the lease, the performance of which said mortgage was given to secure, were not made parties to this action. The main breaches in the covenants of said lease which constitute the bases of the plaintiffs' several claims for restitution and damages occurred prior to the date when said defendant Grossman became a transferee of said lease mediately from Landers, and also prior to the time when he became the holder of the Landers' deed of trust and of the obligation or obligations which it was given to secure, and also before said Grossman became the record holder of the title to the premises covered by the plaintiffs' said mortgage. The trial court expressly found that the said defendant Grossman, in each and all of the several transactions by which he became the assignee of said lessor, the transferee of said deed of trust and of the obligation it secured, and the holder of the title to the premises themselves, was at all times acting as the agent of his codefendant, the Chicago Bonding & Surety Company, and not otherwise. Whether or not these latter findings are sustained by the evidence is a matter of no present concern, since the plaintiffs have not assailed them in their appeal, and since the defendants upon their appeal upon the whole record are entitled to claim that they are inconsistent with a judgment against a mere agent while his principal therein is absolved from liability. Whether the plaintiffs would or would not be entitled at the last analysis to a personal deficiency judgment against any other than their original lessor and mortgagor we do not propose, in view of the entangled state of the present record, to decide, but we are satisfied that upon the foregoing findings they were not entitled to a personal deficiency judgment against the appellant Grossman.

There are a number of particulars in respect to alleged discrepancies between the plaintiffs' pleadings and the amount of the judgment awarded them upon particular items of damage, but these will doubtless be rectified upon a retrial, and are not, therefore, worthy of especial treatment in an already long drawn out opinion. There are also a number of respects in which the defendants upon their appeal urge the trial court was in error in its rulings and conclusions, but in the main we think that these are disposed of in dealing with the principal questions presented and most elaborately argued upon both of these appeals, and which will doubtless be avoided upon a retrial of the cause.

The judgment is reversed.

RICHLIN v. UNION BANK & TRUST CO. et al. (L. A. 7978.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 29, 1925.)

1. Partnership $\S$ 296(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that defendant, at time of pledge of contract for purchase of machinery, had notice of plaintiff's claim thereto.

In action for damages for conversion of machinery, contract for purchase of which was pledged by plaintiff's partner to defendant, evidence held to sustain finding that defendant, at time of pledge, had notice of plaintiff's claim.

2. Estoppel $\S$ 75—Plaintiff not estopped from asserting interest in property pledged by partner because allowing partner to hold himself out as owner of property.

In action for damages for conversion of machinery, contract for purchase of which was pledged by plaintiff's partner to defendant, plaintiff held not estopped from asserting his interest in such property as against defendant, by allowing partner to hold himself out to defendant as sole owner of property, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 3543, where defendant had knowledge when pledge was made that plaintiff claimed an interest, and no negligence on part of plaintiff was shown.

3. Partnership $\S$ 142(2)—Plaintiff need not anticipate partner's pledging entire partnership assets as security for his own personal indebtedness.

Plaintiff was entitled to presume good faith on part of his partner, and was not required to contemplate that he would pledge entire partnership assets as security for his own personal indebtedness, and not notify pledgee of existence of partnership.

4. Partnership $\S$ 142(2) — Partner cannot pledge firm assets as security for his personal debt to one with due notice of partnership.

Conceding that partner has right to sell or encumber his own interest in partnership property without consent of his copartner, he cannot effectually pledge entire assets of partnership as security for his personal debt to one who had due notice of partnership, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2991, and of interest of copartner, and thus divest copartner of his interest in the property.

5. Partnership $\S$ 139—Partner may, as agent for partnership, bind it by agreement in matters concerning its business.

Partner has a right, as agent for the partnership, to bind the partnership by oral or written agreement in matters concerning its business, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 2429.

6. Partnership $\S$ 296(3)—Evidence held not to show that partner abandoned firm business to copartner.

Evidence held not to show that partner had abandoned copartnership business to copartner, so that latter had power to make an assignment of partnership property to a creditor under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2430.

7. Partnership $\S$ 151 — Statute refers to "creditor" and "creditors" of partnership, and not those of an individual partner.

Civ. Code, $\S$ 2430, providing that a partner shall not have authority to make an assignment of partnership property to a creditor or to a third person in trust for benefit of a creditor or creditors, unless his copartners have wholly abandoned the business to him, by the use of the terms "creditor" and "creditors" refers to creditor or creditors of the partnership, and not to those of individual partner.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Creditor.]

8. Partnership $\S$ 142(2)—Pledge by partner of his interest in contract for purchase and sale of machinery held not to divest copartner of his interest in the property.

Pledge by partner of his interest in contract for purchase and sale of machinery held ineffectual to divest copartner of his interest in such property, where at time of pledge partner was entitled to nothing under the contract which he had not already received.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by H. Richlin against the Union Bank & Trust Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Isaac Pacht, of Los Angeles (Clare Warne, of Pomona, of counsel), for appellant.

E. F. Gerecht and C. W. Hall, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant and appellant bank in the sum of $2,862.50, together with interest from January 26, 1920. The action is one for the conversion of certain machinery and iron material, in which the plaintiff is alleged to have had an interest to the extent of the amount of the judgment. The facts substantially are as follows: Prior to and at the time of the transactions in question, the defendant D. Polen was engaged in the auction business on Hill street in the city of Los Angeles, under the name of De Luxe Auction Company. One E. C. Eddie was the owner of a considerable quantity of machinery and iron material, including the personal property involved herein, and which was located at 707 Antonio street in said city. Polen was negotiating with Eddie for the purchase of said property, with a view of the resale thereof at auction or otherwise, and paid a deposit of $50 on account of the purchase price of $6,000. Polen interested the plaintiff in the enterprise, and the two, under date of November 12, 1919, entered into a partnership agreement limited to the purchase and sale of said property. By this agreement the plaintiff agreed to pay the sum of $3,000 on account of the purchase price. He further agreed to contribute his own labor and the labor of an extra man from the date of the partnership agreement until the property was sold, and was to receive 35 per cent. of the proceeds of sale after all expenses were paid. Polen, in his individual capacity, entered into an agreement of sale with Eddie, and on the following day the plaintiff paid to Polen the sum of $3,000 in accordance with the partnership agreement. The agreement of sale with Eddie acknowledged payment of $3,100 by Polen. The balance of $2,900 on the purchase price was to be paid on or before December 10, 1919. Under the agreement, the purchasers took immediate possession of the property, but it was to remain on the premises at 707 Antonio street until sold. Plaintiff commenced at once to repair and remodel the machinery and material in preparation for its sale, and was in possession of the portion thereof involved in this action until the alleged conversion thereof by the defendant bank. An auction sale was advertised for and took place on or about December 18th, but all of the merchandise was not sold on that day. The sale was stopped, according to the plaintiff's undisputed statement, because in his judgment the goods were not being sold at a satisfactory price. Almost immediately thereafter trouble arose between the partners, and, after negotiations, an accounting and a dissolution of the partnership were agreed upon. It was then agreed that the plaintiff's interest in the merchandise was $2,862.50, and that he should sell the same, apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of his interest therein, and pay the balance to Polen.

The defendant Polen had been doing business at the defendant bank. On December 3, 1919, his account was overdrawn to the extent of $1,800. He was called to the bank by one of its officers for consultation, the result of which was that Polen executed to the bank a promissory note for $2,000 to cover the overdraft, and as security for the payment of said note pledged to the bank all of his interest in the contract of sale between Eddie and himself. This pledge was accomplished by the delivery of said contract to the bank, with an assignment indorsed thereon dated December 3, 1919, and signed "D. Polen," and by the terms of which Polen did "assign and transfer to the Union Bank &

Trust Company of Los Angeles all right, title, and interest" which he had in the "contract with E. C. Eddie." Under date of January 26, 1920, Polen executed to the bank a bill of sale in which he assigned, sold, and set over to the bank all of his "right, title, and interest in and to the personal property, machinery, and junk mentioned and described in that certain agreement heretofore executed between E. C. Eddie and D. Polen, which said agreement was heretofore and on, to wit, the 3d day of November, 1919, assigned by the said D. Polen to the said Union Bank & Trust Company." Under the authority of said bill of sale, and on the date thereof, the remaining portion of said machinery and material to the value of over $5,000 was removed from the premises at 707 Antonio street and appropriated to the use and benefit of the bank, whereupon this action was brought. In a former action by the plaintiff against these same defendants, and involving the same subject-matter, a default judgment in the sum of $2,862.50 was entered against the defendant Polen on the 2d day of February, 1921, and said action as against the defendant bank was dismissed without prejudice. In the present action the defendant Polen interposed a plea in bar, in this, that he had been adjudicated a bankrupt by the District Court of the United States in and for the Southern District of California. The plea was sustained, and the court adjudged herein "that plaintiff take nothing as against defendant D. Polen." That portion of the judgment has become final.

The facts above related are without substantial conflict. In its answer, the defendant bank denied the alleged conversion, and, as an affirmative defense, alleged that the defendant Polen did for a valuable consideration to him, paid by the defendant corporation, sell, assign, transfer, and set over to the defendant the said contract for the purchase of said machinery and material; that, in pursuance of said assignment and sale to said corporation, the corporation took possession of said machinery and material or as much as remained and had not been sold by the said D. Polen; that it took the assignment of said contract from Polen in good faith, for a valuable consideration, in due course of business, and without notice of any alleged interest of the plaintiff therein; that the plaintiff permitted the defendant Polen to have possession of said machinery and material, and knowingly suffered and permitted said Polen in his own name to enter into the written contract with said Eddie for the purchase of said chattels and permitted D. Polen to obtain possession thereof in his individual capacity; and that plaintiff likewise permitted and suffered said Polen to hold himself out to said defendant corporation and to the world generally as the sole and exclusive owner of said property. The court found these affirmative allegations of the answer to be untrue, and it is contended by the defendant bank that said findings are unsupported by the evidence. It is insisted that the evidence shows that the bank took the assignment of the contract for the purchase of the merchandise as a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, and without notice of any claim of the plaintiff.

[1] A review of the evidence shows that said findings were amply supported. At the time the pledge was taken a representative of the bank by the name of Henry Runsten went to the place where the merchandise was located for the particular purpose of making an investigation as to the ownership of the property. There Runsten met Eddie and the plaintiff. Runsten testified that when he arrived he told Eddie that Polen owed the bank some money, and that he had come to find out what title Polen had to the property. Runsten had seen the contract of sale, and inquired of Eddie if it was a "legitimate buy." The plaintiff testified that he did not hear the first part of the conversation between Eddie and Runsten, but that he did hear Runsten ask Eddie if it was a "legitimate buy"; that he then asked Runsten what he meant by that; that Runsten replied that he wanted to buy the goods from Polen, whereupon the plaintiff told him that he could not buy the goods from Polen, that Polen could only sell the goods at auction, and that he (the plaintiff) was a part owner of the property and had paid Polen $3,000 for his interest; that Runsten then said, "I know Polen, I will see what I can do," and went away. The plaintiff was corroborated by the witness Edelstein, who overheard the conversation. Runsten denied that he had talked with the plaintiff at the time in question, but with this conflict in the evidence this court is, of course, not concerned. The testimony of the plaintiff alone was sufficient to support the finding that the bank at that time had notice of the plaintiff's claim.

[2] It is next contended that the plaintiff is estopped from asserting his interest in the property as against the bank by reason of his alleged negligent acts "in allowing Polen, his alleged partner, to hold himself out to the appellant bank and to the world in general as the sole owner of the property in question." Reliance is placed on section 3543 of the Civil Code, which provides that—

"Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer."

There are two reasons why this section is not available to the defendant bank: First, because under the evidence the said defendant had knowledge on the day the pledge was made by Polen that the plaintiff claimed an interest in the property; and, secondly, no negligence on the part of the plaintiff was shown. It was in evidence and not disputed that Polen's contract with Eddie was signed the day before plaintiff paid his money to Polen. It does not appear that the plaintiff then had any control over the actions of Polen in executing the contract in his individual capacity.

[3, 4] The appellant also relies on section 2991 of the Civil Code, which is as follows:

"One who has allowed another to assume the apparent ownership of property for the purpose of making any transfer of it, cannot set up his own title, to defeat a pledge of the property, made by the other, to a pledgee who received the property in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value."

Assuming that the transfer for security of the property in question was effected by the assignment and pledge of December 3d, a subject upon which something more will presently be said, it is not disclosed by the evidence nor by the argument of counsel how or in what way the plaintiff allowed Polen to do anything, or in what respect the plaintiff could prevent Polen from doing what he did do. The plaintiff was entitled to presume good faith on the part of Polen, and was not required to contemplate that Polen would pledge the entire partnership assets as security for his own personal indebtedness and not notify the pledgee of the existence of the partnership. Conceding that Polen had the right to sell or incur his own interest in the partnership property without the consent of the plaintiff, it is clear that he could not effectually pledge the entire assets of the partnership as security for his personal debt to one who had due notice of the partnership and of the interest of the plaintiff and thus divest the plaintiff of his interest in the property.

[5-7] What has just been said would seem to dispose of the third and last contention of the defendant bank, namely, that Polen had the legal right to pledge and transfer the title to said property by reason of his partnership relation to the plaintiff. The right of a partner as agent for the partnership to bind the partnership by oral or written agreement in matters concerning the business of the partnership is, of course, unquestioned. Section 2429, Civ. Code. It is insisted, however, that under the evidence plaintiff had abandoned the copartnership business to Polen, and that the latter therefore had the power to make an assignment of the partnership property to a creditor under section 2430 of the Civil Code, which provides that—

"A partner, as such, has not authority to do any of the following acts, unless his copartners have wholly abandoned the business to him, or are incapable of acting: 1. To make an assignment of the partnership property or any portion thereof to a creditor, or to a third person in trust for the benefit of a creditor or of all creditors. * * *

A sufficient answer to this contention is that the evidence does not support the claim that the plaintiff abandoned the partnership business to Polen, and it is not claimed, and could not be claimed under the evidence, that the plaintiff was incapable of acting. On the contrary, the record discloses that the plaintiff asserted his interest in the property at all times, both before and after the accounting and remained in possession of the same for the purpose of winding up the business for which the partnership was formed. Furthermore, no authority has been cited which could confirm even the semblance of authority to Polen under said section 2430 and under the evidence in this case to assign the entire partnership assets to his own personal creditor. By the use of the terms "creditor" and "creditors" in the section, it is obvious that the creditor or creditors of the partnership are referred to and not those of an individual partner. The cases cited by the defendant bank have been examined. It is not necessary to review them. None is authority for the defendant bank's position under the facts here presented.

[8] There is another consideration which would also seem to establish beyond doubt that the pledge of Polen to the bank was entirely ineffectual to divest the plaintiff of his interest in the property. The contract between Polen and Eddie acknowledges receipt of $3,000 on the purchase price of $6,000. A credit of $100 was allowed, and Polen agreed to pay the balance of $2,900 on or before December 10th. There is no provision in the contract that title should remain in Eddie until the balance of the purchase price was paid. The partnership went into immediate possession, prepared the merchandise for resale, and sold a portion of it, presumably conveying good title to their purchasers. Under the contract and the conduct of the parties, it is clear that the title to the property passed to Polen or to the partnership at the time of the payment of the $3,000 and possession of the goods was taken. Whether title passed to Polen or to the partnership is immaterial, for in either event the contract became executed except as to the obligation of Polen to pay the balance of the purchase price. The assignment to the bank was an assignment of the right, title, and interest of Polen to "the within contract with E. C. Eddie." It did not assign his interest in the property purchased under the contract. His interest in the contract itself could be of no substantial benefit to the assignee, for the reason that all that remained to be done under it was the payment by Polen of the balance of the contract price. At the time of the assignment, Polen was entitled to nothing under the contract of sale, and its assignment by him conveyed nothing. Likewise the pledge agreement which was made a part of the promissory note executed by Polen to the bank is similarly deficient. It provides that Polen does "hereby assign, pledge, transfer and deposit" with the bank "the following personal property: * * * Agreement of sale with E. C. Eddie covering certain equipment and machinery at 707 Antonio street and evidencing the payment of $3,000." This agreement of pledge does not purport to hypothecate the property described in the contract of sale, but by its terms pledges and deposits only the written contract under which at that time Polen was entitled to nothing which he had not already received. The bill of sale executed by Polen on the 20th of January, 1920, and pursuant to which the defendant bank on the same day caused possession of the property to be taken in its behalf could not under the circumstances here shown convey to the bank the interest of the plaintiff in said property.

The judgment should therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 29, 1925.)

1. Trial $\S$ 108, 304—Parties entitled to opportunity to argue cause and have jury instructed thereafter.

Both parties are entitled to opportunity to argue cause and have jury instructed thereafter as to law of case, and it is jury's duty, under court's admonition, to form or express no opinion as to merits of facts or law until case is finally submitted to them.

2. New trial $\S$ 41(3)—Trial $\S$ 108—Judge's action in asking jury whether they were prepared to decide case without argument or instructions held error, and ground for new trial.

Trial court's action in asking jury whether they were prepared to pass on issues of fact and law without argument of counsel or instructions from court held prejudicial error justifying new trial, as requiring them to evince fixed state of mind as to facts and law before argument or instructions.

3. Trial $\S$ 108—Right to argue case not waived by counsel's statement, after 10 jurors signified, in answer to judge's inquiry, that they did not desire to hear argument.

Where plaintiff's counsel stated, before judge inquired of jurors whether they were prepared to pass on issues without argument or instructions, that he thought matters should be argued, he did not waive right to argue case by stating, after 10 jurors had signified that they did not desire to hear argument or instructions, that jury should be instructed as to law of case, nor did his later consent to waive argument cure error.

4. Trial ◊250—Court should not give instructions on contributory negligence, where not put in issue by pleadings or evidence.

Where no issue of contributory negligence was presented by defendants' pleadings or tendered by evidence, and case was not tried on theory that contributory negligence was an issue, court should not have given instructions thereon.

5. Appeal and error ◊1066—Instruction on matter not in issue held not reversible error, in view of new trial granted on other grounds.

Giving instructions on contributory negligence, which was not put in issue by pleadings or evidence, held not reversible error, in view of new trial properly granted for erroneous denial of right to argue case and have jury instructed on law thereof.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by William A. Shippy against the Peninsula Rapid Transit Company and another. Judgment for defendants. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Order affirmed.

John Ralph Wilson, W. G. Bonta, and Morris & Maguire, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Cyril Appel and Ivores R. Dains, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for a new trial after a verdict in the defendants' favor in an action to recover damages claimed to have been suffered by the plaintiff as the result of a collision between the plaintiff's automobile and a motor bus being operated by the defendants. The facts of the case which formed the basis of said motion and of this appeal are undisputed, and are as follows: The cause came on to trial before a jury. At the conclusion of the taking of evidence in the case the following proceedings were had:

"Mr. Wilson (defendants' counsel): That is all; we are willing to submit it without argument.

"Mr. Appel (plaintiff's counsel): I think it is a matter that ought to be argued at least for a short time.

"The Court: I wish you would pay attention to what I am going to say, and not volunteer any information that I do not want. Now, those jurors in the box who feel reasonably satisfied that they can determine the facts in this case without any argument of counsel, or without instructions from the court, without giving any indication of which way they feel about the matter—the court doesn't want anything of that kind; I don't want to know what your opinion is at all—I simply want to find out if there are any jurors who feel that they have heard the testimony and that they thoroughly understand it, and that they can pass on the issues of fact in this case without any instructions from the court, or without any argument of counsel. Now, those—after awhile I am going to ask them to stand up—those that feel that they would like to have argument of counsel and the instructions of the court, and deliberate on the matter, of course, they will sit down. Now, if there are any who feel that they are satisfied as to the facts of this case, they will please signify by standing up.

"Thereupon 10 jurors stood up.

"The Court: Now, gentlemen, do you wish to argue the case?

"Mr. Wilson: We are willing to waive arguments and instructions.

"Mr. Appel: I submit that the jury ought to be instructed as to the law in this case.

"The Court: We will take an adjournment until 2 o'clock.

"Mr. Appel: If the instructions will be short, there is no objection to the case going to the jury.

"The Court: It would not be fair to the jury, it will take some time to read the instructions, and it is now the noon hour.

"Mr. Wilson: It is all right as far as I am concerned if the court wants to let them go at noontime; I am willing to waive any objections to instructions, and let your honor give such instructions as you see fit.

"Mr. Appel: I think the convenience of the jury at this time ought to be consulted.

"A Juror: I have a lunch engagement; I would like to keep it if I could.

"The Court: Then you are excused until two o'clock.

"The court thereupon gave the usual admonition to the jury, and the action was continued for further hearing until 2 o'clock p. m. and at that time the following proceedings took place:

"The Court: It appears to the court that the jurors are all present.

"Mr. Wilson: Yes; your honor.

"Mr. Appel: Yes; your honor.

"Mr. Appel: In accordance with the conversation had with Mr. Wilson and your honor during the noon recess, I would like to have an exception noted to what transpired in the courtroom, and I might say, if your honor please, that, inasmuch as a great number of the jurors have expressed their desire to decide this case without argument, so far as argument is concerned, the plaintiff will waive argument. The only thing I would suggest is that, if they desire the photographs or the exhibits in the case, why, the jurors might take them with them so that they would have them before them.

"The Court: No objection?

"Mr. Wilson: No objection.

"The Court: Note the exception."

The court thereupon instructed the jury and in so doing gave certain instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence which will be hereinafter considered. The jury then retired, and within 13 minutes thereafter returned with a verdict in the defendants' favor. Judgment was entered in accordance with said verdict, and thereafter and in due time the plaintiff served and filed his notice of intention to move for a new trial, specifying all of the statutory grounds for said motion, supported by the minutes of the court and by the affidavit of plaintiff's said counsel embodying the episode above detailed, and designating the same as an irregularity in the proceedings by the court by which the plaintiff was prevented from having a fair trial. No opposing affidavit was filed. The motion for a new trial came on regularly to be heard before a judge other than the judge who had tried the cause, and was argued and submitted; and the judge hearing said motion thereafter made the order generally granting the plaintiff's motion for a new trial without specifying therein that the same was granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, and also without making any other specification. The defendants appeal from said order, and urge in support of said appeal that no proper or sufficient ground appeared for the making of said order. The respondent on his part urges that the record discloses two sufficient grounds as the support for said order. They are: First, that the action and conduct of the court in the matter of the proceedings immediately following the close of the evidence in the case and which are above detailed constituted a serious irregularity, and amounted to prejudicial error on the part of the trial court; second, that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving its said instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence. It is conceded that both of these questions were properly before the judge, who heard and granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and that, if the position of the respondent as to either of said matters is found to be correct, the order granting a new trial must be affirmed.

[1-3] As to the first of these questions we are of the opinion that the action and conduct of the trial judge as above given in detail constituted a serious and prejudicial irregularity occurring during the trial of the cause, and for which a new trial should have been and was properly granted. It is the long-established right of both of the parties thereto to have an opportunity to argue the cause and to have the jury after such argument instructed by the judge of the court as to the law of the case; and it was equally the duty of the jury under the admonition of the court not to form or express an opinion with respect to the merits of either the facts or the law of the case until the case should be finally submitted to them. The action of the trial court in the instant case in inquiring of the jurors whether they were then prepared to pass upon the issues of both fact and law involved in the case without either argument of counsel upon the facts or instructions from the court upon the law of the case amounted in substance to a requirement of the jurors that they evince a fixed state of mind with respect to both the facts and law of the case which they were not entitled to hold or to express at that stage in the proceedings. Ten of the jurors, however, arose, and in so doing evinced that they were in that fixed state of mind wherein they did not desire to hear either the argument of counsel upon the facts or the instructions of the court as to the law of the case, whereupon the trial judge said to counsel: "Now, gentlemen, do you wish to argue the case?" Prior to the institution of the foregoing inquiry on the part of the trial judge counsel for the plaintiff had stated: "I think it is a matter which should be argued, at least for a short time"; but, after the inquiry of the trial judge as to the views of the jury upon the subject, and the reaction of 10 of their number thereon, the response of counsel for the plaintiff to the above final inquiry of the trial judge was: "I submit that the jury ought to be instructed as to the law of the case." It is urged by the appellants herein that this amounted to a waiver of the right of plaintiff's counsel to argue the case to the jury. We cannot yield concurrence to this view. The trial judge had no right to put upon counsel engaged in a jury trial the stress of such a dilemma, since to insist upon arguing the cause under the circumstances thus improperly created by the action of the trial judge would be to run counter to the expressed desire of the majority of the jurors not to hear argument, and thereby risk losing whatever of favor counsel hoped to have in their eyes; or, on the other hand, to surrender the right of his client to the full benefit of an argument by his counsel of his case. This tacit consent of plaintiff's counsel to waive his right to present an argument in the cause cannot under the stress of such a condition be held to have been freely or properly obtained; nor do we think his later consent to waive argument thus unwillingly obtained would suffice to cure the error; and it must therefore be concluded that the conduct of the trial judge in thus improperly interrogating the jury and in thereby bringing about the unwilling consent of plaintiff's counsel to submit the cause without argument constituted a serious and prejudicial irregularity fully sufficient to justify the granting of plaintiff's motion for a new trial based thereon.

[4, 5] The conclusion we have thus far arrived at renders unnecessary the discussion of the further ground urged by the respondent herein to the effect that the trial court was in error in the giving of certain instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence. It is conceded that the defendants by their pleadings presented no issue upon the subject of the plaintiff's contributory negligence, but, on the other hand, not only expressly refrained from so doing, but that during the trial of the cause no issue as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff was tendered by the evidence, nor was the case tried upon the theory that the plaintiff's contributory negligence was an issue in the case. In such a state of the record we are of the opinion that the trial court should have refrained from giving the instructions which it did give upon the subject of contributory negligence, although we are not prepared to say that the giving of such instructions would under the circumstances presented in this case constitute reversible error.

The order is affirmed.

HALLINAN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR KINGS COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5149.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 22, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1925.)

1. Courts ⇨92—Decision as authority limited by facts on which based.

Decision as authority must be limited and circumscribed by facts on which based.

2. Trial ⇨112—Attorney's right to argue matter arising during trial must be exercised within limits prescribed by court.

Attorney, in trial of action, has certain rights, privileges, and duties to client which cannot be abridged nor denied by court, including right to address court and present argument on questions arising during trial, but such right must be exercised under court's direction and within limits prescribed by court in exercise of its discretion.

3. Contempt ⇨21—Counsel persisting in arguing matter to court, after repeated orders to desist, guilty of "contempt."

Counsel's persistence in arguing matter to court, after latter has repeatedly ordered him to desist, amounts to disorderly behavior toward judge, directly tending to interrupt due course of trial, and disobedience of lawful order of court, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, defining such acts as "contempt."

Application by Vincent Hallinan for certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court in and for Kings County and Hon. K. Van Zante, Judge thereof, adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt of court. Writ dismissed.

B. M. Benson and Richard K. Stewart, both of Fresno, for petitioner.

William R. McKay, Dist. Atty., of Hanford, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Petition for writ of review of an order of the superior court of Kings county adjudging the petitioner guilty of contempt of court. The petitioner is an attorney, duly licensed to practice law in all the courts of this state. On the 9th day of July, 1925, he was engaged in the trial of a criminal case in said superior court before the respondent judge thereof. In said action he represented one of four defendants who were jointly on trial in said court. The attorneys representing the other defendants in said action were Messrs. Covert, Brown, Pryor, and Russell. A witness by the name of Mrs. Edith Jewett was being examined by Mr. Higgins, representing the prosecution. The commitment shows that the following proceedings were had in said court in the course of said trial, and were the basis upon which said judgment of contempt was made by said court:

"Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mrs. Brown in regard to Pearl Camp King working and the work she was doing?

"Mr. Hallinan: We object to that as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and the proper grounds for impeachment have not been laid. Mr. Brown—

"Mr. Higgins: Mrs. Brown.

"Mr. Covert: It is not rebuttal, and does not tend to prove or disprove any issue in the case, and it was not in the presence of the other defendants, and, if it is admitted by the ruling of the court, we request the court to instruct the jury to disregard it as to all other defendants.

"Mr. Hallinan: If the court please, may I be permitted to say how manifestly unfair this is, that the prosecution may start their case all over again, and—

"The Court: Mr. Hallinan, make your objection to the court, and get your ruling on it. We don't want any argument at all.

"Mr. Hallinan: I want to call your honor's attention to the fact—

"The Court: The court knows all about it, and I don't want any talk like that from you.

"Mr. Hallinan: If the court please, I would like an explanation of what your honor means by that kind of talk. I made no talk that is not proper.

"The Court: Mr. Hallinan, if the court calls your attention again to this, you will be adjudged guilty of contempt of court and there will be a penalty following it. I don't want any more remarks following this—

"Mr. Hallinan: But, if the court please—

"The Court: The court adjudges you guilty of contempt of court for continually talking back to the court when you are ordered to desist from talking, and you are ordered to appear in this court room next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock for the pronouncement of judgment.

"Mr. Hallinan: And I want to enter an exception to the court making that statement in the presence of the jury.

"The Court: You are out of order. Proceed.

"Mr. Russell: Can't we make an objection?

"The Court: You can make an objection any time you want to, Mr. Russell.

"Mr. Russell: I think that is all Mr. Hallinan tried to do. He was trying to put in a little argument on the outside—

"The Court: But we don't want any argument.

"Mr. Russell: I want to ask a question. Are we not going to be allowed to make an objection?

"The Court: You can make your objections.

"Mr. Hallinan: And that is what I did.

"The Court: We don't want any accusations of the court being unfair, or not doing this way or the other.

"Mr. Hallinan: The allegation was—

"The Court: You are out of order.

"Mr. Pryor: If the court please, we object to this testimony on the ground that there is no evidence either denying or affirming any conversation with Mrs. Brown, and they are offering it in rebuttal now, and, if there is any testimony of that sort, it should have been put in when their case was being introduced in chief.

"The Court: The objection is overruled."

From the foregoing statement of the proceedings it appears that petitioner had interposed an objection to a question asked of the witness Mrs. Jewett. He then proceeded to make an argument in support of his objection. The court directed him to make his objection and get a ruling upon it, but that it did not want any further argument. In spite of this statement by the court that no further argument was wanted, petitioner again attempted to proceed with his argument in support of his objection, whereupon the court again informed petitioner that it did not want to hear any argument, and warned petitioner that if he persisted in his argument he would be found guilty of contempt of court. In the face of this second admonition from the court not to proceed with his argument the petitioner again began to address the court in support of his objection, whereupon, the court adjudged him guilty of contempt of court "for continually talking back to the court when you are ordered to desist from talking."

It is contended by petitioner that the order adjudicating him guilty is void, for the reason that the court was without jurisdiction to make such an order. In support of this contention he relies upon the following cases from the appellate courts of this state: In re Shortridge, 5 Cal. App. 371, 90 P. 478; Platnauer v. Superior Court, 32 Cal. App. 463, 163 P. 237, and Curran v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 236 P. 975.

In the Shortridge Case the petitioner therein had been adjudged guilty of contempt of court for interrupting the proceedings of the court by addressing the court after he had been admonished by the court not to do so, and by insisting on talking to the court. The commitment, however, failed to set forth the language used by petitioner which the court held to be contemptuous, or any of the facts occurring in the presence of the court, as required by section 1211 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court held that—

"The power to punish for contempt, being an arbitrary power, and the facts as recited in the order of commitment being conclusive in such contempt proceeding, the correct rule, in our opinion, is to require the commitment to state the facts so that this court, on reading the commitment, can determine as to whether or not such facts as a matter of law constitute a contempt of court. When we examine the commitment by the above rule we cannot say as a matter of law that the petitioner was guilty of contempt."

In the case of Platnauer v. Superior Court, supra, the petitioner was an attorney at law, and, with another attorney, represented one of the parties to a proceeding then on trial in the court which found him guilty of contempt. The commitment set forth in full the proceedings before the court leading up to the order of the court finding the petitioner guilty of contempt. In substance these facts showed that the court virtually refused to permit the petitioner to participate in the trial then in progress, or to represent his client at said trial. The appellate court, in determining the real question for decision before it, stated it as follows:

"It follows, then, that the whole controversy here reduces itself down to the single and simple question whether it is within the lawful power of a court to deny and foreclose the right of a regularly licensed attorney, regularly employed by a litigant to represent him in the trial of a case, to participate in such trial, even though such attorney might at some time in the progress of the trial of the cause have been guilty of contumacious conduct, and to punish him as for contempt of court if he attempts actively to represent his client in the trial."

In annulling the order of contempt, the court said:

"It does not appear from the facts as they are here disclosed that the petitioner at any time addressed the court in disrespectful language. * * * The alleged contemptuous conduct on the part of the petitioner appears to have consisted entirely in the petitioner's attempt to take part in the pending proceedings after the court had ordered that he should not further participate therein. As above indicated, our conclusion is that in so acting the court transcended its lawful authority, and that the order was wholly beyond the jurisdiction of the court and is therefore void."

[1] In Curran v. Superior Court, supra, the facts stated in the commitment showed that the real and only offense committed by the petitioner therein was his refusal to take his seat and to remain seated while he was interrogating a witness. The appellate court held that an order of court adjudging him guilty of contempt for disobeying such order was in excess of its jurisdiction. There may be language in the decision which is susceptible of a construction much more favorable to the position of the petitioner herein, but the decision as an authority must be limited and circumscribed by the facts upon which it is based.

[2, 3] The question involved in this proceeding, in our opinion, is the power of the court to order an attorney to desist from further argument upon a matter then pending before the court, and, upon said attorney's persistent refusal to comply with the terms of said order, to punish said attorney in contempt for such refusal. It is apparent that this question was not before the court in any of the three cases cited by petitioner and referred to above. We have not been able to find any adjudicated case directly in point. It must be conceded that an attorney engaged in the trial of an action in court has certain rights and privileges, the full exercise of which can neither be abridged nor denied him by the court. He also has certain duties to perform to his client which are beyond the control of the court. Among these rights and duties of the attorney is his right, within reasonable limits, to address the court and to present argument upon questions arising during the progress of the trial. This right to argue a matter before the court, however, is not unlimited. It must be exercised under the direction of the court and within such limits as may be prescribed by the court in the exercise of its discretion to regulate such matters; otherwise an attorney might delay and impede the trial of a case far beyond any legitimate limits. Argument of counsel, upon questions arising during the progress of a trial, is addressed solely to the court, and its object and purpose is to enable the court to have the benefit of the views of counsel upon the questions under discussion in order that the court may be better advised upon such questions before it is called upon to decide them. The court, rather than the attorneys in the case, must be the judge as to the extent and scope of such argument. This must necessarily be so for two reasons. In the first place, the court is primarily responsible for the prompt and orderly dispatch of business pending before it. To permit attorneys in all cases to decide how often and how long they will argue questions arising during the trial would mean that the direction and control of litigation would be taken from the court and transferred to counsel in the case, and would often result in the unwarranted consumption of the time of the court to the great detriment, not only of the parties to the pending litigation, but also of those whose actions are awaiting trial. In the second place, as the argument of counsel is directed to the court alone, the court is in far better position than counsel to decide when it is sufficiently informed as to the subject under consideration. When the court reaches the point that it feels that it is fully advised as to the question under discussion and ready to rule upon the same, and therefore requires no further enlightenment from counsel, it is surely clothed with adequate power and authority to order the argument at an end, and, when necessary, in order to enforce its order, to punish the attorney guilty of its infraction. Under such circumstances, the action of counsel in persisting in arguing a matter to the court, after the court has repeatedly ordered him to desist, amounts to disorderly behavior towards the judge of the court, which directly tends to interrupt the due course of the trial, and is also disobedience of the lawful order of the court. Such acts are defined as contempt by the provisions of section 1209 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the proceeding before the respondent court the petitioner herein was informed that he might make any objection he desired, but that the court felt that it was fully advised as to the matters before it and did not desire any argument from counsel, and ordered petitioner not to continue his remarks. The action of petitioner in proceeding with his argument, in the face of this explicit order of the court not to do so, cannot be regarded in any other light than a clear case of contempt of court.

The writ is dismissed.

HALLINAN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR KINGS COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5150.)

Contempt $\Leftrightarrow$ 26—Attorney's remark, in reply to court's admonition to cease argument, held contempt.

Attorney's remark, in reply to court's admonition to cease argument on objection to question to witness, that, "If I think an objection is proper, I am not going to be frightened either by threat or punishment for contempt," etc., held contempt as attempt to evade, if not directly violate, court's order, in view of fact that court had previously informed him that he might make any objection that he desired.

Application by Vincent Hallinan for certiorari to review and annul an order of the Superior Court in and for Kings County and K. Van Zante, Judge thereof, adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. Writ dismissed.

B. M. Benson and Richard K. Stewart, both of Fresno, for petitioner.

William R. McKay, Dist. Atty., of Hanford, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. The parties hereto are the same as those in No. 5149, 240 P. 788, this day decided by this court. In the present proceeding the petitioner asks to review and have annulled an order of the respondent court adjudging him guilty of contempt. This order was made during the trial of the same action in which the order considered in No. 5149 was made, and during the same day, and only a short time after said last named order was made. The proceedings out of which the order involved herein was made by the court, as shown by the commitment herein, were as follows:

"Mr. Higgins: Read the question, Mr. Reporter. (Question read.)

"Mr. Russell: If your honor please, we would also make the objection that any statement made by Mrs. Brown not in the presence of the other defendants is hearsay, and would not be binding on the other defendants. We would like to have the court instruct the jury to that effect.

"The Court: The objection is overruled and motion denied.

"Mr. Russell: To which we except. A. Well, we were dining at the Brown house one evening—

"Mr. Russell: Talk up so we can hear you. A. What is it?

"Mr. Russell: Talk up so that we can hear you. A. We were dining at the Brown home one evening, and just before we sat down to the table, Mrs. Brown said to Pearl, 'Bring in the ice cream.' Well, it looked to me—

"Mr. Hallinan: If the court please, we object to the witness stating what it looked like to her.

"The Court: Yes, that may go out.

"Mr. Higgins: Just state the conversation. A. It was a two-gallon ice cream freezer, packed with salt and ice, and that girl lugged that in, it was all she could do to—

"Mr. Hallinan: We object to the statement that she lugged it in and it was all she could do. She can state she carried it in.

"The Court: The objection is overruled. A. She lugged it in, and I said to Mrs. Brown, 'Oh, that is too heavy for that girl.' She said, 'Pooh, that won't hurt her.'

"Mr. Higgins: Q. Was that all of the conversation at that time? A. At that time, yes.

"Mr. Covert: We move the last answer be stricken out on the ground it is not responsive to the question asked, and on the further ground it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, in that it is a conversation that was not had in the presence of the other defendants, and for that reason the jury may not consider it as to the other defendants, and upon the further ground that it is not rebuttal of anything adduced in evidence up to this time, either by the prosecution or the defense, and we ask that it be stricken out and the jury instructed to disregard it as to all the defendants, except Mrs. Brown, if the court refuses to strike it out entirely.

"The Court: Motion denied.

"Mr. Higgins: Q. Did you ever, after that time, or at any time, with Mrs. Brown, have a conversation relative to Pearl Camp not going to school and about her working on the ranch?

"Mr. Hallinan: If the court please, we again make the same objection, and I further take an exception that we consider it unfair that the prosecution should be allowed to reopen their case at this time, and we object to the witness being permitted to answer that question on the ground it is improper rebuttal.

"The Court: Mr. Hallinan, the court has warned you not to make statements of that kind.

"Mr. Hallinan: But if the court please—

"The Court: No further talk from you, Mr. Hallinan.

"Mr. Hallinan: If I think an objection is proper, I am not going to be frightened either by threat or punishment for contempt. I am not trying to be unfair with the court, or say anything that I don't think is entirely proper, but, if I think the objection is proper I will say it.

"The Court: The court adjudges you again guilty of contempt for continuing to talk back to the court when you have been ordered to desist from talking."

There is little difference in principle between these two actions. The proceedings set forth above are practically a continuation of those considered in action No. 5149. Practically the same question had been asked the witness Mrs. Jewett in the proceedings involved herein as had been asked her in the prior proceeding. The objections interposed by petitioner to these two questions were in all essentials the same, and petitioner was attempting to make the same argument in support of his objection to the second question that he had made to the first, when he was informed by the court that it did not desire any further argument, and ordered petitioner to cease his argument, or, to put it in the court's language, "No further talk from you, Mr. Hallinan." In reply to this admonition of the court, petitioner stated:

"If I think an objection is proper, I am not going to be frightened, either by threat or punishment for contempt. I am not trying to be unfair with the court, or say anything that I don't think is entirely proper, but, if I think the objection is proper, I will say it."

In view of the fact that the court had not in any manner stated or even intimated that it would not entertain any objection which petitioner might see fit to make, but on the other hand had previously informed petitioner that he might make any objection that he desired, we are unable to construe the above remark of counsel in any other light than as an attempt on his part to evade, if not to directly violate, the previous order of the court.

On account of the similarity of this to the proceeding just decided, we do not think it necessary to further extend this opinion, but, for the reasons set forth in said opinion, as well as for those expressed herein, we are of the opinion that the order of the court adjudging the petitioner guilty of contempt, as hereinbefore set forth, is valid and binding. The writ is therefore dismissed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HAHN, Justice pro tem.

CITY OF SACRAMENTO v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALI-FORNIA et al. (Civ. 3002.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 17, 1925.)

- 1. Master and servant ⇨364—Constitutional authority to provide "compensation" for municipal employees held to refer to "wages" and not to workmen's compensation.

Const. art. 11, § 8½, conferring upon the city of Sacramento operating under freeholders' charter, within article 11, §§ 6, 8, authority to provide compensation for its employees or their dependents, held to refer to wages and not to workmen's compensation or indemnification payable to dependents under article 20, § 21; the word "compensation," as used in article 11, § 8½, being synonymous with wages.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Compensation; Wages.]

- 2. Master and servant ⇨364—Municipalities departments of state within Constitution.

Counties and municipalities are departments of state within Const. art. 20, § 21, authorizing the Legislature to provide a system of workmen's compensation binding upon all departments of the state government.

- 3. Master and servant ⇨364—"Person," in constitutional provision for workmen's compensation, includes municipal corporation.

The word "person" in Const. art. 20, § 21, authorizing the Legislature to provide a system of workmen's compensation and to enforce liability upon all persons, includes municipal corporations.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Person.]

- 4. Master and servant ⇨364—Workmen's "compensation" matter of public policy distinguished from municipal affairs.

Enactment by Legislature of a system of workmen's compensation for the benefit of injured workmen or their dependents, as authorized by Const. art. 20, § 21, is a matter of public policy of the state, as contradistinguished from municipal affairs within article 11, §§ 6, 8, 8½; "compensation" being used in sense of making amends for losses sustained or the paying of an indemnity or an equivalent, so far as it is possible to do so in money value, to those dependents who have suffered such loss.

Petition for certiorari by the City of Sacramento to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation to Eva Streepy for the death of William E. Streepy. Award affirmed.

R. L. Shinn, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This matter is before the court upon the petition of the city of Sacramento to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission of the state of California, awarding compensation to the respondent Eva Streepy on account of the death of her husband occurring while in the employ of the above-named petitioner.

The record before us shows that William E. Streepy and the respondent Eva Streepy were on the 24th day of May, 1924, and prior thereto, husband and wife; that on the 24th of May, 1924, the said William E. Streepy, while in the employ of the city of Sacramento as an electrician, was instantly killed by reason of an electric shock which caused him to fall from a high pole on which he was then working, the neck of said Streepy being broken by coming in contact with the ground below. After all the proceedings provided for to be taken in such cases, the respondent Industrial Accident Commission awarded to the said Eva Streepy the sum of $5,000; $100 thereof being allowed for funeral expenses, and the remainder thereof as compensation to be paid at the rate of $20.83 per week, beginning with the date of the death of the said William E. Streepy, of which amount $1,083.16 had accrued at the date of the entry of the award made by said commission. No contention is made as to the correctness of the award if jurisdiction to enter the same existed.

The award of the commission is contested upon two grounds: First, that the compensation of all officers and employees of a city is a matter purely within the jurisdiction and control of the city of which such persons may be officers or employees, and, second; that the making of provision for a sum of money to be paid either to an injured employee, or to his widow or family, in the event of his death occasioned by reason of his services to the city, is a purely municipal affair.

[1] In determining the pertinency of these objections or contentions, several sections of the state Constitution must be considered. Section 6 of article 11, as amended in 1914, provides that municipalities operating under freeholders' charters adopted since 1914, or amended to conform thereto, may "make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters, and in respect to other matters they shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." Section 8 of article 11 contains a similar provision. Section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution specifies that a city charter may provide "the manner in which, the method by which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county and municipal officers and employees * * * shall be elected or appointed, and for their recall and removal, and their compensation," etc., and section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution further authorizes "any county, city, town, or township make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws," the last amendment to this section being in 1918. At the same election at which the last of the above-named sections was amended, the proposed amendment to section 21 of article 20 of the state Constitution was also ratified. That section is as follows:

"The Legislature is hereby expressly vested with plenary power, unlimited by any provision of this Constitution, to create, and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation, by appropriate legislation, and in that behalf to create and enforce a liability on the part of any or all persons to compensate any or all of their workmen for injury or disability, and their dependents for death incurred or sustained by the said workmen in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party. A complete system of workmen's compensation includes adequate provisions for the comfort, health and safety and general welfare of any and all workmen and those dependent upon them for support to the extent of relieving from the consequences of any injury or death incurred or sustained by workmen in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party; also full provision for securing safety in places of employment; full provision for such medical, surgical, hospital and other remedial treatment as is requisite to cure and relieve from the effects of such injury; full provision for adequate insurance coverage against liability to pay or furnish compensation; full provision for regulating such insurance coverage in all its aspects, including the establishment and management of a state compensation insurance fund; full provision for otherwise securing the payment of compensation; and full provision for vesting power, authority and jurisdiction in an administrative body with all the requisite governmental functions to determine any dispute or matter arising under such legislation, to the end that the administration of such legislation shall accomplish substantial justice in all cases expeditiously, inexpensively, and without incumbrance of any character; all of which matters are expressly declared to be the social public policy of this state, binding upon all departments of the state government.

"The Legislature is vested with plenary powers, to provide for the settlement of any disputes arising under such legislation by arbitration, or by an Industrial Accident Commission, by the courts, or by either, any, or all of these agencies, either separately or in combination, and may fix and control the method and manner of trial of any such dispute, the rules of evidence and the manner of review of decisions rendered by the tribunal or tribunals designated by it; provided, that all decisions of any such tribunal shall be subject to review by the appellate courts of this state. The Legislature may combine in one statute all the provisions for a complete system of workmen's compensation, as herein defined.

"Nothing contained herein shall be taken or construed to impair or render ineffectual in any measure the creation and existence of the Industrial Accident Commission of this state or the state compensation insurance fund, the creation and existence of which, with all the functions vested in them, are hereby ratified and confirmed."

By reference to these sections it will be seen that the first question to be determined is the sense in which the word "compensation" is used therein. Section 8½ of article 11 of the state Constitution gives to municipalities full power and authority to provide for the compensation of all officers and employees, from which it is argued that, if the city charter of the city of Sacramento makes any provision for any sum of money to be paid to the family of any deceased officer or employee, then and in that case, section 21 of article 20 does not apply, and the Industrial Accident Commission has no jurisdiction to make an award. In this particular our attention is called to sections 168 and 173 of the city Charter of the city of Sacramento, adopted by the voters of the city of Sacramento, and ratified by the Legislature of the state of California at a later date than the adoption of any of the amendments to the state Constitution to which we have referred. Section 168 of the Charter of the city of Sacramento reads:

"All employees of the city of Sacramento who have served in the city continuously for twenty years in any capacity except as an elective officer or city manager shall be eligible to relief and pension."

Section 173 is as follows:

"The pension board shall provide as follows for the family of any city employee of the class eligible to pensions who may be killed while in the performance of his duty: (1) Should the decedent leave a widow, she shall, as long as she remains unmarried, be paid a pension equal to one-half of the salary paid the decedent at the time of his death. (2) Should the decedent leave no widow, but leave any child or children under the age of sixteen years, or should he leave a widow who shall die and leave his child or children under the age of sixteen years, such child or children collectively shall receive a pension equal to one-half the salary paid to the father at the time of his death, until the youngest child attains the age of sixteen years; provided, that no child shall receive any such pension after attaining the age of sixteen years."

A third subdivision is added which is not material here. Other provisions of the charter relating to pensions for disabled persons are likewise made dependent upon the employee having served the city continuously for a period of 20 years. In the case at bar the employee had served the city but three years and, therefore, no provision has been made for the compensation of his dependents irrespective of the meaning of that word as used in section 8½ of article 11 of the state Constitution, giving to municipalities full power and authority to fix the compensation of its officers and employees, but, waiving this omission, does the word "compensation," as it appears in section 8½ of article 11, carry the same meaning as does the word "compensation," as used in section 21 of article 20? The mere fact that the same word is used in both instances does not necessitate the conclusion that the same meaning is attached thereto, or that the Legislature or the voters of the state understood the use of the word to mean the same in both instances. The context of the sections must be considered, and the word "compensation" must be read in connection with, not only the words where it appears, but also in reference to the subject-matter of which the section purports to treat. In section 8½ of article 11, the salary and wages of officers and employees constitute the subject-matter, and the authority is there given to fix the salaries and the wages, but, instead of using the two words "salary and wages," the word "compensation" is employed. In section 21 of article 20, the subject-matter being considered is the indemnifying or relieving an injured employee, or his dependents, from becoming objects of public charity. In the one instance, mere salary or wages for services performed constitutes the matter being considered, while in section 21 of article 20 there is no thought whatever of paying an injured employee, or awarding a sum of money to his dependents on account of services being performed by him. It is true that the salary or wages theretofore earned by the injured employee, and of which he was capable of earning, is accepted as the standard for fixing the indemnity as compensation to be awarded to the injured employee, but that does not in any sense convey the idea that compensation is being paid for services rendered or being rendered by the injured employee.

That we are right in this interpretation of the use of the word "compensation" in the different sections is fully sustained by the interpretations which have heretofore been given to this word. In 12 C. J. 229, we find the following legal definitions of the word "compensation":

"An act which a court orders to be done, or money which a court orders to be paid, by a person whose acts or omissions have caused loss or injury to another, in order that thereby the person damaged may receive equal value for his loss, or be made whole in respect of his injury; a consideration; the consideration or price of a privilege purchased; an equivalent in money for a loss sustained; an equivalent given for property taken or for an injury done to another; the giving back an equivalent in either money, which is but the measure of value, or in actual value otherwise conferred; the rendering an equivalent in value or amount; indemnification; making amends; payment of damages; a recompense in value; a recompense given for a thing received; a recompense or reward for some loss, injury, or service, especially when it is given by statute; remuneration for the injury directly and proximately caused by a breach of contract or duty; remuneration or satisfaction for injury or damage of every description; that return which is given for something else; that which is necessary to restore an injured party to his former position. The term etymologically suggests the image of balancing one thing against another, its primary signification being equivalence, and the secondary and more common meaning something given or obtained as an equivalent.

"As salary or wages. The word also signifies the remuneration or wages given to an employee or officer, but it is not exactly synonymous with 'salary.'"

It thus appears that the use of the word "compensation" in the sense of meaning wages is the last given and also the interpretation which is last given to that word, but, even in this sense, it is used only to signify compensation for services performed; the correct and accurate term being wages, which is the return made for work done or services performed.

We therefore conclude that the word "compensation," as it appears in section 8½ of article 11, is a synonym for the word "wages," as applied to the facts of this case, and refers to the power given the municipality of Sacramento to fix the amount of money, to wit, the $7 per day that was being paid to the deceased, William E. Streepy, in return for the services that were being performed by him, and has no reference whatever to the compensation or indemnification being made to the widow of William E. Streepy, by reason of his death while in the employ of the city. It is in some measure an attempt to pay an equivalent in money for the losses sustained by her and is not an act on the part of the city either within the meaning or even the letter of section 8½ of article 11 of the state Constitution, when the subject-matter of that section is taken into consideration.

While not directly in point by reason of the difference in the facts involved, the case of Jackson v. Wilde, 52 Cal. App. 259, 198 P. 822, draws a very clear distinction between what is meant by the word "compensation" when accurately used and interpreted and the word "salary" when properly employed, and draws the distinction which we are making here between a salary that might be earned under section 8½ of article 11, and a benefit that might be awarded, or that might become due under section 21 of article 20.

Our attention has been called to no authorities directly upon the point involved, but from the foregoing reasoning we conclude that the first contention of the petitioner must be answered in the negative.

[2-4] Is the making of "compensation" to, or the indemnification of, the widow, or to the family, of the deceased employee, or the awarding of a sum calculated upon the standard of the earning capacity of the deceased a municipal affair? It would serve no useful purpose to enter into a lengthy discussion of just what are municipal affairs. In 18 California Jurisprudence, p. 786, we find several comprehensive definitions, which, in a word, all relate to the internal business of a city such as prosecution for violations of charter provisions, municipal elections, compensation, and removal of public officers, issuing bonds for improvements, erection of municipal buildings, provisions for a municipal pension system, control of almshouses, the matter of opening, widening, and vacating streets, and such like powers, but nowhere do we find any legal definition which extends the meaning of the words "municipal affairs" so as to include the indemnification of dependents on account of the death of an employee, nor do we find that the pension system has been ever interpreted to take the place of a Workmen's Compensation Law. The mere fact that the citizens of a municipality may be vitally interested in making provisions for dependents does not transform a state policy into a municipal affair. The pension system, we think, is really the outgrowth of the idea that public officers and employees are not paid an adequate sum in many instances, and therefore a portion of the salary paid, after the age of disability has been reached, shall be allowed the retired officer or employee to make amends for the failure to pay a sufficient salary or wage in the first instance, and does not come within the theory, purpose, or contemplation of the state Workmen's Compensation Law at all. The school law of the state affects every municipality, but it is nevertheless a state regulation and not a municipal matter. Likewise, it has been held that the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) is a law of the state, and takes precedence over the regulatory power of cities concerning the liquor traffic. The same is true in relation to the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 397; St. 1917, p. 382; St. 1919, p. 191). These questions are so decided in the following cases: Piper v. Big Pine School Dist., 193 Cal. 664, 226 P. 926; Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A. L. R. 1172; and In re Mingo, 190 Cal. 769, 214 P. 850. We might also cite the cases having to do with public utilities in relation to rates of fares, etc., such as the case of Civic Center Ass'n of L. A. v. R. R. Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 106 P. 351.

The section of the Constitution upon which the state compensation, insurance, and safety laws are based contains within itself some definite statements which exclude the idea of such matters being relegated to the limited purview, control, or jurisdiction of municipalities. Some of these words in the section (article 20, § 21) are: "The Legislature is hereby expressly vested with plenary power, unlimited by any provision of this Constitution, to create, and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation," etc., and to enforce the liability upon all persons. It is needless to add that the word "person" includes a municipality, and then, after setting forth with a great deal of detail the powers to be conferred by legislation upon any commission that might be created, the section contains the following:

"All of which matters are expressly declared to be the social public policy of this state, binding upon all departments of the state government."

We think that plenary power means in this sense unlimited by any other provision of the Constitution relating to the indemnification of either employees or their dependents. That the word "compensation" is used in the sense of making amends for losses sustained, or the paying of an indemnity or an equivalent, so far as it is possible to do so in money value, to those dependents who have suffered such losses. And this is the settled policy of the state, binding upon all the departments thereof, and is not limited in its scope and application by the territorial boundaries of municipalities, but is coextensive with the territorial limits of the state itself, and is just as inclusive as its words purport to be, and therefore, as said in the section "binding upon all departments of the state government." That counties and municipalities are departments of the state government is well settled. Chico High School Board v. Supervisors, 118 Cal. 115, 50 P. 275; Payne & Dewey v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 221; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 542.

We do not find any conflict in the sections of the state Constitution which we have heretofore set forth, when the words are interpreted according to their true use and meaning, but, if there were such, we think the language of section 21 of article 20 is directed to a specific subject, and has for its purpose the establishment and enforcement of a public policy of the state, and is not limited by any general language that might be found elsewhere in the same instrument, of which section 21 is a part, and especially when that general law is directed to a different subject-matter.

We therefore conclude that the making of compensation to the dependents of employees is a matter of public policy of the state, as contradistinguished from municipal affairs. The second contention of the petitioner must also be answered in the negative.

The award is affirmed.

BONE v. DWYER et ux. (Civ. 2982.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 11, 1925. Rehearing Denied with Modifications Oct. 10, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 9, 1925.)

1. Judgment ¶712—Judgment and decree held admissible to support wife's claim to premises.

In support of wife's title and right to maintain cross-complaint for premises, judgment and decree prosecuted by wife against husband for maintenance, in which action premises were set aside for her use, and which judgment confirmed title to premises for her support, held admissible, although plaintiff was not party to such action.

2. Husband and wife ¶267(8)—Written assignment of land contract by husband held insufficient to transfer indefeasible interest to premises.

Where husband purchased lots on contract, and before completion of payment transferred his interest in contract to plaintiff, who completed payments and received escrow deed to husband, and thereafter second deed was executed to transferee, in suit to quiet title, wife not having joined in husband's transfer, under Civ. Code, § 172a, had right to maintain or defend her interest or title to premises in same condition as though transfer had not been executed; plaintiff not being entitled to hold under that portion of section 172a which protects purchaser in good faith without knowledge of marriage relation, where record title stands in husband's name.

3. Husband and wife ¶267(1)—Principle involved in transfer of community property by husband without wife's signature is similar to his attempted transfer of homestead.

Principle involved in transfer of community land or interest therein by husband without wife's signature when uncontrolled or limited by good faith and time clauses of Civ. Code, § 172a, is similar to that of his attempted transfer of homestead, which, under section 1243, must be by conveyance joined in by both husband and wife, and acknowledged by them.

4. Husband and wife ¶265—Wife has tangible and enforceable interest in community property.

Under Civ. Code, § 172a, wife's interest in community property is tangible and enforceable interest, and is not dependent on what has been defined as her expectancy therein.

5. Husband and wife ¶262(1)—Interest of husband and wife in lots presumed to be community property.

Where interest of husband and wife in lots was acquired 5 years after adding of section 172a to the Civ. Code by St. 1917, p. 829, and 19 years after relation of husband and wife was alleged to have been created, presumption follows, irrespective of testimony, that their interest in lots was community property.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Edward Bone against P. J. Dwyer and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Elizabeth L. Dwyer appeals. Reversed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.

Foltz, Rendon & Wallace, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. On the 19th day of October, 1923, the plaintiff commenced this action to quiet title to lots numbered 162 and 172 of Burkett Acres Community, according to the official map thereof on record, etc., situate in San Joaquin county. The plaintiff had judgment and the defendant Elizabeth L. Dwyer appeals. The complaint alleges that ever since the 2d day of September, 1903, the defendants P. J. Dwyer and Elizabeth L. Dwyer have been and now are husband and wife. It appears from the record in this case that on or about the 15th day of July, 1922, an agreement of purchase and sale was entered into between Mrs. Maria E. Lindahl, a widow, the then owner of said lots, and P. J. Dwyer, one of the defendants herein, whereby it was agreed that upon payment of the sum of $1,100, and the assuming by the purchaser of a lien upon said premises in the sum of $1,400, created by a deed of trust theretofore executed by the owner of said lots, the said Mrs. Lindahl would convey to the said P. J. Dwyer the premises hereinbefore described; that at the time of the execution of said agreement for the purchase and sale of said premises, there was also executed and placed in escrow with one W. C. Ramsey a grant, bargain, and sale deed of said premises conveying the same by the said Mrs. Lindahl to the said Dwyer. By the terms of the agreement of sale $500 was paid in cash and $600 to be paid as follows: $50 a month until the full sum of $600 should have been paid and that upon the payment of said remaining $600, in the manner provided for, the deed left in escrow with W. C. Ramsey was to be delivered to the defendant P. J. Dwyer. It further appears that the said P. J. Dwyer thereafter paid the further sum of $150, leaving an unpaid balance of said purchase price of the sum of $450. If further appears that at a subsequent time, the exact date of which does not appear in the transcript, the said P. J. Dwyer assigned and transferred his interest in said agreement to the plaintiff, Edward Bone. It does not appear from the transcript in just what form this assignment or transfer was made by the said P. J. Dwyer to the plaintiff, Edward Bone, or the consideration, if any, paid therefor, but it does appear without any contradiction that his wife, Elizabeth L. Dwyer, was not a party thereto and did not join in any transfer, assignment, or conveyance of said contract or of any interest therein, or of any interest in and to the real estate hereinbefore described. After the assignment to him by the defendant P. J. Dwyer, the plaintiff completed the payment of the sum of $450 to Maria E. Lindahl, whereupon the deed delivered in escrow, purporting to convey the described premises to the defendant P. J. Dwyer was delivered to the plaintiff, or rather to the plaintiff's wife, and was by the plaintiff filed for record in the county recorder's office of the county of San Joaquin on the 15th day of August, 1923. This deed was recorded by the plaintiff under the impression that it conveyed the premises to himself. Thereafter, and upon the discovery that the grantee named in said deed was the defendant P. J. Dwyer, a subsequent deed was executed by the said Maria E. Lindahl purporting to convey the same premises to the plaintiff, Edward Bone, and this deed was recorded at the request of the plaintiff in the office of the county recorder of San Joaquin on the 11th day of October, 1923. After these transactions had been had, the plaintiff instituted this action to quiet his title thereto and cancel the deed executed by Maria E. Lindahl to the defendant P. J. Dwyer, the court entered a decree and judgment to that effect.

[1, 2] Upon the trial of the action the defendant P. J. Dwyer disclaimed all interest in the premises, the defendant Elizabeth L. Dwyer, by answer and cross-complaint, alleged ownership in and to the said premises and prayed a judgment and decree of the court establishing her rights and title therein. Upon the trial of the action the defendant, in support of her title and the right to maintain her action to said premises, sought to introduce a judgment and decree of the superior court of San Joaquin county prosecuted by herself against her husband, P. J. Dwyer, for maintenance, and in which action the said premises had been set aside absolutely for the uses and purposes of said Elizabeth L. Dwyer, and which judgment purported to grant and confirm to said Elizabeth L. Dwyer the title to said premises for her maintenance and support, subject only to the deed of trust heretofore referred to in this opinion. The admission of this judgment and decree in evidence was objected to on the ground that the plaintiff was not a party to the action. The court sustained this objection. The judgment and decree in question was clearly admissible for the purpose of supporting the claim of Elizabeth L. Dwyer to said premises, and also in support of her title to maintain an action for the possession thereof, and to have her title thereto, if any, quieted. The theory upon which the action was tried, as indicated by the statement of counsel for plaintiff and by the findings and judgment of the court, was that the defendant Elizabeth L. Dwyer had no claim to said premises other than by first showing that the defendant P. J. Dwyer had obtained a title thereto, or owned an interest therein, and that, as he had assigned all of his interest, there was nothing upon which the defendant Elizabeth L. Dwyer could predicate any claim or title to said premises. In following this theory counsel and court appear to have overlooked entirely the provisions of section 172a of the Civil Code. That section was added by the statutes of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 829), and at the time of the transactions hereinbefore had, and prior to the amendment thereof in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 84), which is immaterial here, is as follows:

"The husband has the management and control of the community real property but the wife must join with him in executing any instrument by which such community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or incumbered; provided, however, that the sole lease, contract, mortgage or deed of the husband, holding the record title to community real property, to a lessee, purchaser or incumbrancer, in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation shall be presumed to be valid; but no action to avoid such instrument shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the filing for record of such instrument in the recorder's office in the county in which the land is situate."

By the terms of that section, which, as applied both to the pleadings and the facts in this case, must be read as though there were no proviso clause therein, or limitation of time as to the maintenance of an action by the appellant, the original conveyance or transfer by the defendant P. J. Dwyer to the plaintiff, Edward Bone, in whatever form or words it was made, or purported to be made, was wholly insufficient to assign, transfer, or convey to the plaintiff an indefeasible interest in and to said contract, or the real property therein described. Under the facts of this case, the wife, not having joined her husband in the execution of the transfer and conveyance, under the terms of the section to which we have referred, left the right of the wife to maintain or defend her interest or title to the premises in the same condition as though the instrument had not been executed. It appears from the testimony that the instrument by which it was attempted to convey the title to the premises by P. J. Dwyer to the plaintiff, Edward Bone, has been destroyed, and the testimony in relation to its terms is so indefinite that nothing further can be concluded than that there was a written agreement concerning the purchase and sale of said premises, the execution of a deed to be left in escrow, and a subsequent attempted conveyance or assignment to the plaintiff by the defendant P. J. Dwyer. This agreement was not recorded, and no knowledge of the attempted transfer or conveyance or assignment executed by the defendant P.

J. Dwyer was ever brought home to the knowledge of the defendant Elizabeth L. Dwyer. It further appears from the testimony that all the right, title, and interest of the defendant P. J. Dwyer and Elizabeth L. Dwyer in and to said contract, and in and to the said premises, was community property. The plaintiff's complaint also alleged the fact of the existence of the marriage relation between P. J. Dwyer and Elizabeth L. Dwyer as dating from the year 1903. There is nothing in the record which shows that the plaintiff is entitled to hold under that portion of section 172a, Civil Code, which protects a purchaser or incumbrancer, in good faith, without knowledge of the marriage relation, where the record title to the premises stands in the name of the husband. The pleadings negative such claim. It is thus apparent that this case comes within the terms of section 172a, Civil Code, as though it ended with the word "provided." The case of Rice v. McCarthy (Cal. App.) 239 P. 56, had to do with the transfer of real property, where the good-faith clause of said section was involved, and in such cases the section explicitly provides that the lease, contract, mortgage, or deed shall be presumed to be valid. In the case at bar, there is absolutely no such presumption mentioned in the section as applied to the facts contained in the record. The law applicable to the facts of this case, as set forth in section 172a of the Civil Code, is:

"The husband has the management and control of the community real property but the wife must join with him in executing any instrument by which such community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or incumbered."

[3] The principle involved in the transfer of community real property, or of any interest therein, by the husband, without the signature of the wife when uncontrolled or limited by the good-faith and time clauses of the section, is similar to that involved in the attempted transfer by the husband of property covered by a homestead. Section 1243, Civil Code, provides the manner in which such property may be conveyed. The husband and wife must both join in the conveyance and must both acknowledge the same. MacLeod v. Moran, 153 Cal. 97, 94 P. 604, also reported on second appeal in 11 Cal. App. 622, 105 P. 932. Prior to its amendment the state of Idaho had a statute (Comp. Stats. § 4666), which provided that a transfer or assignment of any interest in community real estate occupied as a home or residence must be signed and acknowledged by both husband and wife in order to convey the same. That an instrument wanting the signature or acknowledgment of the wife conveys no such interest was so held in the following cases: McKinney v. Merritt, 35 Idaho, 600, 208 P. 244; Kohny v.

Since the decision rendered in the above cases, section 4666 of the Compiled Statutes of Idaho 1919, has been amended to read as follows:

"The husband has the management and control of the community property * * * but he cannot sell, convey or incumber the community real estate unless the wife join with him in executing and acknowledging the deed or other instrument of conveyance, by which the real estate is sold, conveyed or incumbered."

[4] Following the terms of the statute as amended, the Supreme Court, in Hart v. Turner, 39 Idaho, 50, 226 P. 282, decision rendered May 5, 1924, has held a contract for the sale of community real property not signed and acknowledged by both husband and wife is invalid. The wording of the Idaho statute, as amended, is identical with the substance of that portion of section 172a of the Civil Code applicable to this cause. It is true that the Supreme Court of Idaho has held that the wife has an ownership in the community property, while in this state it is held that the interest of the wife in such property is in the nature of an expectancy, but this definition of the wife's interest cannot be held to limit the effect, or bar the right of the wife to defend an action wherein her rights to the premises are called in question, or to maintain an action for the enforcement of the same. Any other interpretation would read section 172a, Civil Code, out of the Codes. Whatever the wife's interest may be, we hold that under the section it is a tangible, enforceable interest, and is not dependent upon the maturity of what has been defined as her expectancy in community property.

The good-faith provision and the time limit set forth in section 172a, Civil Code, not being involved in this action, it is immaterial to a determination herein whether the last clause be read as evidencing an intent of the Legislature that all cases involving a transfer of community real property by an instrument unsigned by the wife shall be held as voidable only, or whether it is only a limit of time in which the wife may maintain her rights. Whether interpreted as meaning void ab initio or voidable only, the testimony set forth in the record shows that the appellant was entitled to findings in her favor.

[5] It further appears from the record that the interest of the defendants in and to said lots was acquired approximately 5 years after the adding of section 172a of the Civil Code, and also approximately 19 years after the relation of husband and wife is alleged to have been created, and therefore the presumption necessarily follows, irrespective of the testimony, that the interest of the dependants in and to the two lots was community property. It may be added that there was nothing in the record to show that the community property which entered into the part payment of the lots made by the defendant Dwyer was acquired by him prior to the adoption of said section 172a, Civil Code. It follows from what we have said that the findings of the court that the plaintiff was the owner of the premises involved in said action, and that the defendant Elizabeth L. Dwyer had no right, title, claim, or interest therein, are not supported by the evidence.

The judgment of the trial court must be and the same is hereby reversed.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

PEOPLE v. JANSSEN et al. (Cr. 1222.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 21, 1925.)

1. Criminal law ☞511(2)—Evidence corroborating accomplice must tend to connect defendant with offense charged.

Evidence, required by Pen. Code, § 1111, to corroborate accomplices' testimony, must of itself, without aid of accomplices' testimony, connect or tend to connect defendant with commission of offense charged.

2. Criminal law ☞511(2)—Evidence corroborating accomplice must do more than raise grave suspicion.

While evidence corroborating accomplice must tend at least slightly to implicate defendant in commission of crime, it must do more than merely raise grave suspicion, and conviction on proof of circumstances consistent with accused's innocence, when taken separately or collectively, will be set aside.

3. Criminal law ☞511(4) — Proof of opportunity to commit crime insufficient corroboration of accomplice.

Proof of opportunity to commit crime is insufficient corroboration of accomplice.

4. Criminal law ☞511(1)—Testimony of accomplices held insufficiently corroborated to sustain conviction.

Evidence held insufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplices and sustain conviction of extortion.

5. Criminal law ☞1159(5)—Conviction on accomplices' testimony, not substantially corroborated by other evidence, cannot stand.

While appellate court will not disturb verdict of jury, whose peculiar province it is to weigh evidence and determine credibility of witnesses, where there is substantial conflict in evidence, judicial department may not ignore rule established by Legislature in Pen. Code, § 1111, that accomplices' testimony must be substantially corroborated to justify conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

H. S. Janssen and J. D. Joiner were convicted of extortion, and defendant Joiner appeals. Reversed.

W. E. Abraham, of Brawley, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. The appellant, Joiner, and one Janssen were jointly charged with the crime of extortion. Joiner, who, with his codefendant, was found guilty as charged, appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The sole point upon which appellant relies for a reversal is that the only evidence tending to connect him with the crime was that of three accomplices, D. E. Edwards, Jim Chadwick, and G. W. Tucker, whose testimony was not corroborated as required by section 1111 of the Penal Code. That section, so far as applicable, reads:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof."

The facts attending the immediate commission of the crime, as distinguished from appellant's alleged connection therewith, are practically undisputed and are substantially these: About midnight of September 1, 1924, Edwards, Chadwick, and Tucker went to the house of a Japanese who was living on a ranch about 4½ miles from the town of Brawley, in Imperial county, which had been leased to him by the defendant Janssen. Representing themselves to be officers who had come to search the place for contraband liquor, two of the three men drew pistols and pointed them at the Japanese. The three then demanded that the Japanese take them to the place where the liquor was hid, telling him that they would take the liquor to headquarters, but that, if he would give to each of them the sum of $200, they would release him. Overcome by fear, the Japanese gave the men a watch and $100 in cash, promising to raise the balance the following day. In addition to the money and the watch, the pseudo officers took away about 30 gallons of whisky from a still which they found under a haystack on the place. On September 9, 1924, Edwards, Chadwick, and Tucker were arrested. Later they were charged with the crime of extortion. They pleaded guilty, and were serving their sentences at the time of the trial of Janssen and Joiner.

It is not claimed that either appellant or Janssen accompanied Edwards, Chadwick, and Tucker to the ranch of the Japanese. The three who admitted their complicity in the perpetration of the extortion testified that early in the evening of September 1st, while seated in an automobile on one of the public streets of Brawley, Janssen proposed to them that they be deputized to make a raid upon the still; that, during this conversation, Joiner, who was a deputy marshal of Brawley, was standing on the street not far away; that Janssen called to Joiner to come over; that the latter did as requested, and was introduced by Janssen to the three, who later confessed their part in the extortion; that, shortly after he was thus introduced to the three men, Joiner said he would deputize them to raid the still; that soon after this Janssen and Joiner departed, and, presently returning, Joiner gave the three alleged accomplices two guns and a badge; that Joiner then left the spot where the automobile was standing; and that later Edwards, Chadwick and Tucker "staged the raid," as already narrated. A badge was found on Chadwick's sweater after his arrest. None of the three confessed culprits saw Joiner again until about the time of their arrest a week later. The foregoing is the sum and substance of the testimony given by the three men respecting Joiner's connection with the crime.

The only evidence which, independently of that given by the three alleged accomplices, tends in anywise to connect Joiner with the commission of the crime is substantially as follows: Upon three different occasions during the month preceding the extortion Janssen endeavored to persuade one William O'Brien, the constable of Brawley township, to join him in a pretended raid on a still which Janssen informed O'Brien was located on a ranch which he had leased to a Japanese. Through the information thus imparted to him, O'Brien, by searching the records of the county recorder's office, was able to locate the land on which the still was situated. Late in the afternoon of the day following the "raid" by Edwards, Chadwick, and Tucker, O'Brien, accompanied by a deputy marshal of Brawley, the chief of police of that town, the undersheriff of Imperial county, and the defendant Joiner, left Brawley in an automobile and rode to the ranch for the purpose of conducting a search for the still. At that time O'Brien knew nothing of the exploit of Edwards, Chadwick, and Tucker on the preceding night. He testified that he did not learn of it until 6 days later. Shortly before the officers departed from Brawley to search for the still, Joiner, who was then in the city hall, overheard O'Brien and the others talking about making a raid, and asked O'Brien if he might accompany them. Permission to do so was given him. Thus it was that Joiner came to be one of the party led by O'Brien to the home of the Japanese. Arriving at the ranch, three of the officers left the automobile and conducted a search for the still. Joiner and O'Brien remained seated in the car. After a lapse of some time, Joiner turned to O'Brien and said, "I expect I ought to have gone up there; I am a bear at that underground stuff." O'Brien testified that up to that time he had not told Joiner that the still on the premises then being raided was underground. However, the officers had taken with them an iron rod known as a "booze prong" or "joy prong," used by officers when searching for liquor underground.

On the 9th of September, after the arrest of Edwards, and while he was being taken to jail, Joiner was seen talking to Janssen on one of the streets of Brawley. O'Brien testified that he saw the two talking to each other several times just prior to the arrest of Edwards, and also several times on the same evening following the arrest.

The badge which was found on Chadwick's sweater following his arrest was not of the kind generally used in Imperial county by peace officers. The sheriff of Cochise county, Ariz., testified that Joiner formerly lived in that county, where he had been a deputy sheriff, that at that time various kinds of badges were used by the deputy sheriffs of Cochise county, and that he had seen in that county badges similar to the one found on Chadwick's sweater. An examination of the badge with a magnifying glass disclosed on the reverse side the letter "J," scratched on the metal near the top, and also the letters "NM" at the bottom.

The chief of police of Brawley testified that at the time when Edwards, Chadwick, and Tucker extorted the money from the Japanese he kept extra "guns" in a drawer of his desk in his office at the city hall, and that Joiner had a key to the office. The witness further testified, however, that he at no time missed any of the weapons.

[1] The corroborative evidence necessary to meet the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code must of itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, connect or tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged. People v. Robbins, 171 Cal. 466, 154 P. 317. In People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 724, 73 P. 611, the Supreme Court quoted with approval from Welden v. State, 10 Tex. App. 400, as follows:

"We suggest this mode as a proper test: Eliminate from the case the evidence of the accomplice, and then examine the evidence of the other witness or witnesses with the view to ascertain if there be inculpatory evidence—evidence tending to connect the defendant with the offense. If there is, the accomplice is corroborated; if there is no inculpatory evidence, there is no corroboration, though the accomplice may be corroborated in regard to any number of facts sworn to by him."

And again, on the same page, our Supreme Court says:

"In New York, under the same Code provision (Code Crim. Proc. § 399), it was said: 'The corroboration, however strong in all other respects, must point to the connection of the defendant with the commission of the crime to be of any avail.' People v. Ryland, 28 Hun. [N. Y.] 568, 570."

[2] While the corroborative evidence must tend in some slight degree, at least, to implicate the defendant in the commission of the crime, more is required of it than merely to raise a grave suspicion. The rule as to the extent of corroborating evidence necessary to support the testimony of an accomplice is well stated in 12 Cyc. at page 456, quoted with approval by our Supreme Court in People v. Robbins, supra:

"It is necessary that the evidence corroborating an accomplice shall connect or tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Corroborative evidence is insufficient where it merely casts a grave suspicion upon the accused. It must not only show the commission of the offense and the circumstances thereof, but must also implicate the accused in it. * * * But where the circumstances when proved, taken separately or collectively, are consistent with the innocence of the accused, there is no corroboration, and a verdict of conviction thereon will be set aside."

In that case the court further said (171 Cal. 471 [154 P. 319]):

"* * * The corroborative evidence required to convict the defendant in addition to that of the accomplice is not sufficient if it merely tends to raise a suspicion of the guilt of the accused. * * * Mere suspicion, as has been shown, will not suffice as corroborative evidence; and where the evidence relied upon as corroborative of the accomplice is, as in the present case, only such as to raise a suspicion of the guilt of the defendant, the verdict must be set aside."

[3] Nor is proof of opportunity to commit the crime of itself sufficient corroboration. "The fact that the defendant had an opportunity to commit it," says the court in People v. Robbins (p. 470 [154 P. 319]), "is of no particular significance as far as corroboration is concerned. Of course, the opportunity of the defendant to commit the particular crime for which he is on trial may always be shown in connection with other facts to establish his guilt; but we know of no rule which holds that mere opportunity to commit a crime is an incriminating corroborating circumstance." Again, on page 476 (154 P. 321):

"The proofs of mere suspicious circumstances and of opportunity to commit a crime are never sufficient to justify a conviction upon the testimony of an accomplice. People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480; People v. Smith, 98 Cal. 218, 33 P. 58; People v. Koenig, 99 Cal. 574, 576, 34 P. 238; State v. Willis, 9 Iowa, 582; People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 725, 73 P. 609."

[4] Tested by these well-established rules, the conclusion is irresistible that the circumstances narrated by those witnesses who had no connection with the crime are not sufficient, singly or collectively, to constitute that corroboration which in the eyes of the law will support a verdict founded primarily upon the testimony of accomplices. The fact that appellant, a peace officer, was seen upon several occasions upon the streets of Brawley in conversation with Janssen shortly prior to and after the "raid" on the still by the three confessed culprits hardly rises to the dignity of a merely suspicious circumstance. It has no inculpatory value whatever.

Nor can we perceive any inculpatory evidence in the circumstance that appellant, when seated in the automobile with O'Brien while the other officers were conducting a search for the still, exclaimed, "I expect I ought to have gone up there; I am a bear at that underground stuff." Because O'Brien testified that he had not told appellant that the still was underground, respondent argues that at the time when appellant made this statement he could not have known that the officers were searching for an underground still unless he previously had learned from Janssen or from some one of the three confessed culprits that the still operated by the Japanese was concealed underground; wherefore it is argued that the exclamation was the unguarded outburst of a guilty knowledge. The argument is inconclusive. Even though O'Brien did not tell appellant that the expedition was to search for an underground still, the other officers who accompanied appellant and O'Brien doubtless had been informed of the nature of the proposed search. It is not at all improbable that from remarks dropped by some one of the officers other than O'Brien, while the party was on its way to the ranch, appellant concluded that the still of which they were in quest was one which was concealed underground. Moreover, as a peace officer charged with the duty to ferret out crime, appellant doubtless knew the purpose of the "booze prong" which the officers brought with them, and from the circumstance of its presence he may well have concluded that the search was to be made for an underground still. In short, if we import to the exclamation made by appellant in the presence of O'Brien the greatest possible significance, it does no more than raise a mere suspicion. Indeed, it seems to be as consistent with innocence as with guilt.

The circumstance that the badge found on Chadwick's sweater was of a kind similar to those which were used in Cochise county when appellant was a deputy sheriff in that county no more tends to connect him with the crime for which he was on trial than it would to raise a suspicion against hundreds of other persons. There is nothing in the evidence to indicate that badges of the kind found on Chadwick were used only in Cochise county, Ariz. For aught that appears to the contrary, they may have been in use in many parts of the United States where appellant never resided. In fact, the letters "NM," scratched on the reverse side of the badge, have some tendency to show that the badge had been used in and was brought from the state of New Mexico—a state in which appellant has not been shown ever to have resided, and where it may have been accessible to innumerable persons. The fact that the letter "J" was etched on the reverse side of the badge has no inculpatory significance. It does not tend to connect appellant with the crime. The star may have been the property of any one of a host of persons the initial letter of whose names is "J." It may have belonged, for example, to any one of the multitude who constitute the Jones family. See People v. Ames, 39 Cal. 403, and particularly the remarks of the court on page 405.

No significance inimical to the presumption of appellant's innocence can be attached to the fact that he possessed a key to the office in which the chief of police kept extra "guns." There is no pretense that any of these guns was ever taken by appellant. None was ever missed. At best this evidence only shows that appellant had an opportunity to take one or more of such weapons for the purpose of supplying the three accomplices with firearms. But the fact that appellant had an opportunity to commit the crime is of no particular significance, so far as corroboration is concerned.

[5] For the foregoing reasons we are impelled to the conclusion that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. It is, of course, true that, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, this court will not disturb the verdict of the jury, whose peculiar province it is to weigh the evidence and to determine the credibility of the witnesses. But, in the present instance, the evidence in support of the testimony of the accomplices is so attenuated that it does not rise to the dignity of corroboration. The Legislature, acting within the scope of its authority, has provided that, to justify the conviction of a defendant, there must be substantial corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. The lawmaking body doubtless had a good reason for this rule of evidence, and based it on what it conceived to be a sound public policy. The judicial department may not ignore the rule without unwarrantably invading the rights of the accused.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

PEOPLE v. LABORWITS. (Cr. 1221.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 21, 1925.)

Criminal law §982, 1147—Denial of leave to file application for probation not reviewable.

Under Pen. Code, § 1203, admission of one convicted of crime to probation rests entirely in trial court's discretion, and his denial of leave to file application therefor cannot be reviewed by appellate court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Morris Laborwits pleaded guilty of forgery, and, before judgment, asked leave to file application for probation. From order denying leave, he appeals. Affirmed.

Stanley Visel, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CURTIS, J. The indictment against appellant contained six counts; each charging him with the crime of forgery. Appellant pleaded guilty to the charge contained in count 1, and the other five counts were ordered off the calendar. Thereupon, and before judgment, appellant asked leave to file an application for probation, which was denied by the court.

The only point made by appellant on this appeal is that there was an abuse of the trial court's discretion in refusing to allow the defendant the privilege of filing an application for probation. A similar question was before the appellate court in the case of People v. Dunlop, 27 Cal. App. 460, 150 P. 389, wherein the court held that the action of the trial court in refusing to hear such an application was not reviewable on appeal. The court, on page 470 (150 P. 393) of its opinion, declared the law as follows:

"The action of the court in refusing to entertain an application by the defendant for probation after his conviction or of taking testimony or the report of the probation officer of the court with a view to admitting the accused to probation cannot be reviewed. The matter of admitting a person convicted of crime to probation rests entirely in the discretion of the trial court, as does likewise the question whether any proceedings shall be entertained by the court to that end. Pen. Code, § 1203."

We are in accord with the appellate court in its construction of section 1203 of the Penal Code, and upon the authority of this case the judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1925.)1. Criminal law §48—"Shell shock" defined.

"Shell shock" is not a distinct type of nervous disorder, but is a condition produced on certain organisms by sudden fear, or by highly exciting causes; it is a form of neurosis; it is not settled, general insanity, but a functional nervous disease, and not due to organic changes.

2. Criminal law §625—Existence of "doubt" as to sanity within statute, authorizing investigation of accused's sanity, defined.

Existence of a doubt as to the sanity of accused within Pen. Code, § 1368, which authorizes the court pending the action to submit accused's sanity to jury when doubt arises as to whether accused is sane, means any doubt that may be created in mind of trial court, arising from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances which situation may disclose.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Doubt.]

3. Criminal law §625—"Doubt" as to accused's sanity, must be founded on substantial grounds to justify dismissal of jury or suspension of trial to determine question of sanity.

Doubt of trial court as to accused's sanity, within Pen. Code, § 1368, must be founded on substantial grounds to justify dismissal of jury or suspension of trial to determine question of accused's sanity; that is, there must exist reason to believe that claim of insanity made on behalf of accused is genuine and not simulated.

4. Criminal law §48—When Insanity is available as a defense stated.

For insanity to be available as a defense to crime, it must be shown by a preponderance of evidence that accused did not know the nature or the quality of the act which he committed, or, if he did know, that he did not know that it was wrong to commit it.

5. Criminal law §51—Moral insanity does not excuse commission of crime.

Moral insanity, as distinguished from mental derangement, does not excuse commission of crime.

6. Criminal law §331—Burden of proof is on accused to show insanity.

Burden of proof is on accused or person asserting his insanity to establish its existence by preponderance of evidence.

7. Criminal law §570(1)—Insanity held not shown.

Accused held to have failed to meet burden imposed on him to establish his alleged insanity.

8. Criminal law §625—Whether mental condition of accused was assumed or real held province of trial court to determine.

Whether mental condition of accused, as exhibited by him during trial, was assumed, as claimed by state expert witnesses, or real, as claimed by defense, held province of trial court to determine, in exercise of sound discretion.

9. Criminal law §625—Refusal of trial court to submit specially to jury issue of accused's insanity held not abuse of discretion.

Refusal of trial court to submit specially to jury issue of accused's insanity, within Pen. Code, § 1368, no motion for such submission having been made, held not abuse of discretion.

10. Criminal law §625—Whether doubt sufficient to require trial court to submit issue of accused's insanity is question resting largely within discretion of trial court.

Question whether doubt sufficient to require trial court to submit issue of accused's insanity, pursuant to Pen. Code, § 1368, is one resting largely within discretion of trial court, similar to discretion conferred by Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, in passing upon competency of witnesses.

11. Criminal law §570(3)—Judgment committing person to state hospital for care and treatment of insane is not final upon question of criminal responsibility.

Judgment committing person to state hospital for care and treatment of insane is not final and conclusive upon question of criminal responsibility or the ability of a person so committed to conduct his defense in a rational manner.

12. Criminal law §981(1)—Insanity, not permanent or habitual, affords no presumption of its existence two weeks prior to its discovery.

Where insanity of defendant, as discovered at state hospital two weeks after his trial, was not permanent or habitual, no presumption could be indulged that it had an existence two weeks prior to defendant's commitment to the hospital.

13. Criminal law §981(1)—Trial court's conclusion, before pronouncing judgment, that accused was then sane, held not abuse of discretion.

Trial court's conclusion, before pronouncing judgment on accused, returned to court as sane, after confinement less than 30 days in state hospital, that accused was then sane, based in part upon replies of accused to inquiries made by court pursuant to Pen. Code, § 1192a, held not abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Samuel Gilberg was convicted of having committed a lewd and lascivious act on a female child, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. Guy Ryker, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., and Chas. Wade Snook and J. F. Coakley, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of Oakland, for the People.

SEAWELL, J. The defendant was charged by an information filed in the superior court of Alameda county, by the district attorney of said county, with the crime of committing a lewd and lascivious act upon the body of a female child of the age of 11 years, who is specifically described in said information, in violation of section 288, Penal Code, defining crimes against children. Upon a second trial he was convicted of the offense charged in the information. An appeal was taken from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a new trial to the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, and the judgment and order were reversed by that court on the ground that the trial court had abused the discretion vested in it by omitting to suspend the trial and submit the issue of the defendant's sanity to a jury upon the claim made by defendant's counsel that a doubt had arisen as to the sanity of the defendant. A petition having been filed by the Attorney General for a hearing by this court, an order was made transferring said cause to this court for hearing and determination. The only questions presented or argued upon the appeal go to the mental condition of the defendant both at the time he committed said offense and at the time of the trial of said cause. The section of the Penal Code under which defendant claims that it became the imperative duty of the trial court to have halted the trial and submitted the issue of sanity to a jury provides as follows:

"If at any time during the pendency of an action up to and including the time when defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction a doubt arises as to the sanity of the defendant, the court must order the question as to his sanity to be submitted to a jury; and the trial or the pronouncing of the judgment must be suspended until the question is determined by their verdict, and the trial jury may be discharged or retained, according to the discretion of the court, during the pendency of the issue of insanity." Pen. Code, § 1368.

The judge who presided at the second trial also presided at the preceding trial, which resulted in a disagreement of the jury as to defendant's guilt and he was therefore given ample time and opportunity to observe the conduct and appearance of the defendant through two trials and upon other occasions when the accused was before him on matters preliminary and incidental to the crime charged. Besides, the record indicates that the defendant became a witness in his own behalf at the first trial, and related his life history, and furnished all information that was deemed by counsel necessary to form a basis for the claim that the accused was insane at the time he committed the crime. It does not appear that any suggestion was made during the first trial that the defendant was then incapacitated from making his defense. His mental state at the time of the second trial depended upon his mental condition existing at that particular time. The court had been made acquainted with the appearance and the history of his prior mental condition from a number of sources. The conduct and manner of the defendant when upon the witness stand, and which gave occasion for the request that a recess be taken and the trial continued to give counsel an opportunity to show that the defendant, as put by him, was in "no mental shape to go ahead with the trial," was before the court for scrutiny.

[1] The defendant had served first in the Canadian and latterly in the American army in the World War. He received no battlefield wounds, but claims to have suffered an injury by falling into a "funk-hole." It appears that he spent considerable time during his enlistment, both overseas and in this country, as a patient in hospitals, under treatment for "shell shock." "Shell shock" is not a distinct type of nervous disorder, but a condition produced upon certain organisms by sudden fear or by highly exciting causes. It is a form of neurosis. It is not settled, general insanity, but, according to the testimony of the expert offered by the defense, a functional nervous disease, and not due to organic changes.

The defendant was partially examined as a witness on Friday, April 11, 1924, and withdrawn to make way for expert evidence as to his present mental condition. The request for a recess of court was made on the following Monday. When the defendant was first upon the stand his answers to questions were responsive and coherent and his memory fairly good. It was after experts had been called on his behalf, who related in his presence with minute detail the symptoms of "shell shock" and epilepsy and the effect of each upon the nervous organism, as manifested by the external actions of those thus affected, that the defendant, upon resuming the witness stand, seemed to pass from a rational state into a state of faulty memory and finally into a state of apparent unconsciousness and collapse which caused a temporary cessation of the trial.

[2, 3] The existence of a doubt as to the sanity of the defendant means, of course, any doubt that may be created in the mind of the trial court arising from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances which the situation may disclose, and he may, upon his own motion, in the exercise of a sound discretion, submit the question of the defendant's sanity to the determination of a jury. Such a doubt must be supported by facts and circumstances of a substantial character. This right does not arise merely because the defendant asserts insanity, however baseless the claim may be. To justify the dismissal of the jury or the suspension of a trial the court must entertain a doubt founded upon substantial grounds. In other words, there must exist reason to believe that the claim of insanity made on behalf of the accused is genuine and not simulated as a means of defeating or delaying the law's penalties in cases where all other means of evading punishment would seem hopeless. People v. Fountain, 170 Cal. 460, 150 P. 341, is in point. There a motion was made for a continuance, coupled with a request to call a jury to try the sanity of the defendant, which was noticed to be heard on the day set for trial. The motion and request was also based on an affidavit of one of the counsel for the defendant that he had conversed with the defendant for an hour on each of two occasions, and he believed him to be insane, and that counsel was informed that the defendant was then an escapee from an asylum in the state of Iowa. The motion was denied. This court, in considering the meaning of section 1368, Penal Code, and its application to the question of the existence of "a doubt" touching the insanity of the accused, said:

"The doubt referred to in section 1368 of the Penal Code, upon the existence of which a trial of the present sanity of a defendant must be had is a doubt arising in the mind of the court having the defendant in charge. People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425 (58 P. 918). Counsel for appellant assume that a doubt of the sanity of defendant must legally have been engendered in the mind of the court on the affidavit of counsel expressing his belief that defendant was then insane, coupled with the further averment of the escape of defendant from an asylum in Iowa to which he had been committed some 28 years before. But the court was not constrained to entertain this doubt simply because counsel entertained such a belief proceeding from some conversations with defendant or the suggestion of a previous commitment and escape. All that was presented on the hearing of the motion was this affidavit of counsel. There was no evidence, oral or documentary, introduced on the subject. But opposed to these matters stated in the affidavit of counsel for defendant, as is said in People v. Kirby, 15 Cal. App. 264-269 (114 P. 794, 796): 'It is fair to assume that the trial court had ample opportunity to, and did, as was its duty, observe and note the defendant's mental condition from time to time, and in particular on the date when his present insanity was suggested. The knowledge thus acquired may have contributed largely toward rebutting any possible inference of present legal insanity which might have been deduced from the facts stated in the affidavit. Section 1368 of the Penal Code contemplates that the doubt referred to therein must arise in the mind of the court having a defendant in charge (People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425 [58 P. 918]; Webber v. Commonwealth, 119 Pa. 223 [13 A. 427, 4 Am. St. Rep. 634]); and in the absence of such a doubt the court is not required to submit the question of the defendant's present insanity to a jury in advance of the trial (People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 440 [48 P. 389]).'

See, also, People v. Keyes, 178 Cal. 794, 175 P. 6.

A denial of the motion and request was held not to be erroneous. The facts of that case presented stronger reasons for the submission of the issue of defendant's sanity to a jury than are to be found in the instant case. Here, no specific request was made to submit the issue of defendant's sanity to a jury, and the motion for a continuance came after the defendant had put in a part of his case. No affidavit was here made or presented by counsel as in the case above cited to the effect that the defendant, in the opinion of counsel, was insane, or that counsel was unable to converse with his client or obtain from him information necessary to the presentation of his defense or to otherwise guard his rights.

The facts of the case necessary to an understanding of the points presented, may be briefly stated: Mrs. Eva Foley, a widow and the mother of the girl upon whom the offense was committed, resided at San Leandro, Alameda county. Three daughters resided with her. The defendant, who was about 30 years of age, married the eldest daughter when she was of the age of about 16 years. Shortly after marriage, he and his wife made their home with the mother of his wife. A separate room was assigned to them. The other children shared bedroom space with the mother. The daughter upon whom the offense was committed slept alone on a cot placed near the door, which opened from the bedroom into a hallway. The defendant, on the early morning of November 30, 1923, at about the hour of 4 o'clock, left the room which he, his wife, and his infant child, of the age of about 2 months, were occupying, entered the room in which the 11 year old child was sleeping, and, without awakening the mother or any other member of the family, committed a lewd and lascivious act upon the body of said female child.

That the defendant committed the offense charged there seems to be no serious dispute. He was accused by the mother, to whom the child in a trembling and frightened condition made immediate complaint. A warrant was issued for his arrest within a few hours after the commission of the offense, and he eluded the officer by concealing himself in the basement of his mother-in-law's house. Knowing that the officer was in search of him, he attempted to persuade the mother of the child to have the charge which had been lodged against him dismissed. He admitted his indecent conduct upon the body of the child to both the mother and the city marshal of San Leandro. In addition thereto, the linen upon which the child was sleeping was examined by a bacteriologist, and human male spermatozoa stains were found upon the sheets. The commission by the defendant of the lewd and lascivious act, as charged, was established by the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt.

[4] It must be accepted as a fact, found by the jury, that the defendant was responsible to the law for his act. There is absolutely no substantial evidence in the record that even tends to show that the defendant was affected by any kind or degree of insanity which the law recognizes as an excuse for the commission of interdicted acts, either at the time of, or prior to, the commission of the crime. For insanity to be available as a defense to crime it must be shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the accused did not know the nature or the quality of the act which he committed, or, if he did know the nature and quality of the act, that he did not know that it was wrong to commit it. The kind and degree of insanity available as a defense to crime has many times been defined by the decisions of this court. Before it may be available as a defense—

"It must appear that the defendant, when the act was committed, was so deranged and diseased mentally that he was not conscious of the wrongful nature of the act committed. If he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, knowledge and consciousness that what he is doing is wrong and criminal and will subject him to punishment, he must be held responsible for his conduct. Although he may be laboring under partial insanity—as, for instance, suffering from some insane delusion or hallucination—still if he understands the nature and character of his action and its consequences—if he has knowledge that it is wrong and criminal, and that if he does the act he will do wrong, such partial insanity or the existence of such delusion or hallucination is not sufficient to relieve him from responsibility for his criminal acts." People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 P. 124; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 255, 46 P. 1073.

[5] The conduct of the defendant, instantly following the commission of the crime and at all times thereafter, conclusively shows that he was conscious of doing wrong, and that he appreciated the nature and the quality of the act at the time he committed it. Added to what we have already said, it may be proper to observe that:

"In our courts of law, there is no such doctrine established or recognized as moral insanity distinguished from mental derangement, as an excuse for crime, and as an exemption from punishment therefor. There is no such type of insanity recognized in our courts as, for instance, that a person may steal your property, burn your dwelling, murder or attempt to murder you, and know at the time that the deed is a criminal act, and wrong in itself, and deserves punishment, having the ability to correctly reason on the subject, and yet be held guiltless and not punishable, on the ground solely, of a perversion of the moral sense." People v. McCarthy, supra.

[6] The burden of proof is always upon the defendant, or upon the person who asserts the insanity of another, to establish its existence by a preponderance of evidence. This universal rule is applicable to the issue of mental unsoundness or irresponsibility in every case in which it may possibly arise, and it has been—

"the established rule in this state practically since its earliest history, repeatedly affirmed by this court, so that it cannot be considered as open to further question. It was first established as the correct rule to be applied in this state in People v. Myers, 20 Cal. 518, and has been adhered to ever since. * * *

[7] Under the evidence in this case it is unnecessary to further pursue the question of the defendant's responsibility to the law at the time he committed the crime. He signally failed to meet the burden which the law imposed upon him.

[8] This brings us to a consideration of whether or not the court abused its discretion by omitting to suspend the trial and submit the question whether or not the defendant was then sane. Defendant's counsel did not at any time make a request or motion that the jury be discharged, or that the trial be suspended and the question of sanity be submitted to a jury as provided by section 1368, Penal Code. He seemed to prefer that the jury in whose presence the episode earlier mentioned occurred be retained to pass upon the question of insanity as it affected the defendant's legal responsibility at the time he committed the offense, and requested a continuance to give him time to prepare a defense upon the theory of insanity. The court did, however, excuse the jury and took medical testimony as to the then mental condition of the accused. The defense offered three medical witnesses who had had more or less experience with nervous diseases, including epilepsy and so-called "shell shock" effects, as to the defendant's mental condition, and the people offered two. No alienist on either side was willing to give it as his opinion that the defendant was affected with epilepsy. In fact, neither the history of the case nor the symptoms which distinctly mark well-recognized types of epilepsy were exhibited by defendant at the times he was thought to be passing through some sort of nervous disturbance. Medical experts testified that he appeared upon two or three occasions to have been in a state of nervous tremor resembling epilepsy, which they diagnosed as a disturbance superinduced by "shell shock." They had also seen him at times when they believed him to have been in a stupor. There was also evidence as to a reduction of 10 points in his blood pressure, and his pulse was 100 as against 80 or 90 when in the condition described by one of the experts as a stupor. Other conditions and symptoms were described, but, as the defendant's condition at the trial was, at best, temporary, and not permanent or settled insanity, it is not necessary to go further into details. No claim was made that he was a victim of settled or general insanity, or that he lapsed into unconsciousness for any very considerable period of time. Prior and subsequent to his war experience defendant had been a sailor, had worked as a carpenter, and had performed general labor. He was actively employed at the time he committed the offense.

The testimony of the experts called on behalf of the defendant which may be said to give color to the claim that the accused was insane at the trial is somewhat lacking in positiveness and definiteness as to the nature of the nervous trouble from which the accused was suffering, and also as to the effect of the disturbances upon his mental faculties as affecting responsibility for his acts, and is attended with considerable speculation. As we understand them, none claimed that the accused was in a state of continuous unconsciousness or incapacity. The defendant had but two paroxysms so far as the observations of the experts went, and reason and consciousness returned after the effects of the spells passed away. Both occurred after the defendant's arrest and during his incarceration in jail. As against the experts called by the defense, the people called two. One was an alienist of many years' experience in both public and private institutions for the care and treatment of the insane. He had conversed with the accused at length upon the subject of the offense with which he was charged, and had made close observation of him, and was present in the courtroom at the time he lapsed into a "spell" while testifying. He went to the aid of the accused, examined him, and applied several mental tests. His testimony is that in his opinion it was a clear case of malingering or feigning insanity. He stated positively that the defendant did not exhibit a single symptom of epilepsy or any other mental disorder. He was of the opinion that the accused was not then insane and never had been insane. The reasons for his opinion were stated at great length. The second expert called by the people was familiar with the form of nervous disorders commonly called "shell shock" cases. His testimony corroborated the theory advanced by the first. Thus it will be seen that a sharp conflict was created as to the mental soundness of the accused. Aside from expert testimony, there was much other evidence in the case. The appearance and actions of the accused, the testimony given by him and his manner upon the stand, as well as the testimony of other witnesses touching his mental condition, were all before the court. With the aid which the foregoing opportunities afforded, it was the province of the trial court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to determine whether the mental condition as exhibited by the defendant was assumed or real.

[9, 10] We have examined the evidence with care, and entertain no doubt but that the conclusion reached by the trial court to the effect that the defendant was at all times sane is amply supported by the record, and it did not abuse its discretion by refusing to submit that issue specially to a jury. The question of whether a doubt sufficient to require the trial court to submit the issue of the sanity of a defendant to a jury during trial is one that must always rest largely within the discretion of the trial court. On principle, the question is not unlike the discretion which the law reposes in a court when it is called upon to pass upon the competency of witnesses to testify as to the sanity of persons generally, under section 1870, subd. 10, Code of Civil Procedure. This question arose in People v. McCarthy, supra, on the claim made by the defendant that the court had abused its discretion in permitting certain persons to testify as to the mental condition of the accused on the theory that they were within the section which permits "intimate acquaintances" to give their opinions with respect to the mental sanity in all cases where that question is an issue. Speaking to the question of judicial discretion this court said:

"In the determination of this question, as in that of any other fact from oral evidence, he [court], of necessity, must be conceded to be the best judge of what the evidence shows, since he has before him many elements of fact which cannot be transmitted to paper, but which enable him to more correctly weigh the evidence, and exercise a wiser discrimination as to what it shows than one who reads but a naked statement of the evidence, without the presence of the witness. And so it has been held, and wisely, that the trial judge is to be accorded wide discretion and latitude in this respect; and his ruling will not be disturbed except where the evidence is so lacking as to leave no just room for question that the discretion has been improperly exercised. People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53; Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 414, 29 P. 1101; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 516, 36 P. 16; People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 52, 39 P. 204."

Counsel has cited as an authority in this case, to the point that the trial court abused its discretion. People v. West, 25 Cal. App. 369, 143 P. 793. It is not necessary for us to comment on what is said in that case as to the effect of judgments and commitments of persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane. The effect of such judgments was fully discussed by this court in People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 P. 124; and we have no disposition to depart from the rules there announced. But nothing is said in People v. West, supra, that helps appellant. The facts before the court in that case are so widely different from the facts of the instant case as to make extended discussion unnecessary. In that case West, who was serving a sentence for the commission of a crime at San Quentin, was, by an authorized board, adjudged insane and committed to a state hospital. Shortly after his arrival at the hospital, he and another inmate took the life of a fellow inmate. Both were charged with homicide. Before the trial the defendants regularly moved the court that the question of their present sanity be submitted to a jury as provided by section 1368, Penal Code. In support of said motion the defense introduced and read the affidavit of one of their counsel. From the affidavit it appeared that both defendants were under commitment to the hospital as insane persons and were being treated as such. It was also averred by said counsel that both he and his associates—

"have each made efforts to secure from the said defendants some statement concerning the crime charged in the information; that said defendants refuse to say anything about the facts or circumstances of the offense, and act as though suffering from delusions of some character; that affiant therefore alleges that it is his opinion that both of these defendants are mentally insane; and that neither of them is mentally competent to make a just and rational defense to the charge made against them."

It was further represented by counsel, in a statement to the Court of Appeal, that the defendants "continued in such a state of mental derangement that attorneys appointed by the court to defend them could obtain no assistance from the defendants in the conduct of their case." In the instant case no suggestion was made to submit the question of defendant's sanity to a jury until the people had closed its case and the defendant had examined two witnesses on the second trial. But the most material difference between the two cases consists in the fact that the defendant in the instant case was not under commitment to a state hospital, and his attorney did not make an affidavit that he was unable to obtain assistance from him or information necessary to enable him to properly present his defense. The information which forms the basis of the expert witnesses' opinions shows that they rested largely upon the personal history of the defendant, which, unquestionably, was furnished by him. Besides, the record is convincing as to his ability to give ample aid to his counsel. In the face of the record before us the affidavit made in the West Case could not have been made in the instant case. With all of the elements which controlled the decision in the West Case absent in the instant case, and there being no corresponding elements present, no grounds remain which would support a finding that the trial court abused its discretion by omitting to submit the issue of sanity to a jury.

[11-13] Upon the defendant being called before the court for sentence, some 12 days after his conviction, his counsel requested that before the pronouncement of judgment the question of his insanity be submitted to a jury. The court yielded to this request, and two days thereafter a jury returned a verdict pronouncing him insane and a proper person for care and treatment at a state hospital. He was detained at the hospital for a period less than 30 days, and returned to the court as restored to sanity. The physician at the hospital believed him to be insane during the first 4 or 5 days after he was received into the hospital, and pronounced his ailment "psychoneurosis, hysterical attacks." Defendant did not give any information as to himself, and when he did answer questions he employed monosyllabic words. He was in a "stuporous state." He constantly twitched his mouth or "blinked his eyes." The physician said that if the defendant exhibited at the trial the same symptoms which he exhibited upon the first days of his confinement at the hospital he "would say that he was insane." The testimony of the expert excluded epilepsy, or settled insanity, or dementia. No delusions were shown to exist at any time. The treatment the defendant received at the hospital was continuous bathing. Also a spinal puncture was made to draw fluid from the spine. On the next day thereafter defendant cleared up and remarked: "I am out of my dream or stupor. I have waked up." The attendant further testified that his nervous trouble was transitory, and by the symptoms which he exhibited while under his care he was unable to say what his mental condition was during the trial, or two weeks prior to his admission at the hospital, or at any other time prior thereto. A judgment committing a person to a state hospital for the care and treatment of the insane is not final and conclusive upon the question of criminal responsibility, or the ability of a person so committed to conduct his defense in a rational manner. This rule is unequivocally announced in People v. Willard, supra, and in Re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 P. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378. It is sufficient to say, in the light of the testimony of the attending physician, that, as the alleged insanity of defendant was not permanent or habitual, no presumption can be indulged that it had an existence two weeks prior to his commitment. People v. Keyes, 178 Cal. 794, 175 P. 6.

At the time it pronounced judgment upon the defendant the court expressed a belief that he was sane at the time the postponement was requested, and also at the time he appeared and asked for a submission of the question of his sanity to a jury, but that he yielded to the request merely out of an abundance of caution. Before judgment was pronounced the court made inquiry of the defendant for the information touching his birth, age, parentage, domestic relations, habits, avocation, and such facts as would tend to indicate the causes of his criminal character, as required by the provisions of section 1192a of the Penal Code, and the defendant's replies in furnishing said information were as apt, intelligent, and coherent as might be expected of a person of average, normal mind.

We are of the opinion that the trial court did not abuse its discretion.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

POLLAK et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR NAPA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 11560.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 3, 1925.)

1. Depositions ⚡57—Defendants residing in county of suit may be required to testify at place in another county in obedience to subpoena from superior court of latter county.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1986, subd. 3, as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 730), and sections 1989, 2021, defendants residing in county wherein action is pending may be required to testify by deposition at place in another county within 50 miles of their residence, in obedience to subpoena issued by order of judge of superior court of latter county.

2. Depositions ⚡2—Statute authorizing depositions and proceedings thereunder must be liberally construed, though in derogation of common law.

While authority to take and manner of taking depositions is controlled by statute, and such right is mere privilege in derogation of common law, such statute and proceedings thereunder must be liberally construed, to effect its objects and promote justice, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 4.

3. Constitutional law ☞70(3)—Evils resulting from statutes cannot be remedied by judiciary.

Any evils flowing from Code Civ. Proc. § 1986, subd. 3, and sections 1989, 2021, permitting party to action to compel other party to testify by deposition outside county in which he resides, though action is pending therein, if place be within 50 miles of his residence, present legislative problem, cannot be judicially remedied.

4. Depositions ☞57—Good faith of application to take depositions outside county of defendants' residence not considered on certiorari to annul order directing issuance of subpoenas.

Good faith of application to take defendants' depositions outside county in which they reside and action is pending, but within 50 miles of their residence, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1986, subd. 3, and sections 1989, 2021, cannot be considered on certiorari to annul order directing issuance of subpoena.

5. Depositions ☞57—Power of superior court judge to order issuance of subpoena to take defendants' depositions outside county of their residence not limited to cases where depositions are to be used in action pending in superior court.

Power of superior court, or judge thereof, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1986, subd. 3, to order issuance of subpoenas to take depositions of defendants outside county of their residence, though action is pending in latter county, is not limited to cases where depositions are to be used in action pending in superior court, especially as means of producing evidence in all courts are embodied in same chapters of Code (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1981–1997), except that section 919 limits territorial effect of subpoena issued by justice of the peace to any part of county.

In Bank.

Application by Ben Pollak and another, doing business as Pollak Bros., for certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court of California in and for Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge, directing issuance of subpoenas. Writ discharged, and order affirmed.

E. L. Webber, of Napa, for petitioners.

D. L. Beard and L. A. Maynard, both of Napa, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice pro tem. Petitioners seek by this proceeding in certiorari to have annulled an order made by the superior court in and for the county of Napa, directing the clerk of that court to issue a subpoena requiring petitioners, who are residents of the city and county of San Francisco, to appear as witnesses and to give their depositions before a notary public in the city of Napa, in an action brought by Keig Shoe Company, Inc., against petitioners, in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco.

It appears from the record that said Keig Shoe Company sued petitioners first in the justice's court of Napa township, Napa county, to collect an indebtedness claimed to be due. The summons in that action was quashed on motion of petitioners, but the action was not dismissed. Soon thereafter said company filed another complaint against petitioners, on the same cause of action, in the justices' court of the city and county of San Francisco, and, after obtaining service of the summons, gave notice pursuant to section 2031 of the Code of Civil Procedure that petitioners' depositions would be taken before a notary public in the city of Napa, whose office, petitioners concede, is situated less than 50 miles distant from the respective residences of petitioners. Thereupon said Keig Shoe Company applied for and obtained from Hon. Percy S. King, judge of the superior court in and for Napa county, an order made pursuant to subdivision 3 of section 1986 of the Code of Civil Procedure, directing the clerk of that court to issue subpoenas requiring the attendance of petitioners as witnesses at the time and place, and before the notary public, specified in said notice. The clerk of said court issued a subpoena accordingly, which was afterwards served upon petitioners in the city and county of San Francisco. Thereafter petitioners moved said superior court to set aside its order directing the issuance of said subpoena, but said motion was denied. This proceeding in certiorari was then instituted by petitioners for the purpose of having said order annulled.

[1] Petitioners contend that, inasmuch as they were residents of the city and county of San Francisco, wherein the action was pending, and therefore available as witnesses therein, to testify either at the trial of said action or before an officer upon taking of depositions, said superior court of Napa county was without jurisdiction to require them to appear as witnesses before a notary public in Napa county, even though the distance from their respective residences to the place where said depositions were to be taken be less than 50 miles. The question presented, therefore, is the jurisdictional one of whether or not it was within the power of said superior court of Napa county, under the circumstances hereinabove set forth, to make said order directing the issuance of said subpoenas.

That portion of subdivision 3 of said section 1986, which forms the basis for the granting of the order herein complained of, declares that a subpoena issued in accordance therewith, requiring the attendance of a witness before an officer upon the taking of a deposition, "must be issued by the clerk of the superior court of the county wherein the attendance is required upon the order of such court or of a judge thereof, which order may be made ex parte." In the case of Scott v. Shields, 8 Cal. App. 12, 96 P. 385, in dealing with an apparent conflict which arose between certain provisions of said section 1986, as a result of an amendment added thereto in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 730), it was held to be proper for a judge of a superior court, upon the request of a plaintiff, in an action pending in another county, to grant an order directing the clerk to issue a subpoena requiring a witness to attend before a notary public for the taking of the deposition of said witness to be used in said action, and that, if the witness refused to answer, it was mandatory upon said judge, under whose direction the subpoena issued, to compel said witness to answer and to complete his deposition.

The only limitation placed upon the territorial force and effect of a subpoena issued out of a court of record is found in section 1989 of said Code, which reads as follows:

"A witness is not obliged to attend as a witness before any court, judge, justice, or any other officer, out of the county in which he resides, unless the distance be less than fifty miles from his place of residence to the place of trial."

And in the case of Merrill v. Superior Court, 33 Cal. App. 55, 164 P. 340, it was expressly held that a subpoena issued by the clerk of the superior court, pursuant to the provisions of said subdivision 3 of said section 1986, as amended in 1907, had the same territorial force and effect as a subpoena issued by the clerk requiring the attendance before the court, and "may require the attendance of a witness even though he resides outside the county but within the fifty-mile limit."

Assuming, therefore, that said Keig Shoe Company, as the plaintiff in said justice's court action, has the authority to take the depositions of petitioners as the defendants in the action, in the city of Napa, it is apparent, in view of the law as interpreted in the two cases above cited, that the judge of the superior court of Napa county was authorized by said subdivision 3 of section 1986 of said Code to grant the order for said subpoena, and that the subpoena issued pursuant to said order carried sufficient territorial force and effect to require the attendance of petitioners as witnesses outside of the county in which they resided, the distance being less than 50 miles from the place of their respective residences to the place where they were required to attend.

But the instant case differs in its facts from the case of Merrill v. Superior Court, supra, in this: There it was legally impossible to obtain the attendance of the witness at the trial of the action, owing to the fact that the action was pending in the superior court of San Bernardino county and the witness resided in the county of Alameda, a distance much farther than 50 miles from the place of trial; consequently, under an order made pursuant to said subdivision 3 of section 1986 of said Code, by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, plaintiff sought to take the deposition of said witness before a notary public in the city and county of San Francisco, which was outside of the county in which the witness resided, but within a distance of 50 miles of his residence. The proceeding was sustained. In the case at bar the witnesses whose testimony is sought to be taken in Napa county reside in San Francisco, at the very place of trial, and are available therein as witnesses at any time. In view of that situation the question arises as to whether or not a party to an action, in any event, may require the attendance of a witness outside of the county in which he resides and where in the action is pending, for the purpose of giving a deposition, even though the place where such witness is required to attend be less than 50 miles from his place of residence.

[2] In regard to this latter question it may be stated generally that the authority to take depositions in all cases, and the manner in which they shall be taken, is controlled by statute. Burns v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 1, 73 P. 597. While it was formerly held that the statute granting the right to take depositions, being a mere privilege conferred by statute in derogation of the common law, must be strictly pursued, such rule is now without force in this state, by virtue of section 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which distinctly declares that the rule of the common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed has no application to the Code, and that its provisions and all proceedings under it are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice. Bolinger v. Bollinger, 153 Cal. 190, 94 P. 770.

Subdivision 1 of section 2021 of said Code, under the authority of which the depositions herein are sought to be taken provides:

"The testimony of a witness in this state may be taken by deposition in an action at any time after the service of the summons or the appearance of the defendant, and in a special proceeding after a question of fact has arisen therein, in the following cases: 1. When the witness is a party to the action or proceeding or an officer or member of a corporation which is a party to the action or proceeding, or a person for whose immediate benefit the action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended.

It will be observed that neither in the subdivision last above quoted, nor in the remainder of the Code section of which it is made a part, nor elsewhere in the law, is there any clause circumscribing the territorial limits within which, or any provision specifying the county wherein, depositions shall be taken, except those set forth in said section 1989 of said Code, which have already been adverted to. Therefore, in view of the broad language of said section 2021 of said Code, it would seem that authority is granted to take depositions in any county, irrespective of the place where the witness resides or the place wherein the action is pending, provided only the distance between the place of residence of said witness and the place where his deposition shall be taken be less than 50 miles. The witnesses in the proceeding before us reside at the immediate place of trial, and therefore are brought clearly within the 50-mile exception noted in said section 1989, and hence are obliged to attend as witnesses outside the county in which they reside.

[3] Petitioners have intimated that if no restrictions, other than those contained in said section 1989, be placed upon the scope of said section 2021, in regard to the county wherein depositions shall be taken, the provisions of the latter section will likely be abused because, as the matter now stands, a party to an action may, under the guise of taking a deposition, harass and inconvenience the other party to the action (or, for that matter, any witness whose status is alleged to come within the provisions of said section 2021) by compelling him to attend as a witness outside of the county in which he resides, even though it be the same county wherein the action is pending, provided only it be within the 50-mile limit of the residence of said witness. But, on the other hand, bearing in mind the established policy of the law permitting litigating parties the fullest opportunity to produce evidence in support of the truth of the matter at issue, it may be argued in favor of the present status of the law that it allows oral examination of a witness in a county other than in the one in which he resides, when such examination becomes necessary in connection with either public or private records or files, which cannot be produced conveniently or perhaps at all in the county in which the witness resides, but which are available within a distance of 50 miles of his residence, or, in case of territorial remoteness of residence of a witness which makes it impossible or extremely inconvenient to obtain his deposition in the county in which he resides, it permits his deposition to be taken outside of the county of his residence if the distance be within 50 miles of his residence. However that may be, if any evils do flow from the present state of the law, a legislative problem is presented, the remedy for the correction of which cannot be judicially supplied.

[4] The question of the good faith of the application herein to take the depositions also involves a matter that cannot be considered by this court in this proceeding. As already pointed out, said Keig Shoe Company, in attempting to take the depositions in Napa county, was proceeding within the scope of the statute, and it was therefore within the power of the Napa county court to grant the order for the issuance of the subpoena.

[5] Finally, it is contended by petitioners that the power granted a superior court, or the judge thereof, under said subdivision 3 of said section 1986, may be exercised only when the depositions sought to be taken are to be used in an action pending in the superior court. We find no merit in the point. The language of said subdivision sufficiently answers the contention made. It is general in its terms, contains no limitations whatever, and makes no distinction as to the nature of the actions, or as to the courts in which the depositions shall be used; furthermore, said subdivision 3 is made part of a Code section which expressly applies to the production of evidence before all courts. It will also be noted that, in dealing with the subject of production of evidence, the Code does not attempt to prescribe separate means or manner of production of evidence for courts of different or inferior jurisdictions; the matter is treated in one subject, and is embodied in the same chapters of the Code (chapters 1 and 2, title 3, part 4, Code Civ. Proc.), except that section 919 of said Code limits the territorial effect of a subpoena issued by a justice of the peace "to any part of the county," and in regard to the latter section, in view of the limitation placed therein upon the territorial effect of such a subpoena, it is plain to be seen that, if it be held that subdivision 3 of said Code section 1986, upon which the order herein is predicated, is not available for the purpose of producing evidence in actions commenced or pending in the justice's court, parties to such actions will be wholly deprived of all legal means of producing evidence which may be found beyond the territorial limits of the county in which said justice's court is situated. We are satisfied that such condition was not contemplated or intended by the law.

The writ is discharged and the order is affirmed.

ROCHA v. ROCHA et al. (L. A. 8037.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 3, 1925.)

1. Jury $\S$ 14(9)—Act held not to grant jury trial in actions wherein jury not theretofore available.

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 738, which merely enlarged class of cases in which equitable relief could be sought in actions to quiet title, did not grant right of trial by jury in actions wherein jury was not theretofore available, nor deny jury trial where right thereto formerly existed.

2. Jury $\S$ 14(6)—Action to set aside deeds on ground of fraud held of purely equitable cognizance, and jury trial properly denied.

Relative to right to jury trial, action to set aside and cancel deed on ground of fraud of grantee held not to have been brought under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 738, but was one of purely equitable cognizance; fact that defendants in answer prayed that their title be quieted as against plaintiff's asserted claim not affecting nature of action.

3. Estoppel $\S$ 70(1)—Defendant not estopped from claiming that property was not part of estate.

Husband executed declaration of homestead on community property in 1898, and died in 1908, survived by widow, who deeded property to her son, the defendant. To clear title, defendant, in 1916, filed letters of administration in father's estate. Held, that failure of defendant to assert title in probate proceedings did not estop him from claiming thereafter that property was not part of estate, notwithstanding that on death of husband title to it vested immediately in surviving widow under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1265 (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1474); proceedings in probate under section 1465 et seq. not being adverse to widow's interest, and effect thereof was, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1106, to feed title of her grantee.

4. Evidence $\S$ 230(3)—Acts and declarations of grantor in disparagement of title held inadmissible when made in absence of grantee.

Acts and declarations of grantor, made after parting with title and in disparagement thereof, are inadmissible when made in absence of grantee.

5. Evidence $\S$ 230(4)—Force of executed conveyance not impeached or impaired by declarations of grantor.

Force of an executed conveyance cannot be impeached or impaired by alleged declarations of grantor, made after execution to prove that it was in fact a mortgage; such declarations being inadmissible as defeating or impairing title of grantee.

6. Evidence $\S$ 119(1)—Questions as to grantor's mental and physical condition, if part of res gestæ, held proper as shedding light on condition of her mind.

On issue of lack of mental capacity of mother to execute deed to son, questions as to her mental and physical condition at time of such execution, if part of res gestæ, would be proper as to condition of her mind.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Supreme Court cannot substitute judgment for that of trial court on conflicting evidence.

Despite fact that there may be substantial evidence in record on which contrary findings would find support, the Supreme Court is not at liberty to substitute its judgment for that of trial court on such conflicting evidence.

8. Deeds $\S$ 196(2)—Presumption that son did not take advantage of mother in deed from latter held not to obtain, where mother had independent advice.

Where mother deeded property to son, notwithstanding confidential relationship existed between them at time of deed, presumption does not obtain that son took advantage of his mother and profited thereby, where mother had independent advice and acted not only on her own volition, but with full comprehension of her act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Antonio Rocha, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, Trinidad K. Talamantes, against Antonio Rocha and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Wilson and A. E. Hamilton, both of Los Angeles (Gerald F. H. Delmas, of counsel), for appellant.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. For many years Antonio Jose Rocha and Ventura L. de Rocha, husband and wife, were the owners as community property of 10 acres of land in the Rancho Rincon de Los Bueyes in Los Angeles county. On December 1, 1898, the husband executed a declaration of homestead on said property and caused the same to be duly recorded. He died on January 23, 1908. Surviving him were the widow, four daughters, and a son, Antonio Rocha, one of the defendants in this action. Another son, Bernardino Rocha, father of the plaintiff herein, predeceased his father. Trinidad K. Talamantes, the guardian ad litem herein, is the mother of the plaintiff and the surviving wife of Bernardino. The defendant Concepcion R. de Higuera is one of the daughters of Antonio Jose and Ventura L. de Rocha and the defendant Bernardo de Higuera is her husband. After the death of Antonio Jose Rocha, his surviving widow occupied the homestead premises in company with her son Antonio. The other children had married and established their homes elsewhere. Antonio remained single, devoted his time to the cultivation of said property and to the care of his mother. On March 3, 1910, the mother conveyed said property by grant deed to her son Antonio. The consideration therein recited was love and affection, support and maintenance given by the grantee to the grantor for many years past, and other good and valuable considerations. Antonio had expended money in the care and development of said property, and had advanced about $800 on account of funeral expenses incident to the death of members of his mother's family, which expenses he was in no wise legally bound to pay. At the time of the execution of said deed, the reasonable market value of the property was about $200 an acre. Within a year after its execution, Antonio expended approximately $1,600 in the further development of the property. He also paid the taxes levied on said property from the time he received said deed.

About the middle of June, 1916, the defendant Rocha desired to obtain a loan on said property, but discovered that the title was not clear, for the reason that no proceedings had been taken to show of record that the title to said homestead had vested in his mother as the surviving spouse. He consulted an attorney, who advised him of the proper procedure to clear the title. To that end, and under the guidance and direction of his attorney, under date of July 5, 1916, he filed a petition for letters of administration in the matter of the estate of his father. In this petition he set forth the next of kin and heirs at law of the decedent, including the plaintiff in this action. Letters of administration were duly granted, and on August 30, 1916, defendant Rocha filed an inventory and appraisal wherein he alleged that the estate of said decedent consisted wholly of the said real property and was of the value of $1,750. Proceedings were thereafter duly taken by the defendant Rocha to have the recorded homestead set apart, and the same was on September 18, 1916, set apart by the court to the surviving widow. On the next day she executed a second grant deed to the defendant Rocha, conveying to him the same property. Said defendant then obtained a bank loan. The promissory note and mortgage securing the same were thereafter purchased from the bank by the defendants de Higuera at a time when the bank was insisting upon payment of the indebtedness.

Ventura L. de Rocha died on November 27, 1917. On June 2, 1922, plaintiff, then 19 years of age, brought this action as an heir at law of the deceased. The complaint is in two counts. In the first count it is alleged that, at the time of the death of her husband, Ventura L. de Rocha was of advanced years and could neither read, write, nor understand the English language; that she began to decline in bodily health and to wane in mental vigor, and had become afflicted with a cancerous growth on her left ankle; that by the year 1910 she was infirm in body and feeble in mind, and was confined to her bed a greater portion of the time; that she was unable to care for herself or transact business of any nature; that during that period she reposed great trust and confidence in her son Antonio, and intrusted to him the entire care and management of her property; that "the defendant Antonio Rocha, well knowing the feeble condition of the said Ventura L. de Rocha, both as to body and mind, and of her dependence upon him, both for bodily care and for the management of her business affairs, and with intent to willfully deceive, mislead, and defraud her, did present a document to the said Ventura L. de Rocha for her signature, representing to her that the said document was security for money loaned and advanced to her by him, the said Antonio Rocha, in the past and to secure future advances to be made by him for her support and for the maintenance of her said property; that the document was in effect a mortgage, and that upon her death the said * * * property would pass to her children, charged only with the amounts so advanced; that, relying upon the statements made and the representations as aforesaid, and without reading or having the said instrument read to her, and being at the said time sick and bedridden and feeble in mind and body, and placing the highest confidence in the love, affection, and integrity of her son, the said defendant herein, and believing the said document to be security for money advanced and to be advanced, the said Ventura L. de Rocha did on or about the 3d day of March, 1910, execute the said document by placing her mark thereupon"; that the statements made by the said defendant to his mother respecting the character and purport of said document were false, were known by the said defendant to be false, and were willfully made by him to her for the purpose of acquiring said property from her in fee, and with intent thereby to deceive his mother; and that she was deceived thereby. The plaintiff prayed that the said deed be set aside and canceled; that the property be declared to be the estate of Ventura L. de Rocha, deceased, and subject to administration as such; that all claims of any and all of the defendants adverse to the interests of said estate and the heirs at law thereof be declared to be invalid; that the said deed be produced in court for cancellation and for costs. The second count alleges similar fraud; also deceit, misrepresentation, and undue influence as to the deed executed by Ventura L. de Rocha on September 19, 1916, and as to said deed the same relief is sought. It is further alleged that the defendants de Higuera acquired their mortgage interest in said premises with full knowledge of said alleged fraud, deceit, and undue influence, and that such interest is subject to any and all equities thereby created. The defendants denied the alleged fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, and undue influence, denied that the said deeds were executed for security only, and prayed that their title be quieted as against the plaintiff. From a judgment in favor of the defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

[1] Preliminarily the plaintiff demanded a trial by jury. The application was denied, and this is the first point urged for reversal. The plaintiff seeks to bring himself within the rule laid down in Donahue v. Meister, 88 Cal. 121, 25 P. 1096, 22 Am. St. Rep. 283. That was an action under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The complaint was in the usual form to quiet title to a certain quartz mining claim, and contained the averment of possession on the part of the plaintiff. The answer alleged the defendant's right of possession to a portion of the claim and lawful possession thereof until unlawful dispossession and ouster by plaintiff. The defendant prayed that he be restored to his possession of the portion of the claim in controversy. The defendant demanded a jury trial "on the issues raised by defendant's said averments of prior possession and ouster." Trial by jury was denied by the trial court on the ground that the case was a proceeding in equity. It was held on appeal that the issues raised by the answer were triable at law at the time the present Constitution was adopted, that either party had the right to have such issues tried by a jury, and that the enactment of section 738 did not and could not deprive a litigant of such right. In speaking of the effect of that section, the court said:

"The Code confers equitable rights so far as it grants the power to maintain the action at all, and the decree is in form equitable, but if it has to deal with ordinary common-law rights clearly cognizable in courts of law, it is to that extent an action at law."

The court was at pains to limit the scope of the decision to the particular facts presented, saying:

"It is decided here only that, where the answer shows that the defendant was rightfully in possession, and was ousted by plaintiff and wrongfully kept out of possession, upon the trial of those issues the defendant is entitled to a jury trial." Donahue v. Meister, supra, 129 (25 P. 1098).

[2] The plaintiff seems to take the position that in all actions under said section 738 a trial by jury is available to either party as a matter of right, and that the present action is of such a character. The position is untenable: First, because section 738 merely enlarged the class of cases in which equitable relief could be sought in actions to quiet title. Castro v. Barry, 79 Cal. 443, 446, 21 P. 946; Crocker v. Carpenter, 98 Cal. 418, 33 P. 271. That section did not purport to grant the right of trial by jury in actions wherein a jury was not theretofore available, nor did it purport to deny a jury trial where a right to a jury formerly existed. The amendment of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 72) made this plain when it provided that—

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive a party of the right to a jury trial in any case where, by the law, such right is now given."

And, secondly, the plaintiff's position cannot be maintained for the reason that the present action is not one brought under said section 738. It is an action to set aside and cancel written instruments on the ground of fraud, an action of purely equitable cognizance. Mesenburg v. Dunn, 125 Cal. 222, 57 P. 887; 2 Cal. Jur. 758. No issues at law were raised either by the complaint or by the answer. The fact that the defendants in their answer prayed that their title be quieted as against any claim asserted by the plaintiff does not affect the nature of the action as one in equity. In fact, it calls for equitable relief. Nor is the character of the action changed by reason of the fact that the Higuerras, husband and wife, are parties defendant. It is alleged that they claim an interest as mortgagees in the property described in said deeds, and that their interest was acquired with full knowledge of the alleged fraud of the defendant Rocha, and it is prayed that whatever claims they have adverse to the alleged rights of the plaintiff be declared to be of no force or effect. The relief sought against them is likewise equitable in its nature.

The case of De Arellanes v. Arellanes, 151 Cal. 443, 90 P. 1059, is peculiarly in point in support of the defendants' position both as to the facts and as to the law. There the plaintiff and appellant was a woman of advanced years who could neither read, write, nor understand the English language. She had four married daughters and two grown sons, one being the defendant in said action. The defendant was the only child who remained with his parents on the ranch property involved in said action. The plaintiff reposed implicit trust and confidence in the defendant, and had even given him a general power of attorney. The plaintiff executed a grant deed in his favor for the expressed consideration of $1, and covering about 2,000 acres of land. Before the execution of the deed, the defendant had managed the plaintiff's properties for many years. Plaintiff brought an action to set aside the deed on the ground of alleged fraudulent representations on the part of defendant in procuring her signature to said deed and for an accounting. The defendant denied the allegations of fraud. This issue was submitted to a jury which found in favor of the plaintiff. Disregarding the findings of the jury, the trial court made its own findings in favor of the defendant and entered judgment accordingly. On appeal by the plaintiff, it was contended that the trial court was bound by the findings of the jury, but this court said:

"In actions of this character a party is not entitled to a jury as a matter of right, and if a jury be called in it simply acts in an advisory capacity; the court being compelled to make findings of its own, and in so doing it is free to adopt or reject the findings of the jury as it deems proper. In determining whether the findings of the trial court are sustained by the evidence, it is immaterial that such findings are contrary to the findings of the jury."

In that action, as in this, the crucial point was whether the plaintiff was entitled to a jury as a matter of right. If, in an action to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud and for an accounting, issues were presented purely of equitable cognizance, and the court was not bound by the findings of the jury, it would necessarily follow that the court could properly deny to the plaintiff a trial by jury in the first instance. The present action was to set aside deeds on the ground of fraud and the surrender of the same for cancellation. The pleadings present issues solely for the determination of the chancellor. See 15 Cal. Jur. 333, and cases cited. The jury trial was therefore properly denied.

[3] When the defendant Rocha, on July 5, 1916, filed his petition for letters of administration in the matter of the estate of his father for the purpose of clearing the title, he alleged therein that the decedent left estate in Los Angeles county consisting solely of the real property involved herein, and in the inventory and appraisal filed by him he described said property as constituting the estate of the deceased. It is contended by the plaintiff that the exclusive remedy of defendant Rocha was to assert his title in the probate proceeding, and, failing to do so, he is now estopped from claiming that the said property was not a part of said estate. It is also claimed that, as it has been held that a court record imports absolute verity, the defendant Rocha will not now be permitted to assert that the allegations contained in his petition for letters of administration and in his inventory and appraisal did not truly state the facts. The purpose of the probate proceeding was to clear the title so that a mortgage loan might be obtained on the property. This could only be done by showing of record that the homestead was vested in the surviving spouse. It was undoubtedly true that upon the death of her husband in 1908, the title of the homestead vested as a matter of law immediately in the surviving widow under sections 1265 of the Civil Code and 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but as a practical matter the title of record still remained in the deceased husband, and it was necessary to employ the means provided by law to cause the record to conform to the fact; otherwise the title could not be certified as clear for the protection or satisfaction of the proposed mortgagee. As the law stood at the time the said probate proceedings were initiated, a proceeding under section 1723 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the homestead set aside to the surviving spouse, may have been rightly considered somewhat uncertain in its effect on all parties interested. See Hansen v. Union Savings Bank, 148 Cal. 157, 82 P. 768; King v. Pauly, 159 Cal. 549, 115 P. 210, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1244. The safe course was therefore selected; namely, to have the estate of the deceased husband of record administered upon, and during the course of the administration to have said homestead set apart to the surviving spouse under sections 1465 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. The proceedings in probate were in nowise adverse to the interest of the surviving widow. They were really in her favor, and the effect thereof was to feed the title of her grantee. Civ. Code, § 1106; Cecil v. Gray, 170 Cal. 137, 148 P. 935; 9 Cal. Jur. 275. The execution of the second grant deed in 1916 added nothing to the title which had theretofore passed, but appears to have been executed as a matter of precaution. Clearly the elements of estoppel were not present in the conduct of the defendant Rocha. He asserted his right to the property from the time he received the deed in 1910. He paid the taxes and cultivated or leased the property from that time on. The making of that deed was a matter of family knowledge and comment from a time shortly after its execution. There was no concealment on the part of said defendant, and the heirs of the widow were not prejudiced by the allegations referred to. He was therefore not estopped thereby. Dean v. Parker, 88 Cal. 283, 26 P. 91; Bollinger v. Wright, 143 Cal. 292, 297, 76 P. 1108.

[4] The plaintiff takes exception to numerous rulings on the admission and exclusion of evidence during the course of the trial. These objections fall within rather well-defined groups. The first group has to do with evidence wherein the plaintiff sought to prove certain declarations of the grantor, made after she executed the deed of 1910, and in disparagement of it, and not made in the presence of defendant Rocha.

[5] The ruling of the court in excluding such evidence was in conformity with the well-settled rule of law that the acts and declarations of a grantor, made after he has parted with title to property and in disparagement of it, are inadmissible when made in the absence of the grantee. There are of course exceptions to that rule. The plaintiff undertakes to bring himself within the exceptions approved in Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703, where the issue was whether delivery of the deed had actually taken place with the intention to pass title, and it was held that the declarations of Williams, the grantor, made during the time the defendant Kidd was the depository of the deed, were admissible as bearing on the issue of delivery. But here no question of delivery was involved. The real question was whether the document signed and delivered on March 3, 1910, was a deed or a mortgage. It was in form a grant deed, and plaintiff sought, by offering the declarations of the grantor, made after its execution, to prove that it was in fact a mortgage. The force of an executed conveyance cannot be impeached or impaired by such declarations. Bias v. Reed, 169 Cal. 33, 145 P. 516; Marple v. Jackson, 184 Cal. 411, 193 P. 940.

The plaintiff cites Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, and relies on certain language found on page 418, 78 P. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61, but that case is not authority for plaintiff's position. The plaintiff in that action was contending that a deed to the defendant Mary E. Pleasant, absolute in form, was in effect a mortgage. The defendant Solomon was a grantee of the defendant Pleasant, and it was held that the trial court did not err in admitting in evidence the declarations of the grantor Pleasant, made to the plaintiff at the time of, and subsequent to, the execution of the deed. A cursory reading of that decision might indicate that its general language would be authority for plaintiff's position, but an examination of the record discloses that the declarations there received in evidence were not in disparagement but in support of Solomon's title. They were therefore in the nature of declarations against interest and clearly admissible. In the present case the declarations of the grantor, sought to be proved, would have tended to defeat or impair the title of her grantee, and were properly excluded. Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 165 P. 432.

[6] The next group of exceptions refers to rulings of the trial court, striking out answers or portions of answers of certain witnesses as not responsive to the questions propounded and sustaining objections to certain questions which called for the opinion or conclusion of witnesses. These objections are numerous, and separate consideration of them would unduly prolong this discussion. Each has been considered in the light of the record. The answers stricken out were clearly irresponsible and were properly stricken. The questions to which objections were sustained, on the ground that they called for the opinion or conclusion of witnesses, had to do generally with matters affecting the mental status of Ventura L. de Rocha before and after the deed of March 3, 1910, was executed. On an issue of lack of mental capacity to execute the deed, questions as to her mental and physical condition at the time of such execution, if part of the res gestæ, would be proper as tending to throw light on the condition of her mind. Estate of Snowball, 157

Cal. 301, 107 P. 598; Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 117 P. 539; Estate of Anderson, 185 Cal. 700, 198 P. 407. It is not contended herein that the deceased was totally lacking in mental capacity to execute said deed, but it is insisted that, because of her advanced years and physical debility, she was the more likely to yield to the influence of her son and be subject to the alleged fraudulent conduct on his part. It may be assumed that on that theory her mental and physical condition at the time of the execution of the deed was a matter of proper investigation and disclosure (Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 450, 466, 117 P. 532), but an inspection of the record shows that the court did not foreclose the plaintiff from legitimate examination on that subject.

[7] The trial court made findings on all the issues presented by the pleadings. The plaintiff specifies some twelve or more instances wherein it is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to support them. The plaintiff concedes the rule that this court can only set aside findings of a trial judge where it appears there is no substantial evidence to support them, and that the credit to be given a witness is solely a question for the trial court, except where, in the light of undisputed facts, the testimony is so inherently improbable or incapable of belief as to constitute no evidence at all. With this rule in mind, the record has been examined with the view of determining whether the findings complained of are supported. Without discussing them in detail, it may be said that all of the findings mentioned are supported, either by undisputed evidence, or by substantial evidence, where a conflict appears. True, as is often the case, there is substantial evidence in the record upon which contrary findings would find support, but we are not at liberty to substitute our judgment for that of the trial court on such conflicting evidence.

[8] It is insisted that the evidence shows without conflict that a confidential relationship existed between defendant Rocha and his mother at the time of the execution of said deeds, and that therefore it will be presumed that the son took advantage of his mother and is now seeking to profit thereby. It is conceded by the plaintiff that this presumption does not obtain where it appears that a person alleged to have been overreached had independent advice and acted, not only of his own volition, but with full comprehension of the results of his acts. Prior to the execution of the deed of March 3, 1910, the grantor consulted with an old-time family friend, who was the godfather of the defendant Rocha. His advice was sought by the deceased as to the best course to pursue to reimburse the defendant Rocha for moneys expended and for assistance and support past and future. This friend of the family was the agent of neither party, and tendered his advice freely, and it was after consultation with him on numerous occasions, and pursuant to suggestions made by him, that the deed was executed. He was a witness at the trial. He testified that the purpose of the deed was for security only, but in this he was contradicted by other witnesses. The record sufficiently shows that the deceased grantor had independent advice and acted with full comprehension of the effect of her action.

No other points require consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

LEE v. SILVA et al. (S. F. 10849.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 30, 1925.)

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 565—Purchaser under contract entitled to notice of foreclosure of street assessment lien as it is not "action in rem."

Purchaser of lot under contract is not bound by judgment foreclosing street assessment lien without having been given notice thereof, notwithstanding St. 1911, pp. 746, 766, §§ 27, 79, such proceeding not being an "action in rem" which proceeds only against property seized and sought to be held for satisfaction of asserted charge against property without regard to title of individual claimants.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, In rem.]

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 558—Foreclosure street assessment lien "action quasi in rem."

Under St. 1911, p. 746, § 27, foreclosure of street assessment lien is an "action quasi in rem," since, while it subjects property to satisfaction of lien, it also requires that owner of property be made party that he may appear and protect his interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series. Quasi in Rem.]

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 558—Change in statute controlling street assessment liens held not to have changed action from one quasi in rem to proceeding strictly in rem.

St. 1911, pp. 746, 766, §§ 27, 79, changing St. 1862, p. 391, § 17, covering and controlling street assessment liens, held not to have transformed action foreclosing street assessment lien from one quasi in rem to proceeding strictly in rem, nor permit judgment in action to function as foreclosure of rights of persons not joined or appearing as defendants, who may have had an interest in property subjected to lien.

4. Constitutional law $\S$ 290(3)—Unless notice of foreclosure in street assessment lien is given owner of property, judgment for its sale would deprive him of his property without due process of law.

Unless notice of proceeding to foreclose street assessment lien is given to owner of res, and opportunity afforded him to defend, judgment for its sale would have effect to deprive him of his property without due process of law.

5. Lis pendens $\S$ 1—Purpose of lis pendens is to notify all persons of pendency of an action.

Purpose of lis pendens is merely to furnish means of notifying all persons of pendency of an action, and thereby to bind any person who may acquire an interest in property subsequent to institution of action by any judgment which may be secured in action affecting property.

6. Lis pendens $\S$ 25(5)—Purchaser under executory contract of purchase made before institution of action not affected by subsequent lis pendens.

Purchaser under executory contract of purchase made before institution of action affecting land is prior purchaser, whose rights therein are not subject to subsequent lis pendens, even though payment of purchase price was not completed.

7. Trusts $\S$ 257—Cestui que trust is necessary party in actions by stranger to trust affecting subject-matter of trust.

Cestui que trust in action by or against the trustee, or by stranger against trust, affecting subject-matter of trust, as distinguished from actions instituted in opposition to trust for purpose of declaring trust nullity, is necessary party.

8. Judgment $\S$ 660½—Holder of contract for purchase of real property is not bound by judgment foreclosing street assessment lien, where notice was not served on him.

In action to quiet title by successor to contract of purchase, whose predecessor had not been given notice of foreclosure of street assessment lien, held, that predecessor, not having been given notice, was not bound by judgment foreclosure, and successor, standing in shoes of predecessor in interest, could not be bound by such judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Dudley Kinsell, Judge.

Action by Nancy E. Lee against Jack M. Silva and wife, R. D. Beals, Anson S. Bilger, and the Oakland Paving Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants, except Silva and wife, appeal. Affirmed.

Johnson & Shaw, of Oakland, for appellants.

P. A. Fontaine, of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This action was instituted by the plaintiff to quiet her title to a certain lot of land, situate in the city of Oakland, of which she claimed to be the owner in fee, and which the appealing defendants claim under a sheriff's deed, made pursuant to a judgment foreclosing a lien of a street assessment levied upon the property. Appellants, answering the plaintiff's complaint, denied plaintiff's ownership, and affirmatively alleged that defendants Jack M. Silva and Ellen J. Silva, his wife, were the owners of the land, and that defendants R. D. Beals and Anson S. Bilger were the owners and holders of a deed of trust covering said land which secured the payment of certain indebtedness of said Silva and his wife to defendant Oakland Paving Company. The facts of the case are conceded to be these:

On August 11, 1908, while the legal title to the land in controversy was vested in Mrs. M. A. Cornelius, she entered into a conditional contract of sale and purchase with G. H. and C. F. Lee whereby she agreed to convey to them the land in suit for a specified purchase price, which was to be paid in stipulated monthly installments. This contract was recorded on November 20, 1911. Subsequent thereto, on May 1, 1912, proceedings were duly instituted under the Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730), for the improvement of the street fronting on the land in suit. The said land was assessed in the sum of $21.52 for the making of said improvements. On October 3, 1914, Mrs. M. A. Cornelius died testate, and one A. W. Cornelius was duly appointed executor of her last will and testament. Subsequently, on April 15, 1915, the Oakland Paving Company commenced an action to foreclose its lien for said street assessment, but did not join either G. H. or C. F. Lee therein, nor did they appear in the action. At the time said foreclosure action was commenced, notice of the pendency thereof was duly recorded. Thereafter C. F. Lee assigned all his interest in the contract for the sale of said land to said G. H. Lee, and this contract was duly recorded October 21, 1915. A. W. Cornelius, as executor, on July 1, 1916, conveyed said land to said G. H. Lee by a deed executed and delivered by virtue of and pursuant to the terms of the pre-existing conditional contract of sale. This deed was recorded July 3, 1916. In March, 1917, said G. H. Lee conveyed to the plaintiff herein, Nancy E. Lee, said land. Subsequent to this conveyance, but before the recordation thereof, judgment was entered in the foreclosure suit in favor of the paving company and against the defendants named in that action. Pursuant to said judgment the sheriff conveyed said land to the paving company by deed dated August 29, 1919. Thereafter the paving company conveyed the land to the Silvas, who executed their deed of trust, covering the property in suit, as security for their promissory note to said company for a loan of $2,000, which debt remains unpaid. The paving company and the trustees under this deed of trust, R. D. Beals and Anson S. Bilger, are the appellants herein.

Upon the foregoing facts the trial court entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, quieting her title to the land against all of the defendants to the action.

In support of the appeal the principal point urged by the appellants is that the action foreclosing the assessment lien was a proceeding in rem, and that, since the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911, §§ 27 and 29 (Stats. 1911, pp. 746 and 766), require only the legal owner to be made a party to the foreclosure action, the rights and interests of all other persons in the property were necessarily adjudicated and concluded by the judgment in that proceeding, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's predecessor in interest, G. H. Lee, even though he was not joined in the action and did not appear therein, was bound by the judgment, and that the plaintiff is in no better position than he is. Respondent, on the other hand, in support of the judgment, contends that the action to foreclose the street assessment lien was not strictly a proceeding in rem, and that, therefore, her predecessor in interest was, in order to be bound by the judgment, a necessary party to the foreclosure action, which gave birth to the sheriff's deed, under which appellants claim title to the lot in suit, and, not having been made a party to the action, and not appearing therein, was not bound by the judgment.

[1, 2] The latter contention, we think, must be sustained. It has been the rule of law in this state, firmly fixed by a series of decisions, that a proceeding to foreclose a street assessment lien is not strictly a proceeding in rem. Strictly speaking, an action in rem proceeds only against property seized and sought to be held for the satisfaction of an asserted charge against property without regard to the title of individual claimants to the property. Jurisdiction to thus deal with the property is acquired, in the first instance, by the seizure of the property and of the subsequent proceedings for the satisfaction of the asserted claim against the property by a general notice to all the world of the fact of seizure and the pendency of the action, which notice suffices to make the claimants to the property parties to the action with the result that the judgment, when rendered, will comprehend all persons, and conclude as well, the status of the property upon which the judgment operates. Bartero v. Real Estate Savings Bank, 10 Mo. App. 76; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 7 S. Ct. 165, 30 L. Ed. 372; Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 19; Waple's Proceedings in Rem, p. 328. There are, however, proceedings in law, which, while substantially proceedings in rem, to the extent that they seek to subject particular property to the satisfaction of an asserted claim, nevertheless, assume some of the characteristics of an action in personam, and are, therefore, properly classed as actions quasi in rem. Freeman v. Alderson, supra; Galpin v. Page, 3 Sawy. 93, 124, Fed. Cas. No. 5,206; Gassert v. Strong, 38 Mont. 18, 98 P. 497; Kelso v. Blackburn, 3 Leigh (Va.) 299.

A perusal of the statute, pursuant to the provisions of which the foreclosure suit in controversy in the present action was instituted (Stats. 1911, p. 746, § 27), indicates, we think, that such action falls within the category of actions quasi in rem. Clearly, by the very terms of the statute immediately under consideration, the action, while subjecting the property to the satisfaction of a street assessment lien, is a mixed one because it also carries the characteristics of an action in personam, to the extent that the owner of the property is required to be made a party to the end that he may appear and protect his interest in the property (5 McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, p. 4535, § 2131; Wood v. Brady, 68 Cal. 78, 5 P. 623, 8 P. 599; Wood v. Curran, 99 Cal. 137, 33 P. 774; Page v. W. W. Chase Co., 145 Cal. 578, 79 P. 278; Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 241; Holt Mfg. Co. v. Collins, 154 Cal. 273, 97 P. 516; 1 Corp. Jur. 929).

[3, 4] It may, perhaps, be conceded that one of the earlier statutes of this state (Stats. 1862, p. 391, § 17), covering and controlling street assessment liens, required the foreclosure action to be instituted against the owner of the property, and made him personally liable for the assessment, and that the later statutes dealing with the same subject-matter do not provide for the personal liability of the owner. It does not follow, however, that by the change, if any, in the statutes the action to foreclose a street assessment lien was transformed from one quasi in rem to a proceeding strictly in rem. Nor did such change in the statute operate to permit the judgment in the action to function as a foreclosure of the rights of persons not joined or appearing as defendants in the action who may have had an interest in the property subjected to the lien. The case of Phelan v. Dunne, 72 Cal. 229, 13 P. 662, does not, as appellants assert, so hold. The only question decided in that case was to the effect that only the heirs and devisees, and not the personal representatives of a deceased owner of property, subjected to the lien of a street assessment, are necessary parties to the foreclosure action. And the court expressly refrained from deciding the question of whether or not persons, other than the heirs or devisees of the deceased owner, having an interest in the property, were proper parties, whose rights under the provisions of the statute of 1872 (Stats. 1871-72, p. 816, § 13), declaring who may sue and be sued, might be foreclosed of their interest in the property without joining them as defendants in the action. The act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 746, § 27), under which the foreclosure action in question here was instituted, provides, as did the act of 1872, that "the contractor or his assignee may sue, in his own name, the owner of the land, lots, or portions of lots, assessed, * * *" and section 79 of the act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 766) defines, as did the act of 1872, the "owner," for the purposes of the act, to be "the person owning the fee, or the person in whom, on the day the action is commenced, appears the legal title to the lots and lands, by deeds duly recorded. * * *" The act of 1911, in so far as concerns its provisions relating to who may sue and be sued, and the definition of owner therein, is but a composite reiteration and reenactment of the earlier improvement acts, and this court, in construing identical provisions found in the act of 1872, held, in Wood v. Curran, supra, upon the authority of Wood v. Brady, supra, that the action therein provided for the foreclosure of a street assessment lien was "not strictly a proceeding in rem." The precise phraseology in the act of 1872 designating the persons who may sue and be sued found its way into the Vrooman Act (Stats. 1885, p. 157, § 12), and this court necessarily considering the purport of that provision, held, in effect, in Page v. W. W. Chase Co., 145 Cal. 578, 79 P. 278, that the foreclosure of a street assessment lien was not strictly a proceeding in rem. It would seem, therefore, that an action to foreclose a street assessment lien, pursuant to the provisions of the statute of 1911, is to-day just what it always has been held by this court to be, under the earlier and similar statutes, an action quasi in rem, and "not a proceeding wherein a judgment for the sale of the property will bind the entire world, or affect the interest therein of any owner except those who are made parties defendant in the action. There can be no proceeding in rem except it be authorized by statute, and in such a proceeding the res which is to be affected thereby is the defendant, and must be brought before the court either by seizure or by publication of notice. Unless notice of the proceeding is in some form given to the owner of the res and an opportunity afforded him to defend the same, a judgment for its sale would have the effect to deprive him of his property without due process of law." Page v. W. W. Chase Co., supra; Wood v. Curran, supra; Wood v. Brady, supra.

The rule thus enunciated was not abrogated by the later cases of Woodill, etc., v. Young, 180 Cal. 667, 182 P. 422, 5 A. L. R. 1296, and Barber Asphalt Co. v. Armstrong, 48 Cal. App. 70, 191 P. 954. These two cases do not refer to the earlier cases, which, either expressly or in effect, declare the foreclosure of a street assessment lien to be a proceeding quasi in rem, and it cannot be correctly concluded that the earlier cases were, even by implication, overruled by anything decided or declared in the two last cases referred to. The court was not called upon in the Woodill Case to determine whether or not the rights of persons not made parties to the action, and not appearing therein, were bound by the judgment. The only question involved and decided in that case was that of the asserted priority of two conflicting street assessment liens. The precise question decided was that the relative priority of conflicting street assessment liens must be determined by the reverse order of their creation; that is to say, the lien last imposed in point of time is paramount to all such other like liens. In arriving at its conclusion the court declared, in effect, that street assessment liens were akin to those created by the imposition of general taxes to the extent that, in both instances, the taxing power operated, not upon any specific interest in the land, but upon the land itself, that is, the res, and therefore, aside from any express requirement of the statute to that effect, the tax last levied and imposed as a lien upon the property "is superior and paramount to the lien of all other taxes, claims, or titles." The paramountcy of the lien last imposed is made so, apparently, to effectuate a public purpose of promoting public improvements, which might otherwise be impeded, if not altogether thwarted, by the delay ordinarily incidental to the satisfaction of prior liens. While the Woodill Case does declare in terms that the foreclosure of a street assessment lien is a proceeding in rem, nevertheless, that declaration, when considered in connection with the only question decided by the court and in the light of the earlier decisions, which were not referred to, obviously because a discussion of them was not necessary to a decision of the case then in hand, must be taken to mean no more than that, inasmuch as the measure of satisfaction of the lien is limited to the value of the property involved in the suit, the proceeding is quasi in rem, or, as was said by Mr. Justice Harrison in Page v. W. W. Chase Co., supra:

"An action for the foreclosure of the lien of a street assessment is not a proceeding in rem, * * * except in the sense that the amount of the lien can be collected only out of the amount of the property involved in the action."

So considered, there is nothing in the Woodill Case which in any wise conflicts with the rule enunciated in the earlier decisions; nor does the case of Barber Asphalt Co. v. Armstrong, supra, express a contrary view, for it is founded practically upon the authority of the Woodill Case, and its reasoning and result must be limited to the question there decided which was precisely the question presented in the Woodill Case.

[5, 6] It is argued that the plaintiff's predecessor in interest was a purchaser pendente lite because the executor of the last will and testament of Mrs. Martha A. Cornelius did not execute a conveyance of the property in suit to him in keeping with the consummation of contract of purchase and sale until long after the filing of the lis pendens in the action for the foreclosure of the street assessment lien; and that therefore plaintiff's predecessor in interest was bound by the judgment in the foreclosure action, and the plaintiff, standing in his shoes, is likewise bound by that judgment. The purpose of a lis pendens is merely to furnish a means of notifying all persons of the pendency of an action, and thereby to bind any person who may acquire an interest in property, subsequent to the institution of the action, by any judgment which may be secured in the action affecting the property. It is the rule, generally, that a person having acquired a contractual interest in land, even though the contract be executory in its nature, prior to the institution of an action affecting the land, must be made a party to the action, and, if not so made, a party will retain the right to clothe his equity with the legal title as if no action had been instituted, and this is so even though such person does not complete the payment of the purchase price of the land nor receive a conveyance of the legal title thereto until after the institution and during the pendency of the action. The effect of this rule is that the purchaser under an executory contract of purchase and sale made before the institution of an action affecting the land is a prior purchaser, whose rights therein are not subjected to a subsequent lis pendens. Trimble v. Boothby, 14 Ohio, 109, 45 Am. Dec. 526; Dodge v. Clark (C. C. A.) 268 F. 784; 25 Cyc. 1482; 17 Ruling Case Law, p. 1028. The contract by which plaintiff's predecessor in interest purchased the property in suit from Martha E. Cornelius, the former owner, was entered and recorded in the recorder's office of the county of Alameda, where the foreclosure action was instituted, more than four years prior to the institution of that action and the filing of the lis pendens therein. Accordingly the whole world had notice that by the contract of purchase plaintiff's predecessor in interest had acquired, conditionally, the property in suit.

[7] It is contended that at the time the action for the foreclosure of the street assessment lien was instituted there existed, by virtue of the conditional contract of purchase and sale, the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust between the holder of the legal title, who was made a party defendant in the action, and plaintiff's predecessor in interest, and that as a consequence the latter was bound by the judgment against the trustee, even though he was not joined and did not appear as a defendant in the action and had no notice of the pendency thereof save by the filing of the lis pendens. Conceding the existence, under the facts of the instant case, of the trust relationship contended for, nevertheless, the cestui que trust, or beneficiary, under the well-established rule in actions by or against the trustee or by a stranger to the trust affecting the subject-matter of the trust, as distinguished from actions instituted in opposition to the trust for the purpose of declaring the trust a nullity, is a necessary party. Day v. Wetherby, 29 Wis. 363; Beckwith v. Laing, 66 W. Va. 246, 66 S. E. 354; 2 Perry on Trusts, p. 1430, § 873; 2 Beach on Trusts, pp. 1728-1730, §§ 754, 755; 1 Freeman on Judgments, p. 1075, § 500; Pomeroy, Code Rem. (4th Ed.) p. 348, § 253.

The cases and authorities cited by appellants in support of the proposition that a judgment against a trustee is binding upon the cestui que trust have no application to the facts of the instant case, and deal only with the exception to the general rule, which has application to actions instituted to destroy the trust or to those cases where the trustee is empowered, either expressly or impliedly, to represent his beneficiaries in all things relating to their common interest in the trust property.

The case of Archbishop v. Shipman, 79 Cal. 288, 21 P. 830, so strongly relied upon to support appellants' contention in this behalf, was an action to enjoin the enforcement of a decree for the sale of certain real estate for the satisfaction of a street assessment. An injunction was sought upon the ground that plaintiff, in his capacity as a corporation sole, was the owner of the property at the time of the institution of the action for the foreclosure of the assessment lien, and, not having been made a party in his corporate capacity in that action, the judgment therein as against him was void. The court expressly declared that the only question necessary to a decision of the case was whether or not the finding of the trial court that the plaintiff was the owner of the assessed property at the time of the institution of the action in foreclosure and the rendition of the judgment therein was sustained by the evidence. The conclusion ultimately reached was that the evidence was wholly insufficient to sustain the finding of corporate ownership, and, incidentally, that no showing was made in keeping with the allegations of the complaint of any equitable ground "for restraining the enforcement of the judgment against the parties against whom it had been rendered" (Page v. W. W. Chase Co., supra), and for that reason the case was reversed. This conclusion was reached notwithstanding the conceded facts of the case that as a matter of record J. S. Alemany was the owner of the legal title to the property, and that it appeared from the parol testimony in the case that he held the legal title as a trustee for the use and benefit of the Roman Catholic Church. The court declared:

"That these facts alone would not entitle the plaintiff to enjoin the sale, but it must show that it had, subsequent to the deed, [which conveyed the property to said Alemany individually and not as Archbishop], become the owner of the legal title to the property, and that the appellants had notice of the fact at the time of the proceeding to enforce the street assessment."

Thus it would seem that the court's discussion of the case which led up to the only question presented and decided in the case may be said to sustain plaintiff's contention, to the effect that the cestui que trust is not bound by a judgment against his trustee in an action affecting the trust property, where, as in the instant case, the interest of the cestui que trust is made known to the party instituting the action against the trust property.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GRAVES. (Cr. 1247.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 22, 1925. Rehearing Denied Oct. 15, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1925.)

1. Municipal corporations ☞707—Act requiring automobile driver to stop after collision inapplicable to one ignorant of collision.

Provisions of Motor Vehicle Act, § 141, requiring driver of automobile striking person to stop, render assistance, etc., do not apply to one ignorant of fact that automobile had struck another person.

2. Criminal law ☞1172(1)—Instruction as to duty of driver of automobile striking person held not injurious to defendant, though susceptible of construction as applying to driver without knowledge of having struck person.

Instruction that it is duty of driver of automobile striking person to stop, render assistance, etc., "in all cases," held not injurious to one charged with violation of Motor Vehicle Act, § 141, requiring such acts, even if susceptible of construction as applying to driver who had no knowledge of having struck person.

3. Municipal corporations ☞707—Bottle of wine thrown from automobile held admissible in trial for failure to stop after collision.

In trial for failure to stop, render assistance, etc., after striking person with automobile, bottle of wine, which witnesses testified was thrown from defendant's machine shortly after accident, held admissible to show condition of defendant and his companions at time, and corroborate other evidence that they had indulged freely in intoxicating liquors just before collision.

4. Criminal law ☞1120(1)—Error in excluding testimony not considered, where record does not disclose such exclusion.

Alleged error in refusing to permit defendant to prove his general reputation as law-abiding citizen in community in which he resided cannot be considered, where record does not disclose such refusal.

5. Municipal corporations ☞707—Conviction of failure to stop automobile after collision held warranted.

Evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction of violating Motor Vehicle Act, § 141, by failure to stop, render assistance, and furnish information, after striking person with automobile.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

R. O. Graves was convicted of failure to stop, render assistance, and furnish information required by law, after striking person with automobile, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Claude A. Shutt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CURTIS, J. [1] The appellant was found guilty of the violation of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562). The court instructed the jury as follows:

"The duty imposed upon a driver of an automobile which strikes a person to stop, render assistance, and furnish the information required by the law, is a duty which he must perform in all cases, and it is immaterial whether such accident was caused by the carelessness of such driver, the carelessness of the person struck, or of both, or was an unavoidable accident. Such duty arises whenever such a collision occurs."

[2] Appellant objects to this instruction on account of the presence therein of the words "in all cases," and claims that in giving this instruction the court instructed the jury that it was the duty of the driver of an automobile which strikes a person to stop and perform the acts enumerated in the above section of the Motor Vehicle Act, even though he had no knowledge that he had struck such person. While the instruction is no broader than the section itself, it is inconceivable to us that the Legislature ever intended to make the provisions of this section applicable to a person who was ignorant of the fact that the automobile which he was driving had struck another person. And it is with equal difficulty that we can bring our minds to believe that any jury would convict an accused of the violation of the provisions of said section, without being assured to a certainty that he had actual knowledge that his machine had struck a person, or had collided with another automobile, even under an instruction of the court as broad as that given in this case. If we conceded that the instruction is susceptible of the construction claimed for it by appellant, we are unable to believe that the jury so construed it or based their verdict upon any such construction. We are therefore of the opinion that the appellant was not in any way injured by the giving of this instruction.

[3] It is next contended that the court erred in admitting in evidence a bottle of wine, which, some of the witnesses testified, had been thrown from appellant's machine shortly after the accident. There was ample evidence to show that the appellant, and the other occupants of the machine in which he was riding at the time of the accident, had indulged freely in intoxicating liquors just prior to the collision. This evidence was proper to show the condition of appellant and his companions at the time their machine struck the deceased, and the admission of the bottle of wine, thrown from appellant's car, simply corroborated the other evidence upon this subject, and was therefore proper.

The two companions of appellant in the machine, who it may be conceded were accomplices, gave testimony tending to show that appellant had aided and abetted in the commission of the crime charged. There was also evidence that the appellant admitted this fact to one of the officers shortly after his arrest. This evidence was sufficient to warrant a verdict of conviction. People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 563, 120 P. 20; People v. Snyder (Cal. Sup.) 239 P. 705.

[4] The further point is made by appellant that the court erred in refusing to permit him to prove his general reputation as a law-abiding citizen in the community in which he resided. The record does not disclose that the court made any such refusal.

[5] Finally, the appellant contends that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the verdict of conviction. The evidence shows that the appellant and two companions were riding in an automobile, a Ford coupé, the property of appellant, on the day of the collision. We may concede, for the purpose of this decision, that appellant was not driving the machine at the time it struck the deceased, or at any time thereafter. There was ample evidence to show that the three occupants of the car were all occupying its one seat, and that appellant was sitting at the extreme right end of the seat, the farthest removed from the driver. There is a conflict in the evidence as to which of the other two occupants of the car was driving, but that is not material in this action. The machine was being driven westerly on Main street in the city of Alhambra, and, when near the corner of Main and Raymond streets, the driver attempted to turn the car into Raymond street, and in so doing ran the machine upon the sidewalk at the southwest corner of said streets, hitting one David Fraser, who was standing on the sidewalk about 2 feet from the curb, inflicting upon him injuries from the effect of which he died shortly thereafter. As the car struck Fraser it carried him from the sidewalk to the street, a distance of about 27 feet, where he fell from the car to the street. The car was then driven, at a rate of speed estimated by some of the witnesses to be at least 40 miles per hour, from the place where the accident occurred, and no attempt was made to stop or render assistance to Fraser or to otherwise comply with the provisions of the law applicable in such cases. The accident occurred in broad daylight, at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Each of the two occupants of the car, other than appellant, testified that shortly after the accident the appellant said, "Drive like hell." There was also evidence from one of the officers that the appellant admitted to him that he had said to the occupants of the car shortly after striking Fraser, "Drive like hell; they can't get our number." This evidence shows beyond any question that there was a flagrant violation of the provisions of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act, and that appellant aided and abetted in the commission of said crime, by advising and counseling the driver of the machine to drive rapidly from the scene of the collision without rendering any assistance to the person struck or in any other way complying with the provisions of said section.

It is true appellant testified that he did not know that the machine had struck Fraser, but we can hardly see how this was probable. The fact that the accident occurred in broad daylight, and that the body of Fraser was carried by the machine, a small Ford coupé, some 27 feet from where he was struck, before it fell from the machine to the street, and the further fact that appellant advised the driver to drive rapidly away from the scene of the accident, so that the number of the machine could not be obtained, point strongly to the conclusion that the appellant knew that his machine had struck and injured Fraser at the time he advised their hasty departure from the scene of the accident without any offer to render assistance to the person whom they had injured.

The evidence in our opinion was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are therefore affirmed.

(Civ. 5356.)

1. Master and servant 419—Commission cannot award additional compensation for increased disability after expiration of time for rehearing following denial of relief for same disability.

Continuing jurisdiction of Industrial Accident Commission, under Workmen's Compensation Act, §§ 11(c), 20(d), to award additional compensation for increased disability, does not authorize it to entertain supplementary applications, complaining of same disability for which it has once denied relief, after expiration of time for rehearing.

2. Master and servant 419—Employer not estopped from claiming benefit of order denying additional compensation by failure to plead it in bar.

Employer is not estopped from claiming benefit of final order of Industrial Accident Commission, denying additional compensation for increased disability, by failure to plead it in bar to subsequent petition complaining of same disability, entire record of case, including all former orders or awards, being necessarily before commission.

3. Evidence 43(2)—Industrial Accident Commission may judicially notice former decision in case.

Industrial Accident Commission may judicially notice its former decision in same case.

4. Evidence 1—Judicial notice based on convenience and expediency.

Judicial notice is based upon convenience and expediency.

5. Evidence 1—Boards and special tribunals in nature of courts may take judicial notice of certain matters.

Boards and special tribunals, such as Industrial Accident Commission, in nature of courts, whose findings are in nature of judgments, as well as courts of record, may take judicial notice of certain matters.

Application by John R. Benton for certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission of California denying petition for rehearing of application for additional compensation for further disability arising from injury sustained in course of employment by the Southern California Edison Company. Order affirmed.

Emil G. Buehrer, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for Industrial Accident Commission.

TYLER, P. J. Petition for writ of review for the purpose of determining the lawfulness of an order of the Industrial Accident Commission denying petitioner a rehearing of his application for additional compensation for an alleged new and further disability arising from an injury sustained in the course of his employment. The injury was suffered by the applicant on January 29, 1923, while employed by defendant Southern California Edison Company as a steel sharpener, and it consisted of the crushing of his right hand by a machine. At the time of said employment petitioner was self-insured, and both employer and employee were subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831), and acts amendatory thereof.

Upon his original application for compensation petitioner was, on November 1, 1923, awarded $20.83 a week for a period of 58 weeks, amounting to the sum of $1,208.14. On November 7, 1923, he filed a petition for rehearing, claiming that injury to his index and middle fingers had been overlooked and should have been included in the allowance. This petition was granted and a final decision was entered on December 27, 1923, increasing the compensation allowance to payments for 86 weeks, amounting in all to the sum of $1,791.38. No petition for a rehearing was filed, and this decision became final.

A year later, on December 2, 1924, a petition for a further increase of his allowance was filed by him upon the ground that the muscles and nerves of his right forearm, shoulder, and neck had become involved as a result of his original injury.

The assistant medical director of the Commission filed a report upon the application in which he stated that he could see no anatomical reason why petitioner should suffer the pain he complained of, but suggested to the Commission that he be examined by a nerve specialist. The Commission adopted the suggestion, and the specialist appointed filed his report. From these reports the Commission found that the condition from which applicant complained was not proximately caused by the injury sustained by him on January 29, 1923, and additional allowance was denied. This decision was entered February 2, 1925, and was allowed to become final by petitioner failing to apply for a rehearing.

On March 19, 1925, petitioner again filed an application reciting that the original injury had caused new and further disability. Attached to this application were several medical reports. These reports had to do with the same complaint of pain in the right forearm and shoulder that had been passed upon the month previous. Accordingly the Commission, on April 21, 1925, dismissed the petition for want of jurisdiction upon the ground of res adjudicata. A petition for rehearing was denied, whereupon the applicant filed this petition for a writ of review.

[1] It is here claimed by petitioner that the order of respondent Commission in dismissing his petition for want of jurisdiction is erroneous and void, and should be annulled and set aside for the reason that, under section 11(c) and section 20(d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, an applicant has the right to institute proceedings for the collection of compensation within 245 weeks after the date of injury upon the ground that the original injury has caused new and further disability; the jurisdiction of the Commission, in such cases, being a continuing one at all times within such period.

There is no question but that the Commission has jurisdiction to award additional compensation by supplementary proceedings where disability has increased since the original decision. The last two supplementary proceedings, however, dealt with the identical cause of complaint, viz. distress and pain suffered by applicant in the right forearm and shoulder.

The decision of the Commission, on February 2, 1925, upon the petition of December 2, 1924, and which was permitted to become final, disposed effectually of this claim. Where the time has expired for a rehearing, the power to amend or alter awards is limited to cases where the application is based upon new facts arising since the making of the award. If there are none, the Commission has no jurisdiction to entertain the petition. The continuing jurisdiction given to the Commission under the sections cited does not authorize the Commission to entertain supplementary applications for the identical complaint where relief has once been denied. The determination by the Commission of that issue is final in the same manner as the original decision where there has been no change in the disability or injury. There must be some end to litigation. Hindes v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (Cal. App.) 239 P. 339.

[2] The further contention is made that, even conceding the order of the Commission on February 2, 1925, to be final, still, respondent California Edison Company not having pleaded it in bar to the petition filed subsequently on March 19, 1925, it is estopped from claiming the benefit thereof. There is no merit in this contention. The rule invoked has no application to a situation of this character.

[3-5] In the determination of the question as to whether an applicant is entitled to have an award amended, the entire record of the case, including all former orders or awards, must of necessity be before the Commission in order that it may properly pass upon the application. The order dismissing the petition in question recites on its face that the record of the former awards was before it and the proceeding was dismissed for the reason that it appeared therefrom that the Commission was without jurisdiction to entertain the application. Then, too, the Commission may judicially notice its former decision in the same case. Sewell v. Price, 164 Cal. 265, 273, 128 P. 407; Harron v. Harron, 128 Cal. 303, 305, 60 P. 932. Judicial notice is based upon convenience and expediency. To take judicial notice and apply it to the decision of a case is a right which appertains to every court of justice, from the lowest to the highest. The application of the doctrine of judicial notice is not confined to courts of record. Certain boards and special tribunals, which are not strictly courts, but which partake of their nature and the findings which partake of the nature of judgments, may take judicial notice of certain matters. 23 Corpus Jur. p. 172; Anderson v. Board of Dental Examiners, 27 Cal. App. 336, 149 P. 1006.

The order denying the petition for further compensation is affirmed.

HELPLING v. HELPLING. (Civ. 5249.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 24, 1925.)

1. Divorce ⇨213, 225—Allowance in prior separate maintenance suit no bar to allowance in present suit pendente lite and attorney's fees.

Where defendant in divorce suit had previously obtained judgment in a separate maintenance suit of $50 per month for 24 months, which judgment had been satisfied by payment, such decree did not bar order in present action requiring payment of $50 per month pendente lite and attorney's fees, since plaintiff was not required to pay twice for same period of time.

2. Divorce ⇨214(3), 226—Evidence held to justify order for attorney's fees and alimony pendente lite.

Evidence held to sustain order allowing $50 per month pendente lite and attorney's fees.

3. Divorce ⇨286—Discretion as to alimony pendente lite and attorney's fees not reviewed, except where no support for order.

Discretion of trial court as to alimony pendente lite and attorney's fees will not be interfered with, unless no support whatever appears for the order made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Suit by Osmond T. Helpling against Margaret J. Helpling for divorce. From an order requiring plaintiff to pay for support pendente lite, counsel fees, and costs, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis J. Euler, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county requiring plaintiff, in a divorce action, to pay to the defendant $50 a month for her support pendente lite, $250 for counsel fees, and $50 for costs.

It is contended that the order appealed from is improper because in 1918 Margaret J. Helpling, the defendant herein, brought an action against her husband, Osmond T. Helpling, the plaintiff herein, seeking separate maintenance, which was granted her by judgment entered upon a stipulation of the parties and providing for the payment to her of $50 a month "for a period of 24 months and no more," and $50 for attorney's fees in that action. This judgment was fully satisfied by payment as directed therein, and was introduced in evidence in the instant case, the position being taken that it settled all property rights and questions of alimony between the parties forever. However, upon a showing that defendant herein was earning $125 a month, but was heavily in debt for expenses incurred by reason of ill health, and had no money or property to meet the expenses incident to the present action, the court made the order appealed from, providing means whereby the present action might be defended.

[1] Appellant relies upon the cases of Sheppard v. Sheppard, 161 Cal. 348, 350, 119 P. 402, and Smith v. Smith, 147 Cal. 145, 81 P. 411. These cases do not sustain his position. Sheppard v. Sheppard presented a situation where the appeal was from an order allowing $50 a month to the wife for separate maintenance. An additional order was made allowing $50 a month during the pendency of the appeal for the support of the wife. This order was also appealed from, and the Supreme Court pointed out that for the period pending the appeal there were two valid, enforceable orders in effect, each providing for the payment of the full amount asked by the wife for her support; that payment had actually been enforced under the first order; and that affirmance of the second order would result in a double payment of an amount adequate for the support of the wife and the payment of twice the amount for which she had asked. It was because of these special circumstances that the second order was reversed, but the Supreme Court said:

"It cannot be disputed, in view of the authorities, that the trial court was authorized to provide for the support and maintenance of defendant by plaintiff pending the determination of the appeal from the judgment, and to this end to make an order directing plaintiff to pay defendant such sums as were reasonably necessary for that purpose. [Citing cases.] And the fact that such support and maintenance for the period of time covered by the order sought was already provided for by the maintenance judgment did not compel the absolute denial of the motion. Execution of the judgment was stayed by the appeal therefrom and the stay-bond given on such appeal, and consequently there was no enforceable judgment or order providing for her support and maintenance during the pendency of the appeal. Then, too, the appeal from the judgment might result in a reversal, in which event it might result that defendant would never receive anything for her support and maintenance during the period of the pendency of the appeal, although clearly, under the authorities, she was entitled to such support and maintenance pending the appeal."

The court then states that the effect of the order for alimony pendente lite, without qualification, was that, if the maintenance judgment was affirmed, and the husband required to pay the amount stated therein, he would be required to pay $100 a month instead of $50, the amount asked by the wife, and the amount found necessary for her support. The remedy for this inequitable situation is suggested in the following language of the decision:

"We are satisfied that it was the duty of the trial court in making this order, with the facts as to the maintenance judgment before it, to have protected plaintiff against the possibility of being compelled, by reason of the affirmance of such judgment or the dismissal of the appeal therefrom, to pay twice for any period of time the amount deemed necessary by the court for the support and maintenance of defendant during such period of time. To that much plaintiff was clearly entitled, and in so far as the order made fails to give such protection, it was erroneous, and, as has developed, most prejudicial to plaintiff."

No similar situation was presented in the instant case. Under the authority of the case last cited, the existence of the decree for separate maintenance did not require the denial of a motion for alimony pendente lite in the divorce action; but the former should have been taken into consideration in reaching an equitable order regarding the latter. The facts with reference to the decree for separate maintenance in this case were that the wife was no longer receiving money thereunder; that it provided for maintenance only for 24 months, and payments thereunder had ceased about two years before the order for support pendente lite was made. The plaintiff was, therefore, not required to pay twice for the same period of time, and the order under consideration is not at all in conflict with the Sheppard Case. Neither is it in conflict with the case of Smith v. Smith, supra. In that case the court said:

"As, thus, no matter what dispute upon the subject may have existed, there was in law, when the decree for alimony in the divorce case was made, a valid enforceable maintenance decree in defendant's favor for a hundred dollars a month for her support, the real effect of the alimony order was to give defendant an additional hundred dollars per month; in other words, under two separate and distinct orders require plaintiff to pay for the same purpose the same amount per month."

We see, therefore, that the two cases relied upon by appellant contain language which would exclude from the operation of their ruling a situation such as the present one where the defendant was entitled to receive nothing under the separate maintenance decree at the time the order complained of was made.

The broad discretionary power vested in the courts to allow alimony pendente lite, costs, and counsel fees in divorce actions is for the purpose of making sure that a wife shall not be without support and legal assistance in proper cases so that she may prosecute or defend such actions. Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 292, 61 P. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548. That purpose is served when an enforceable decree for separate maintenance is providing the means for the wife's support and legal assistance; but it is not served when that decree has expired by its own limitation some time before the divorce action is brought, as in the instant case. In such a case, the reason for the discretionary power exists, and here the court has found the necessity for its exercise to exist also. The latter finding brings us to the second contention of appellant, which is that the facts of the case do not justify a finding that the defendant is in need of financial assistance to defend the divorce action, or for her support while it is pending.

[2, 3] The record recites that the defendant testified "that her income at present was $125 per month; that she was heavily in debt for expenses incurred by reason of ill health and had no money or property to meet the expenses of attorney's fees in this case." This is sufficient. We are reluctant to interfere with the exercise of the discretion of the trial court in a matter of this kind, and will never do so unless the record presents no support whatever for the order made. As was said in the case of McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal. App. 173, 190 P. 458:

"The courts of this state have consistently recognized and upheld the broad discretionary power vested in the trial judges, by the above section of the code [Civ. Code, § 137] in these matters."

The order appealed from is affirmed.

KIER SINGH v. BASANT SINGH.
(Civ. 2910.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 18, 1925.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨ 1011(1)—Where testimony in direct conflict, implied findings of court are conclusive.

Where testimony is in direct conflict as to whether sums due plaintiff were paid, implied findings of court from judgment for plaintiff is conclusive.

2. Bills and notes ⇨ 518(1) — Evidence that plaintiff received no money on checks, if believed, sufficient to overcome adverse inference from his indorsements.

Evidence that plaintiff received no money on checks drawn in favor of defendant and indorsed by plaintiff, if believed by court, is sufficient to overcome any inference against plaintiff which otherwise might be drawn from indorsements.

3. Partnership ⇨ 108, 322—Evidence pertaining to partnership not admissible where no showing of settlement of partnership, and where all partners were not parties.

In action for money due, where defendant filed cross-complaint for net share of profits of partnership appropriated by plaintiff, there was no error in excluding evidence pertaining to partnership where there was no evidence to show that partnership affairs had been settled, and if not settled amounts due several partners could not be determined in present action, as some of partners were not made parties, nor could defendant be credited with value of his products used in partnership, since this was not a personal indebtedness of plaintiff, but of partnership.

4. New trial ⇨ 150(3) — Not warranted for newly discovered evidence if it could have been discovered and produced at trial.

A new trial cannot be granted for newly discovered evidence, where there was no showing that it could not have been readily discovered and produced at trial as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 4, and reasonable inference from affidavits was that evidence could have been so discovered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Kier Singh against Basant Singh for money due, with counterclaims by defendant. Judgment against plaintiff on second and fifth causes of action and for him on other counts, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for appellant.
Orrin J. Lowell, of Auburn, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint herein states eight separate causes of action against defendant for moneys alleged to be due from him to plaintiff. The answer specifically denies all the items of such alleged indebtedness. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff, alleging that—

"On or about the year 1921, plaintiff and defendant were engaged as copartners in raising a crop of rice on the Krehe Bros. ranch near Live Oak, and after the expenses thereof had been paid the net share of this defendant amounted to the sum of $1,020, * * * which said sum was collected by the plaintiff herein and appropriated by him to his own use, * * * and the whole of said sum of $1,020 is still due, owing and unpaid from plaintiff to defendant."

For a further cross-complaint the defendant alleged that the plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of $400 for "moneys advanced to and for the use of said plaintiff." Findings were waived and judgment was entered against plaintiff on the second and fifth causes of action stated in the complaint and in his favor on the other counts. Defendant has appealed from the judgment on a bill of exceptions.

Much of appellant's argument is devoted to the weight of the evidence, a question with which this court has nothing to do. It will be sufficient in this respect to ascertain whether there is substantial evidence which fairly supports the judgment.

[1] The first count is for the sum of $142.77 alleged to have been paid by plaintiff for defendant. Admittedly the money was so paid by plaintiff. Plaintiff testified that the money had not been repaid. Defendant testified that he had paid the same to plaintiff. The third count is for board alleged to be due plaintiff from defendant. Plaintiff testified that no part thereof had been paid, and defendant testified that he had paid the amount thereof. The fourth count is for "money, goods, wares and merchandise amounting to $256.55." Plaintiff testified that he furnished the same to defendant, and defendant testified to the contrary. The sixth and seventh counts are for sums alleged to be due upon defendant's promissory notes. Plaintiff testified that he loaned defendant the amounts represented by the notes and that the defendant executed such notes. Plaintiff's testimony in this respect was corroborated by other witnesses. The defendant denied that he received such sums of money or executed the notes. The eighth count is for a small sum alleged to have been paid for defendant at his request. Plaintiff testified that he made such payment, and defendant stated nothing to the contrary. The implied findings of the trial court on the foregoing conflicting evidence are clearly conclusive.

[2] Four checks, drawn in favor of defendant for $226, $108, $100, and $100, respectively, and indorsed on the backs thereof with the name of defendant in Hindu characters, underneath which appears the name of the plaintiff, were admitted in evidence. The defendant testified that he "did not receive any money from them," but delivered them to the plaintiff. The plaintiff testified relative to these checks as follows:

"Each one of these checks has my signature on it as the last indorser. I did not receive the money for any of these checks; I simply indorsed them for the purpose of enabling defendant, Basant Singh, to cash them. I indorsed some of the checks at the request of Basant Singh and some at the request of the bank, but no money was given to me. I never received any of the money nor handled any of it whatever."

While the plaintiff's indorsements upon the checks were circumstances against him, his explanation, if believed by the trial court, was sufficient to overcome any inference which otherwise might be drawn from such indorsements.

[3] Appellant contends that the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objection to his testimony offered in support of the first cross-complaint and in striking out certain parts of his testimony relative thereto. Such testimony and ruling are set out in the bill of exceptions as follows:

"In 1920 and 1921, I was in partnership with Kier Singh and other Hindus in raising rice. During the year 1921, I was working for Silva-Bergholdt Company in Placer county, and from February to September, 1921, I gave all my checks which I received from the Silva-Bergholdt Company for labor to Kier Singh, which was to be applied as my share of the expenses of raising the rice crop. I also had 150 sacks of seed rice in the Lincoln warehouse in February or March, 1921, the market price of which was about $2 a sack and which I gave to Kier Singh for the purpose of sowing that season. The rice was to be raised on 120 acres of the Krehe Bros. ranch near Live Oak, Sutter county, and my share was 20 acres, or one-sixth of the crop. The crop amounted to 3,000 sacks and was stored in the warehouse at Live Oak. I received nothing of my share of this crop. Here the court sustained an objection to the introduction of testimony pertaining to this partnership on the ground that it was the subject of a suit for an accounting and ordered the testimony stricken out."

The question to which objection was sustained does not appear in the record. The cross-complaint was for the defendant's net share of the profits of the partnership, alleged to have been received by plaintiff and appropriated to his own use. It does not appear that the defendant offered to prove that allegation, but the inference from his testimony is that his partners, including others who are not parties to this action, had failed to account to him for his share of the profits. If the partnership affairs had been settled, and if the plaintiff received defendant's share of the net profits thereof, as alleged in the cross-complaint, the defendant should have offered evidence to prove those facts. If the partnership affairs had not been settled, as may be inferred from defendant's testimony, then it is clear that the amounts due the several partners, if any, could not be determined in this action to which some of them are not parties. If there was any error in the ruling of the court, the bill of exceptions fails to show it. Appellant contends that he should have been credited with the value of the seed rice which he testified he furnished "for the purpose of sowing that season," the season of 1921. The answer is that the value of the seed rice was a partnership affair, proper to be considered in an accounting between the partners, but not a personal indebtedness of the plaintiff to be offset against the latter's demands stated in the complaint. Such accounting might show that nothing is due defendant thereunder.

[4] The defendant moved for a new trial, one ground of his motion being that of newly discovered evidence. Appellant urges that a new trial should have been granted on that ground. The facts set out in the affidavits presented in support of the motion are wholly insufficient to warrant a retrial of the case. Even if such facts were otherwise sufficient, there was no showing whatever that they could not have been readily discovered and produced at the trial, and it is a reasonable inference from the facts stated in the affidavits that they could have been so discovered and produced. The showing necessary to warrant a new trial on the ground urged is clearly prescribed by section 657, subdivision 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, as follows:

"Newly discovered evidence, material for the party making the application, which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the trial."

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action for money due by the Sierra & San Francisco Power Company against the Universal Electric & Gas Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William Kehoe, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas H. Breeze, Chickering & Gregory, Carl I. Wheat, and Woodward M. Taylor, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ, for Railroad Commission.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $13,359.68 on account of an alleged balance due for electrical energy furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant. It is alleged in the complaint that on the 9th day of July, 1915, the parties hereto entered into a contract whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant agreed to buy for a period of eight years all of the electrical energy that might be required by the defendant in the regular course of its business in excess of that which might be generated in its own plant; that the defendant agreed to pay for energy at the rate per month of $1.80 per kilowatt for the first 2,000 kilowatts, maximum demand, with a sliding schedule downward for each successive 2,000 kilowatts, maximum demand; that in addition thereto an energy charge was to be paid of four mills per kilowatt hour for energy taken as determined by the integrating watt hour meter readings; that pursuant to the contract the plaintiff sold and delivered energy to the defendant from August 1, 1918, to December 3, 1919, on account of which the total price to be paid was $255,623.55; that the defendant had paid the sum of $241,249.71 and no more. Plaintiff prayed judgment for the difference, to wit, $14,373.84 and interest.

The defendant answered, denying the indebtedness, alleging a modification of said contract by mutual consent in January, 1917, the payment of bills by monthly remittances in accordance with the modified contract, and the acceptance by the plaintiff of such payments in full satisfaction. The court found for the plaintiff and entered judgment for the amount demanded, less the sum of $1,016.16, which the plaintiff admitted to be due to the defendant in accordance with the allegations of a counterclaim duly pleaded. The defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, that the judgment is not supported by the findings, and that the decision is against law.

It appears from the evidence that at all times involved in this action the plaintiff and the defendant were public utility corporations, the plaintiff being a wholesaler and the defendant a retailer of electrical energy in San Francisco; that the rates specified in the contract of July 9, 1915, provided, first, for an energy charge at a fixed rate per kilowatt hour for energy actually used, and, secondly, a service charge at a specified rate per kilowatt hour, based upon the maximum demand during the month, the maximum demand being defined as "the sum of the greatest number of kilowatt hours taken by purchaser * * * during any four consecutive fifteen minute intervals during each month"; that the contracting parties operated under this contract until January, 1917, when the plaintiff endeavored to persuade the defendant to shut down its steam plant and take all of its power from the plaintiff. Defendant objected to the proposal on the ground that it was not assured of the reliability of the plaintiff's service, and that by operating its own steam plant it was enabled to reduce the peak load, thus lowering the maximum demand during the month, and correspondingly decreasing the amount of service charge which it was required to pay. After negotiations, however, an oral agreement was entered into whereby the defendant was to shut down its steam plant, the plaintiff to operate its steam plant seven days a week, and the maximum demand on which the service charge was based was to be figured at nine-tenths of the actual amount thereof. Thereafter letters were exchanged purporting to confirm the oral agreement. Under date of January 2, 1917, the plaintiff addressed a letter to the defendant as follows:

"In consideration of the Universal Electric & Gas Company giving the Sierra & San Francisco Power Company additional load between the hours of 7:15 a. m. and 11 p. m. to the full capacity of the present cable, * * * this company will operate its steam plant between the hours of 7:15 a. m. and 11 p. m., and will also assume nine-tenths of the maximum demand being charged as the maximum demand charge, according to the contract. The minimum service charge under this arrangement is to be based upon 1,500 kilowatts. Should your maximum demand be less than 1,500 kilowatts, then and in that event the nine-tenths factor shall not apply. * * * You stated to the writer that you would operate this month, January, 1917, under the terms above named, in order to determine whether or not this would be satisfactory operative conditions."

On January 10, 1917, the defendant replied:

"Confirming our recent conversation and your letter of January 2, 1917, we understand that, should our peak load equal 1,500 kilowatts or more, we are to be billed for nine-tenths of whatever that peak may be, or at the old rate of $1.62 per k. w. Should the peak be less than 1,500 k. w., then in that event the rate to remain at $1.80 per k. w. Also, we understand that your steam plant is to run Sundays as on week days. Trusting this will make a clear record of our understanding, and thanking you for your courtesy in the matter, we remain," etc.

On January 15, 1917, the plaintiff in turn replied:

"Referring to your letter of January 10th, I beg to advise you that your understanding does not agree with ours as to the application of the nine-tenths factor. While the resulting bill would be the same in either event (viz. by applying the nine-tenths factor to the rate, according to your understanding, or applying the nine-tenths factor to the peak, according to our understanding), it was our understanding that the peak, and not the rate, should be the method."

It will be noted from the foregoing correspondence that, while there was some disagreement as to the application of the nine-tenths factor, the result was the same as far as the revenues of the plaintiff and payments by the defendant were concerned, for in billing the defendant for energy furnished for the month of January, 1917, to and including the month of July, 1918, the plaintiff applied the nine-tenths factor in ascertaining the maximum demand charge, and the bills were paid by the defendant as submitted. On July 31, 1918, the plaintiff gave to the defendant a written notice of termination of the special arrangement as follows:

"Owing to the greatly increased cost of labor and materials, and to more difficult operating conditions, which have very largely increased the cost of production, we feel that the special concession covered by our letter of January 15, 1917, by Mr. W. L. McKinley, should not be longer continued. We will therefore cancel the arrangement covered by the aforesaid letter and proceed on the contract basis beginning August 1, 1918."

After the notice of termination was given, and continuously thereafter during the entire period covered by this controversy, all bills rendered by the plaintiff were based on the full maximum demand charge in accordance with the original contract. Payments thereon were made by the defendant as hereinafter more particularly noted. On June 15, 1921, the plaintiff made formal demand for the payment of the difference between the amounts claimed to be due computed according to the original contract and the amounts paid computed on the basis of the reduced rate. Upon the refusal of the defendant to pay this action was brought.

When the contract of July 9, 1915, was entered into, the Railroad Commission did not have jurisdiction over the rates, charges and contracts of the parties hereto, for the reason that they were operating within a municipality which at that time had not surrendered its powers of control in such matters to the commission. Const. art. 12, § 23, amendment approved October 10, 1911; section 82, Public Utilities Act Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 62. After the amendment of section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution in 1914, the Legislature adopted the present Public Utilities Act. Stats. 1915, p. 115. This act went into effect August 8, 1915. By this legislation the Railroad Commission acquired jurisdiction of the parties to said contract with reference to their rates and service. Section 14(b) of the act of 1915 provides:

"Under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, every public utility * * * shall file with the commission within such time * * * as the commission may designate * * * all * * * contracts * * * which in any manner affect or relate to rates, tolls, * * * or service."

In admitted compliance with general order No. 45 of the Railroad Commission, the plaintiff on October 6, 1915, filed with the commission a summary of the rates provided for in the contract of July 9, 1915, listed as a deviation from the regularly filed electrical rates. Thereafter the commission requested that the complete contract be filed in accordance with the general order, and this was done on February 16, 1916. Section 15 of the Public Utilities Act provides:

"Unless the commission otherwise orders, no change shall be made by any public utility in any rate, fare, toll, rental, charge or classification, or in any rule, regulation or contract relating to or affecting any rate, * * * except after thirty days' notice * * * stating plainly the change or changes to be made in the schedule or schedules then in force, and the time when the change or changes will go into effect."

And subparagraph (b) of section 17 of the act provides:

"* * * No public utility shall * * * receive a greater or less or different compensation * * * than the rates, tolls, rentals and charges * * * as specified in its schedules on file * * * nor shall any such public utility refund or remit, directly or indirectly, in any manner or by any device, any portion of the rates, tolls, rentals and charges so specified, nor extend to any corporation or person any form of contract or agreement * * * except such as are regularly and uniformly extended to all corporations and persons; provided, that the commission may by rule or order establish such exceptions from the operation of this prohibition as it may consider just and reasonable as to each public utility."

[1] Under the plain mandate of the statute it is clear that, when the contract of July 9, 1915, was filed with the commission, the rates and charges specified therein became the established and only lawful rates which the plaintiff could charge or receive, unless and until a change in such rates was effected in accordance with the statutory requirements, and no such change was made concerning the rates here in question. The letters of January 2, 10 and 15, 1917, were not sent to the Railroad Commission until February 14, 1919, more than six months after the modification provided for therein had been terminated by the plaintiff, and then only at the request of the commission, and there is no evidence that said letters were ever filed. The purported modification of the agreement was therefore ineffective. Calistoga Elec. Co. v. Napa Valley Elec. Co., 11 Opinions and Orders Railroad Comm. 974. Notwithstanding the plaintiff had been charging and receiving less than the regularly authorized rates, it had the right to revert to the legal rate without the sanction of the commission. In re Village of Cambrria, Pub. Utility Reports, 1916E. 519.

[2] It is insisted by appellant that the contract of July 9, 1915, was not required to be filed with the commission, because it "was a special contract not available to the general public." To this contention the language of the statute is a complete answer, wherein it is provided that every public utility shall file with the commission its rates or schedules and all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to rates. Section 14, subparagraph (b). This provision would include, not only the general rate schedules under which any consumer might be supplied with energy without a special contract, but also all special contracts, such as the one involved herein, affecting or relating to rates. The statute is too plain to admit of any other meaning.

[3] Such being the status of the original contract, the defendant then takes the position that the change made by the letters of January, 1917, did not affect the rates to be charged and collected by the plaintiff, nor change or affect the quantity of electrical energy actually purchased; that the sole change made was in determining the maximum demand; that the maximum demand was actually delivered only one hour in the month, and was charged for as though it had been actually delivered every hour during such month; that it was a charge for service rendered in large part in theory only; and that the parties to the contract had the lawful right to modify the same so as to change the difference between the actual and theoretical delivery. The theory advanced by the defendant is technical and interesting, but it is unnecessary to further discuss it, for the reason that, whatever the theory may have been, the purpose of the arrangement and its practical effect, if legally accomplished, was to modify the terms of the original contract, so as to render the energy charge, which the plaintiff was entitled to demand and the defendant was bound to pay, less than that provided for in the original agreement.

When so considered, the arrangement may properly be termed a "device" by which a portion, to wit, 10 per cent., of the legal charge, was remitted to the defendant, in contravention of subparagraph (b) of section 17 of the Public Utilities Act. If a public carrier should say to a shipper, to whom it desired to grant a preference, "We will bill you each month at the rate per hundred pounds specified in our legally established tariff, but in making out our bills we will bill you only for 90 per cent. of the actual weight shipped by you during the month," could it be doubted that such an arrangement would effectuate a reduction of the rate in favor of the shipper? The defendant apparently considered that the letters of January, 1917, should have been filed, for by its letter of September 7, 1918, in response to plaintiff's notice of cancellation of July 31, 1918, it wrote to the plaintiff as follows:

"Referring to your letters of January 2d and 15th, in which you agreed to bill us on a basis of nine-tenths the maximum demand, * * * we would ask: Were those letters filed with the Railroad Commission as a modification of our power contract, as required? If not, they should, of course, be filed, and, the rate having been lowered, it cannot therefore be arbitrarily raised at the pleasure of one of the parties to the agreement."

The defendant was correct in its conclusion that it was necessary to file the letters with the commission, but its further conclusion that the plaintiff having theretofore charged and collected compensation on the basis of an unauthorized rate, could not revert to the legal rate as was done in this case, is not approved.

[4] The defendant further contends that, if said letters were required to be filed, it was the duty of the plaintiff to file them, and to allow the plaintiff to recover in the face of such breach of duty would be to permit the plaintiff to "take advantage of its own wrong," citing section 3517 of the Civil Code. But that maxim of jurisprudence is not of universal application. It was not intended to qualify any of the provisions of the Code, but to aid in their just application. Civ. Code, § 3509. While it may properly be said that the plaintiff was in duty bound to file the modified contract with the Railroad Commission, and, failing to do so, was subject to the penalties prescribed by law, it must also be said that the defendant was not wholly blameless, for it concurred in an arrangement which was contrary to the statute. It could have protected its rights by filing the modified contract with the commission. The documents providing for the modification were presumably in its possession, as well as in the possession of the plaintiff.

The argument also loses sight of one of the purposes of the regulation of rates of public utility corporations. The public in general and the consumers in particular are interested in the relations existing between the corporation and each of its consumers. To accede to the position of the defendant would be to permit a public utility corporation to deplete its revenues by special secret arrangement with preferred consumers, thus leading to possible financial embarrassment or depreciated service, and without recourse as against the preferred consumer. It seems obvious that a consumer who has participated in such a prohibited arrangement is not in position to avoid payment of the legal charge on the ground that the other party to the transaction had not done its full duty in the premises.

[5] The trial court found and decided that there had been no "accord and satisfaction" of the claim of plaintiff against defendant in whole or in part. The defendant attacks this finding as being contrary to the law and the evidence. Upon receipt of the bill covering power delivered for the month of August, 1918, the defendant refigured the same, applying the nine-tenths factor, which made a reduction for that month of $420.12. A new bill, with voucher attached, based on the refigured amount, was prepared by the defendant and transmitted to the plaintiff, together with a check for the smaller amount. The wording of the voucher was as follows:

"Received of Universal Electric & Gas Company in full payment of above account six thousand eight hundred twenty-six and $\frac{4}{100}$ dollars."

The plaintiff refused to sign the voucher, but wrote the defendant as follows:

"We inclose herewith a receipt for $6,826.42, the amount of your check on account of August, 1918, power bill, $7,246.54. Because of the deduction which you have made from our bill we are obliged to furnish you with a receipt on account. We have accepted the check under protest and have passed the same to your credit."

The following is the form of the receipt:

"Received of Universal Electric & Gas Company six thousand eight hundred twenty-six and $\frac{4}{100}$ dollars to apply on account of August, 1918, power bill. Unpaid balance, \$420.12."

The same procedure was followed by both parties each month thereafter to and including February, 1919. From March to June, 1919, the defendant continued to send the vouchers to the plaintiff with checks for the smaller amount. As to these vouchers the plaintiff signed and returned them, first crossing out the words "in full payment of above account," and inserting the words "on account" of the bill for the particular month. Beginning July, 1919, and ending December, 1919, when the service was apparently discontinued by mutual consent, the defendant, on receipt of each monthly statement for that period, made out a bill for the smaller amount and submitted it, with a voucher check on the back of which was the following:

"If not correct return without alterations and state differences. Make all indorsements below. This check is hereby accepted by the payee in full payment of the within account and indorsed as follows."

These checks were indorsed by the plaintiff without change or alteration. In addition to the foregoing procedure, it appears that early in the period covered by this controversy the parties referred the matter to their respective attorneys, and payments were thereafter made by the defendant, through its attorney, with an accompanying letter, beginning December 9, 1918, as follows:

"This check represents the amount admitted to be due by the Universal Company on account of the items for electrical energy furnished and charged in your bill in the month of October, 1918. The check does not include two items mentioned in that account, viz. the surcharge of $1\frac{1}{2}$ mills per k. w. h. and in addition deducts one-tenth of the maximum demand charge. * * * It was the expectation of the Universal Company and of myself that before tendering the inclosed check it would take up with your attorney * * * the items in question as to which payment is not made, * * * and if agreeable to you this procedure will be adopted. I am in hopes of obviating the necessity of resorting to the arbitration provisions of 1915 contract. * * *"

The checks for the remaining months of the period were transmitted through the defendant's attorney and were accompanied by his letters identical in form as follows:

"Herewith please find Universal Electric & Gas Company's check, * * * being the amount admitted to be due on your bill. * * * The check is similar to that sent you with my letter of December 9, 1918, covering October bill, the same deductions being made from your statements as rendered and the same reservations and conditions being present as regards the items withheld. * * * As on previous occasions you will undoubtedly not be in a position to sign the full payment voucher accompanying the check; but, if you will attach a receipt and return the same with the voucher, pending final adjustment, this will be appreciated."

An accord is an agreement to accept, in extinction of an obligation, something different from or less than that to which the person agreeing to accept is entitled. Civ. Code, § 1521. Acceptance by the creditor of the consideration of an accord extinguishes the obligation, and is called satisfaction. Civ. Code, § 1523; Creighton v. Gregory, 142

Cal. 34, 41, 75 P. 569. Since an accord is an agreement it is subject to the same rules applicable to other agreements. 1 Cal. Jur. 127.

"The discharge of claims by way of accord and satisfaction is dependent upon contract express or implied; and it follows that the essentials necessary to valid contracts generally must be present in a contract of accord and satisfaction. Therefore there must be (1) a proper subject-matter; (2) competent parties; (3) a consent or meeting of the minds of the parties; and (4) a consideration." 1 R. C. L. 178, § 3.

The agreement of accord and satisfaction which the defendant here contends for could under the evidence arise only by implication. The statute expressly forbade the plaintiff to charge or receive compensation for electrical energy at any rate other than that specified in the contract duly filed. It therefore could not lawfully accept the amounts tendered by the defendant. In view of this situation, counsel for the plaintiff very pertinently inquires: "How can the law imply that plaintiff has done that which the statute expressly forbids?" We think the answer must be that a contract of accord thus arising cannot properly be brought into being with one of the essentials of a contract lacking, to wit, a lawful subject-matter. Since an accord and satisfaction is the result of an agreement it must also be consummated by a meeting of the minds of the parties.

"The great weight of authority in American courts undoubtedly supports the rule that where the amount due is in dispute, and a check for an amount less than that claimed is sent to the creditor, with a statement that it is sent in full satisfaction of the claim, and the tender is accompanied by such acts or declarations as amount to a condition that, if the check is accepted at all, it is accepted in full satisfaction of the disputed claim, and the creditor so understands, its acceptance by the creditor constitutes an accord and satisfaction, even though the creditor states at the time that the amount tendered is not accepted in full satisfaction. Wald's Pollock on Contracts (3d Ed.) p. 839. Whether there was a dispute concerning the amount due, and whether the tender was on condition that acceptance would be in full satisfaction, are primarily questions of fact for the trial court." Lapp-Gifford Co. v. Muscoy Water Co., 166 Cal. 25, 27, 134 P. 989, 990.

From the oral evidence in the case at bar, and the conduct of the parties as indicated by the documentary evidence above noted, it satisfactorily appears that the amount actually due was in dispute at the time of the acceptance and retention of the several checks, and that the tender was not subject to the condition that acceptance of each check would be satisfaction in full. It is also clear that the element of consideration for the agreement of accord was lacking. The court was therefore correct in finding and concluding that there had been no accord and satisfaction. Furthermore, the contract of July 15 expressly provided that:

"In case purchaser at any time shall dispute any bill rendered by Power Company under the provisions of this agreement, then within the period fixed herein for the payment of such bill, purchaser shall pay Power Company the amount which it admits to be due by it on account of the items charged in such bill without deduction, * * * and shall forthwith offer to submit to arbitration, as hereinafter provided, the question with respect to the balance unpaid by it. * * *"

In view of the foregoing provision of the contract, it seems reasonable to conclude that the defendant had no right to attach a condition to its payment of the amount conceded to be due, and by admittedly failing to offer to submit to arbitration subject the plaintiff to its claim of accord and satisfaction.

From what has been said it is unnecessary to discuss the question of whether or not the modification of the original contract was effective only during the month of January, 1917, as contended by the plaintiff, or during the entire period covered by the controversy, as contended by the defendant. In either event the modification did not become legally effective, and the period of its duration was therefore of no consequence.

The judgment is affirmed.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE CO. v.
RAILROAD COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 11344.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1925.)

1. Electricity ☞9(3)—Court not required to consider objections to order of Railroad Commission not set forth in application for rehearing by commission.

On certiorari to review order of railroad Commission allowing petitioner one-half of cost of relocating telegraph line, Supreme Court was not required to consider objections to commission's order on ground that it violated state Const. art. 1, § 14, and federal Const. Amend. 14, in view of Public Utilities Act, §§ 66 and 67, where none of such grounds was specifically set forth by petitioner in its application for rehearing by commission.

2. Electricity ☞9(3)—Railroad Commission's departure from own precedent not under control of court.

On certiorari to review order of Railroad Commission allowing one-half of cost of relocating telegraph line, departure by commission from its own precedent or failure to observe a rule ordinarily respected by it is not a matter under control of Supreme Court, since it neither tends to show that commission had not regularly pursued its authority or that departure violated any rights of petitioner guaranteed by state or federal Constitution.

3. Electricity ☞9(3)—Railroad Commission's order directing greater horizontal separation of power and communication lines held proper.

Where Railroad Commission, in making its order directing a greater horizontal separation of a power and communication line under Public Utilities Act, § 36, was acting within limits of police power of the state, and neither company had a vested right to remain where it was located, regardless of priority of franchise, as against public's welfare, safety, and convenience, such order was properly made.

4. Electricity ☞9(3)—Railroad Commission's apportionment of cost of horizontal separation of communication and power lines affirmed.

Order of Railroad Commission directing greater horizontal separation of power and communication lines, and fixing proportion of cost to be borne by each of companies at one-half the total cost of such change, will be affirmed, where such companies failed to agree upon a division of such costs, which costs were a joint charge against both within Public Utilities Act, § 36, and it did not appear that commission acted arbitrarily or oppressively, though apportionment of cost in favor of one company might not be as large as Supreme Court would have allowed, were it vested with jurisdiction to fix the amount.

Application for certiorari by the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company against the Railroad Commission, to review order of such commission allowing petitioner one-half of cost of relocating telegraph line. Order affirmed.

SEAWELL, J. Application for a review of that portion of an order made by the Railroad Commission whereby petitioner was allowed one-half of the cost of relocating a portion of its telegraph line in certain areas in which it is closely paralleled by a high-power transmission line operated by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, in order to prevent induction interferences to petitioner's telegraph line, which, by reason of its close proximity to the power line of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, renders induction unavoidable.

The terms "communication company" or "communication lines," as employed herein, are meant to identify the petitioner or its telegraph line. The terms "transmission line," "power company," or "power lines" have a corresponding reference to the Pacific Gas & Electric Company or its property. The communication company and the transmission company are respectively public utilities operating under the authority of law.

On August 23, 1918, the Postal Telegraph Company, a transcontinental telegraph system, with telegraph and cable connections with various parts of the world—a portion of which system is situate within this state, under the laws of which it was organized and exists—filed a complaint against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, a public utility engaged in this state in the business of furnishing electric power for general commercial purposes, by which it is alleged that in the year 1886 the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company built, equipped, and began the operation of the telegraph line in question. The city of San Francisco was the point of beginning of said system, which extended easterly through Benicia, Suisun, Elmira, Dixon, Davis, and Sacramento to the easterly boundary of the state, thence to various parts of the continent. Said telegraph line was taken over by petitioner in 1908, and it has ever since been operated and maintained by petitioner in a safe and proper manner, and in full compliance with the laws of the state of California and the rules and regulations of the Railroad Commission of this state. In this connection it is further alleged that the telegraph line was originally constructed in a good and substantial manner, and at all times since its construction has been properly maintained, operated, and equipped with the most modern and approved devices obtainable for the prevention of electric induction into or upon its communication wires; that the voltage used on or over its line in the transmission of telegraphic messages has at no time exceeded 350 volts and the amperage has not exceeded one-tenth of one ampere; that the transmission company since October 4, 1905, has, between the city of San Francisco and the city of Sacramento, for the transportation of electric current and energy, maintained a pole system consisting of copper wires strung upon wooden poles, over which it transports normally an alternating electric current of high potentiality, to wit, about 50,000 volts.

It is alleged, and is unquestionably a fact, that the induction interferences from which petitioner has and does now suffer is the result, primarily, of the close proximity at which the power company at the time of the construction of its line—1900-1904—placed its pole lines with reference to petitioner's line in the vicinity of Davis, Dixon, Vandeen, and Elmira, and intermediate points between Suisun and Davis for a total distance of five miles, parallel with petitioner's line, making a parallel separation not greater than 22 feet between the pole lines of said transmission and communication companies, and at another section for a distance of 8 miles, with a horizontal separation not greater than 24 feet. Other parallelisms too narrow for the safe and efficient management of the communication line are alleged. It is also alleged, and found as a fact by the commission, that the normal disturbances from which petitioner is troubled is seriously increased and aggravated by defective construction and poor maintenance of said power lines and the failure of said power company to make needful repairs and improvements for the prevention of surges; the overloading of the system with electric energy beyond its capacity; neglect to patrol its lines at seasonable times; the violation, in certain instances, of the laws of the state of California and the regulations of the Railroad Commission governing the operation and maintenance of said power lines; and a general state of deterioration into which said power lines has been allowed to pass. There is no dispute as to the physical facts so far as parallels are concerned. At no point are the two pole systems after leaving the Alameda county line eastward to Sacramento, a distance of approximately 70 miles, placed at a greater distance apart than 210 feet.

As a result of said inductive interferences, which cause buzzing noises and confusion of sounds, the transmission of messages is made difficult, if not impossible, and long delays in the transmission of messages are of frequent occurrence. Petitioner's equipment has frequently been burned out or damaged by surges of electric energy passing over the wires of the power company, the result of improper maintenance, operation, and a too close contact of the lines of said company. There is no doubt but that petitioner has sustained damage and has suffered much inconvenience from the inductive interferences arising from an indisputable situation. The communication line being by far the weaker in electric voltage, and being compelled from necessity to use instruments and devices in the transmission of messages which are delicate and highly sensitive to air waves and atmospheric and electric disturbances, renders it impossible for it to successfully combat induction disturbances which are rendered unavoidable by the close proximity of the wire lines, and cannot be prevented even by the employment of the most modern and approved methods known to electrical science or skill. It is practically admitted that the efficient management and control of petitioner's property, as well as the safety of the general public and the employees of both companies, require that the parallel separation between the pole lines of said companies be not less than 500 feet.

The prayer of petitioner was that the commission either require the power line to repair, reconstruct, and equip its power lines so as to prevent surges thereon or to remove its line between the cities of Sacramento and Suisun a sufficient distance from petitioner's line to prevent induction thereupon, "and for such other, further, and different relief as may appear just in the premises," and for costs.

The answer of the power company alleges that it owns and operates two 60 K.V. lines from Suisun to Davis, a distance of about 27 miles, which were originally constructed by the Bay Counties Power Company in 1900, and one 60 K.V. line from Davis to Sacramento, a distance of 13 miles, constructed in 1904. Both of said lines, for the greater portion of the distance here involved, are operated on the private right of way of each company, and are adjacent to the right of way of the Southern Pacific Company. As to the allegations that said power lines are or ever were poorly constructed, or have at any time been poorly maintained, operated, or equipped in violation of any law or statute or rule of any commission or in any respect whatsoever, said power company made specific denials. In short, it denied that any act done by it or failure or omission or neglect to perform any duty imposed upon it by law has caused the communication company any damage or injury whatever.

The commission, after hearing a great mass of expert evidence upon the issues involved, extending over a long period of time, made an order that the petitioner, Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, submit for its approval, within 60 days of the date thereof, plans for the relocation of its circuits between the cities of Elmira and Davis to a new position along the northerly side of the Southern Pacific Company's right of way between Elmira and Davis or in another location equally distant from the circuit of said power line. A similar order was made directing the removal of petitioner's circuits in the vicinity of the town of Vandeen within that section where its circuits paralleled the power circuits on the same side of the Southern Pacific Company's right of way to a position along the southerly line of said Southern Pacific Company's right of way, or to another location equally distant from said power line company's circuit.

The order as to the matter of cost resulting from said changes of location was that said cost should be equally borne by the communication and transmission lines, respectively.

Petitioner filed in due course of time an application for a rehearing. Said application insisted that, inasmuch as it had been found by the commission that the close proximity of the circuits of the contending parties caused serious and unavoidable interferences upon the lines of the petitioner of such a nature and to such an extent as to warrant the increase of the separation, any order requiring it to bear one-half of the cost resulting from said change was unlawful. The commission was requested to modify its order by providing that the entire cost of relocation be borne by the power company. As a final request, the petitioner prayed that the order "be modified so as to require the entire expense of relocation, except the cost of new equipment in place of old, be met by the defendants (power company), and that the question of relocating the lines between Davis and Sacramento and between Elmira and Suisun be left open until the result of the changes ordered be determined and the foregoing application for a rehearing be granted, and an order made to that effect."

[1] Petitioner urges in this court as specific grounds for the annulment of the commission's order violations of those clauses of the state Constitution (article 1, § 14) and the federal Constitution (Fourteenth Amendment), which provide that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to the owner, and the due process and equal protection clauses (Fourteenth Amendment) of the federal Constitution. None of these grounds were specifically set forth in its application for a rehearing by the commission. Section 66, Public Utilities Act (Stats. 1915, p. 115), provides that an application for a rehearing of any order or decision made or given by the Railroad Commission "shall set forth specifically the ground or grounds on which the applicant considers said decision or order to be unlawful. No corporation or person shall in any court urge or rely on any ground not so set forth in said application." It must be conceded that, in setting forth the grounds upon which the unlawfulness of the order was alleged to be vulnerable to attack, it did not specifically set forth any of the constitutional objections which are urged before us in this proceeding as grounds sufficient to compel the annulment of the commission's order. The validity of the limitation placed upon the control of the courts of this state by the provisions of sections 66 and 67 of the Public Utilities Act has been definitely settled by the cases Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 P. 1119, 1 Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652; Clemmons v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 254, 159 P. 713; Marin Municipal Water District v. North Coast Water Co., 178 Cal. 324, 173 P. 473; San Leandro v. Railroad Commission, 183 Cal. 229, 191 P. 1, and other more recent decisions of this court. In San

Leandro v. Railroad Commission, supra, speaking to the point that petitioner had not specifically set forth in its application for a rehearing a ground which it was then urging in this court for the annulment of the order, we said:

"* * * Petitioners failed to specifically set forth the alleged failure to fix a rate base in their application to the commission for a rehearing, and are, therefore, precluded by the terms of section 66 of the Public Utilities Act from urging the objections in this court."

A situation practically identical with the one here presented was before the Supreme Court of Missouri. Section 110 of the Public Service Act of that state (Laws 1913, p. 641) provided that "no corporation or person or public utility shall in any court urge or rely on any ground not set forth in said application" (referring to a rehearing). A constitutional question not raised by the applicant in its petition for a rehearing before the commission was urged in the circuit court and Supreme Court. The court refused to entertain the question, and tersely said:

"The constitutional question injected into this controversy for the first time in the petition for review was not timely. How, without a contradiction in terms, can a matter be reviewed which has not been viewed? * * *" State ex rel. Buffum Telephone Co. v. Public Service Commission, 272 Mo. 627, 199 S. W. 962, L. R. A. 1918C, 820.

While we feel that we would be fully justified in dismissing from consideration the constitutional questions which are specifically set out in the brief of petitioner and referred to in less specific language in the petition for the writ, and which were not specified as a ground of unlawfulness in the application for a rehearing before the commission, other reasons impel us to give consideration to the constitutional questions within the limitations which petitioner itself has placed upon them.

The induction disturbances complained of are not of recent or sudden development, but have existed in a noticeably increasing degree since about 1909, and were officially brought to the attention of the commission by petitioner in 1919. It has been a vexatious problem with the commission for a number of years. At its behest joint conferences were called with the view of devising some plan or means by which the increasing induction disturbances might be minimized or suppressed. The officers of both companies, both before and after the order of relocation was made, and their expert electricians and engineers met in council with the commission and its engineers upon a number of occasions in an endeavor to hit upon some practical solution of a difficult problem. After much experimentation, investigation, and many negotiations and discussions, the commission was forced to the conclusion that there was but one practicable, reasonable solution of the question which would afford petitioner relief from induction troubles, to wit, a wider horizontal separation of the pole lines of the respective companies. The soundness of its conclusion is not questioned. Neither is the right of the commission to compel the petitioner to relocate its lines challenged. It is conceded by petitioner that, if the commission had made an order requiring petitioner to relocate its lines, and had assessed the power company with the entire cost of such relocation, it would have been a valid order, and the commission's authority in such a case would have been regularly pursued. In other words, the jurisdiction or power of the commission to determine the question it had taken hold of depended—in the view of petitioner—upon whether it had acted wisely or unwisely in the determination of the issue submitted. Such, of course, cannot be the rule. Failure to make an equitable apportionment of costs would constitute nothing more than error of judgment. Petitioner's contention, in short, is that, the telegraph line having been built and operated some 14 years prior to the construction of the power line, and the induction disturbances being caused by reason of the existence of such power line, ex proprio vigore prohibited the making of but one decision or order. Petitioner thus states its position:

"The only question before the court is whether or not 50 per cent. constituted just compensation, but we consider it necessary to explain the basis of our claim so that the court can see why we are entitled to the relief which we now ask. Our right is based on prior occupancy, and we will therefore discuss the rights of a prior occupant. The commission has decided that we are prior occupants, and entitled to relief, so that the question is not really before this court, but its discussion is necessary to understand our claim."

Again, the closing words of petitioner's written argument are in these words:

"That part of the order of the railroad commission requiring petitioner to pay one-half of the cost of relocating its own line should be annulled."

Thus it appears that petitioner does not take the position that the commission was without jurisdiction or authority to require it to relocate its lines at certain points in order to prevent the difficulties and dangers sought to be remedied for the reason and on the ground that it was first in point of time in the construction of its line, but insists that such priority gave it the absolute right to demand and receive the entire cost of the relocation of any portion of its line, if such should be the order of the commission, and under no possible set of circumstances would the commission be justified in awarding a lesser amount than the full amount of said costs. The question of priority was considered by the commission in making its apportionment of cost as between the companies affected, and its résumé of the situation follows:

"The method of dividing the cost between utilities whose lines are involved in a parallel, and which require reconstruction, relocation, or other changes, heretofore followed by this commission, has been to require the utility in whose plant any capital addition is made to bear the cost of that added plant, and that changes other than capital charges in either the power or communication circuits, including the cost of remedial measures, be paid for by the party creating the parallel and the cost resulting from the planning or determination of the necessary remedial measures to be paid for by the utility making the same.

"The evidence in this proceeding shows that both the power and communication circuits have been in operation for many years and long before the question of inductive interference was given serious consideration. Since that time changes have been made by both utilities in their circuits. In view of the history of the lines involved in this matter, it does not appear that the question of priority of construction should be given material weight in determining the responsibility of payment of costs resulting in the mitigation of interference."

[2] The departure by the commission from its own precedent or its failure to observe a rule ordinarily respected by it is made the subject of criticism, but our reply is that this is not a matter under the control of this court. We do not perceive that such a matter either tends to show that the commission had not regularly pursued its authority or that said departure violated any right of the petitioner guaranteed by the state or federal Constitution. Circumstances peculiar to a given situation may justify such a departure.

We are not here concerned with any monetary damages which may have accrued to petitioner against the power company because of the negligent or improper construction or maintenance of its circuit system. The commission did not have jurisdiction to adjudicate such an issue. The question germane to the commission's duty was whether the two companies could exist in their present location and perform public services under grant of the laws of the state with due regard to public efficiency and the safety of person and property. The commission undertook to exercise its power upon complaint by the petitioner in accordance with the provisions of section 36, Public Utilities Act.

It is to be kept in mind that at the time the power line was constructed possible induction interferences were not considered or thought of by the builders of either of said lines, and no serious inconveniences were felt until a number of years thereafter. The communication line, which from the begin-any purpose. This court, in the Bagley Case, supra, recognized that, notwithstanding the merger, the attachment lien still continued in existence and retained its identity for the purpose and with the effect of preserving the priority thereby acquired. But whatever may be the extent to which the attachment lien became merged with the judgment lien, or whatever may be the extent to which the former retained its separate existence and identity, there is no room for doubt, under the law as it now exists, that the lien of the judgment and the lien of the attachment were both terminated by the filing of the supersedeas bond. Section 671 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 141), provides:

"The lien [of the judgment] continues for five years unless the enforcement of the judgment be stayed on appeal by the execution of a sufficient undertaking as provided in this Code, in which case the lien of the judgment and any lien by virtue of an attachment that has been issued and levied in the action ceases."

[3-5] The italicized words were added to the section by the amendment of 1917. In a case arising under this section as it read prior to this amendment, Chief Justice Beatty in a concurring opinion argued with much force that the statute as it then stood did not expressly provide that the filing of a supersedeas bond discharges an attachment lien, and presented cogent reasons why it should not be construed as so providing by implication. Riley v. Nance, 97 Cal. 206, 31 P. 1126, 32 P. 315. However persuasive those reasons may have been, they seem to have been rejected by the Legislature, which has now made its intent plain beyond question that the filing of the supersedeas bond upon appeal from a judgment shall put an end to the attachment lien as well as to the judgment lien. Attachment liens are solely creatures of statute. They can be created and can continue to exist only in the cases and to the extent to which the Legislature by statutory enactment has authorized their creation and continued existence. We must conclude, therefore, that the attachment lien which the respondent is here seeking to have extended ceased to exist when the supersedeas bond was filed herein, and that there is now no lien in existence upon which an order for extension could operate. Section 542a does not empower the court to create a lien where none exists, nor to revive a lien which has ceased to exist. Respondent recognizes this, in that he reminds us in his brief that, unless an order extending the lien is made and filed prior to November 16, 1925, it will be ineffective. It follows that the motion must be, and it is hereby, denied.

1. Courts ☞212 — Attorney's application for readmission after disbarment is a "cause," which Supreme Court may transfer from District Court of Appeals.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that Supreme Court shall have power to order any cause pending before a District Court of Appeal to be heard and determined by Supreme Court, application of a disbarred lawyer for readmission is a "cause," which Supreme Court has jurisdiction to transfer from District Court of Appeal before or after decision therein for hearing and determination by Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Cause (In Practice).]

2. Attorney and client ☞61—Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, but not superior courts, have original jurisdiction of applications for restoration to practice after disbarment.

Notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 276, conferring exclusive jurisdiction on District Courts of Appeal to admit original applicants to practice law, Supreme Court, as well as District Courts of Appeal, has original jurisdiction over applications for restoration to practice after disbarment, but superior court is without such jurisdiction.

3. Attorney and client ☞61—On application for readmission after disbarment, question of bar examination discretionary with court.

All applicants for readmission after disbarment are not required to submit to re-examination as to their mental qualifications, as required in the case of original applicants by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 276-277, but question of re-examination by board of bar examiners should be left to sound discretion of court, and in a proper case the same procedure may be required as in the case of an original applicant seeking admission.

LAWLOR, J. Application for readmission to practice law in all the courts of this state.

The petitioner, Walter H. Stevens, was admitted to the bar of this state by the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District on January 10, 1911. It was not until March 1, 1912, however, that he first engaged in active practice. A grand jury on November 18, 1913, returned to the District Court of the United States, Southern Division of the Southern District of California, an indictment against him, charging a conspiracy to use the United States mails in a scheme to defraud—a felony involving moral turpitude. After a trial and conviction thereof he was, on September 7, 1915, sentenced to imprisonment for six months, and to pay a fine of $2,500. On June 14, 1917, the said District Court of Appeal entered an order of disbarment based upon the said conviction. Petitioner was discharged on December 8, 1917, having served the term of imprisonment. Since his discharge he has been in the employ of the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, and it was shown that during this employment he was promoted several times. On October 31, 1921, he was granted a pardon by the President of the United States "for the purpose of restoring his civil rights."

Petitioner, in March, 1922, filed a petition in the said District Court of Appeal for readmission as an attorney at law, which petition was denied. In re Stevens, 59 Cal. App. 251, 210 P. 442. In the year 1923 a similar petition was filed in the same court, and likewise denied. Id., 63 Cal. App. 682, 219 P. 1014. The present petition, with its supporting affidavits, was filed in the same court on April 10, 1924. An answer thereto was made by the respondent Los Angeles Bar Association, which, as stated by the petitioner, presented "an issue of law only." No counter affidavits were filed in opposition to the affidavits of petitioner "as to his recovered moral character and high standing as a man and worthy citizen." This petition was also denied in the said District Court of Appeal.

It is stated by petitioner that—

"The legal issue in this matter was raised in the answer of the Los Angeles Bar Association, in paragraph 2 thereof, as follows: 'That said applicant has not submitted to any examination conducted by the state board of bar examiners, has not satisfactorily, or otherwise, passed any such examination, nor has he satisfied said board as to his moral character, nor has any certificate been issued to nor has said applicant complied in any respect with the provisions of sections 276a or 277 of the Code of Civil Procedure.'"

Petitioner contends that—

"The Constitution of California, adopted in 1879, places no restrictions upon the judiciary of this state respecting the right to control the admission and licensing of persons to practice law in this state. In fact, as it was adopted, so it stands to-day, silent upon the question of how, when, or whom the court shall admit. Neither is there any restriction upon the court as to how, when, or whom it may readmit as an attorney and officer of this court, after disbarment for whatever cause. * * *

"A disbarred attorney, for whatever cause, still retains a right to apply to the court for readmission to practice, and, when he can produce satisfactory evidence to the court of his reformation, and general rehabilitated good name, character, and integrity, the court will hear him. * * *

"In the case at bar, there was in our judgment a clear case made on the affidavits submitted with the petition and in support thereof to have warranted the learned District Court of Appeal * * * in granting the prayer of the applicant, and we are of the firm conviction that said court must have been convinced of the satisfactory proofs offered, to justify an order of readmission as prayed for, and under all of our state decisions the only question before the court necessary to warrant it in granting the petition was the sufficiency of the evidence offered. Not finding any fault with our evidence, and lacking any evidence in opposition, the learned District Court of Appeal erred in denying the relief asked for."

We quote from respondent's brief:

"First. An attorney who has been permanently disbarred is relegated to the status of one who has never been admitted to practice law; and, to be readmitted to practice, must comply with the requirements of part I, title 5, chapter 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"Second. If the power exists to readmit a disbarred person to practice without formal compliance with said code provisions, the court may, and should, in its discretion, require reference to the board of bar examiners for examination as to mental and moral qualifications.

"Third. Neither applicant [referring also to In re Cate (Cr. 2734) 241 P. 95] has shown any such regeneration of character as to justify his admission to practice."

The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure covering original admissions to the bar read as follows:

"276. Qualifications for Admission as Attorney and Counselor. Every applicant for admission as an attorney and counselor must present to the District Court of Appeal of the Appellate District in which he resides satisfactory testimonials of good moral character, together with satisfactory proof that for at least three years he has diligently and in good faith studied law in such manner, upon such subjects and under such conditions as the Supreme Court or the board of bar examiners shall have prescribed. Before being admitted he must produce a certificate showing that he has satisfactorily passed an examination conducted by the board of bar examiners.

"Applicants must apply for admission to the District Court of Appeal of the Appellate District in which they reside; provided, that a person may make application and be examined and admitted in another appellate district upon filing with his application a written statement showing good cause therefor, satisfactory to the court to which he applies, accompanied by the written consent of the presiding justice of the appellate district in which he resides.

"276a. Board of Bar Examiners. Appointment. Examinations. Certificates. The Supreme Court is empowered to appoint three competent attorneys to examine applicants for admission as attorneys and counselors at law. Such persons shall constitute the board of bar examiners. The said board shall hold examinations for admission to the bar of applicants who have regularly filed their applications and paid all necessary fees, upon such subjects, and at such times and places as the Supreme Court or said board may, by its rules or orders direct; provided, that said examination shall be wholly or in part written examinations. The examinations may be conducted by two members of the board. Said board shall issue a certificate to each of said applicants who shall satisfactorily pass such examination and who shall satisfy said board as to his moral character. Nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the District Courts of Appeal from further examining any applicant where deemed proper. * * *

"277. Certificate of Admission. May Practice in all Courts. Upon presentation to it of the evidence required by section two hundred seventy-six, any district court of appeal shall admit the applicant as an attorney and counselor at law in all the courts of this state, and shall direct an order to be entered to that effect upon its records, and that a certificate of such admission be given to him by the clerk of the court, which certificate shall be his license. Every person admitted to practice by a District Court of Appeal, either upon examination or otherwise, may practice as an attorney in all of the courts of this state, including the Supreme Court; and every person now entitled to practice in the Supreme Court of this state may practice as an attorney in any District Court of Appeal.

"278. Oath. Every person on his admission must take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the state of California, and to faithfully discharge the duties of an attorney and counselor at law to the best of his knowledge and ability. A certificate of such oath must be indorsed upon the license."

Preliminarily we will consider the question suggested by the court at the oral argument as to whether or not the Supreme Court may entertain an application for hearing in said court in a proceeding of this nature where it arises in and is decided by a District Court of Appeal.

Section 4, article 6, of the Constitution provides in part:

"The Supreme Court shall have power to order any cause pending before the Supreme Court to be heard and determined by a District Court of Appeal, and to order any cause pending before a District Court of Appeal to be heard and determined by the Supreme Court.
* * *

In re Wells, 174 Cal. 467, 163 P. 657, was a proceeding brought by a committee of the Orange county bar association in the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District to set aside and vacate on the ground of fraud a previous order of said court admitting the accused to practice law in all the courts of this state on the presentation of a license to practice law in the state of Nevada. A demurrer and a motion to strike out the allegations of the petition were interposed, both sustained, and the petition dismissed. Within 60 days thereafter the said committee petitioned the Supreme Court for a transfer of the cause, and the application was granted. After hearing, this court denied the motion to strike out the petition, and ordered the demurrer overruled. The first question presented was whether or not this court had power to transfer and entertain such a proceeding. In construing the word "cause" found in section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution the court declared at page 472 (163 P. 659):

"The Supreme Court was given power in any matter decided by the District Court of Appeal to vacate the decision and order it transferred to its own calendar for rehearing and decision. To describe the decisions subject to this power the word 'cause' was selected. This was the word used in the clause of section 2 giving similar power over the department decisions, which, in that clause, as we have said, has been understood to apply to every matter that could be decided by a department. The familiar rule of construction requires that it be given a similarly broad meaning in the new provision, and to include every matter decided by a District Court of Appeal, and operating as a final decision or disposition thereof in that court. It is clear, therefore, that the power to transfer causes from the District Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, either before or after judgment in the District Court of Appeal, was intended to have this all embracing application." (Italics ours.)

[1] It follows that, this proceeding being a "cause" within the contemplation of the Constitution, this court has jurisdiction to transfer it from the District Court of Appeal before or after decision therein, for hearing and determination herein.

The history of the legislation bearing on the admission of applicants to practice law and the removal or suspension of attorneys and counselors at law may aid in the determination of the question of restoration herein involved. Neither the former nor the present Constitution has ever assumed to deal with any of these subjects.

Section 2 of an act of 1851 (Stats. 1851, p. 48) provided for an examination by a Supreme Court justice of applicants seeking admission to practice law in all the courts of the state. Section 4 thereof authorized the district and county courts to admit applicants to practice in their respective courts.

In 1872, when the Codes were adopted, section 276, Code of Civil Procedure, was made to cover the subject of admission to practice. It provided that an applicant "undergo a strict examination, in open court, as to his qualifications, by the justices of the Supreme Court." Thus it will be seen that by the adoption of the Codes the district and county courts were relieved of the power conferred by the above act of 1851. However, section 276, Code of Civil Procedure, was amended in 1874 (Stats. 1873-74, p. 404) so as again to confer on the several district and county courts the authority to admit applicants to practice in their respective courts. In 1880 the section was amended (Code Amendments 1880, p. 55) taking such power from those courts and vesting in the superior court authority to admit applicants to practice exclusively in that court. Again in 1895 (Stats. 1895, p. 56) the section was amended so as to divest the superior court of authority to admit applicants to practice in that court, and substituting in place thereof a proviso that not less than three of the Supreme Court commissioners, to be designated and appointed by the chief justice, may also examine applicants seeking admission to practice, reporting the results of the examinations to the Supreme Court for final action. By an amendment of 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 5) the authority to admit applicants to practice in all the courts of the state was and now is vested exclusively in the District Courts of Appeal created by the Constitution in the preceding year. In 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 906) an amendment to section 276, Code of Civil Procedure, provided that an applicant seeking admission to practice "must produce * * * satisfactory proof of having studied law for a period of at least two years, and undergo in open court a strict examination, a part of which must be in writing. * * *" This section was again amended in 1919, and section 276a, Code of Civil Procedure, added (Stats. 1919, p. 721), creating the board of bar examiners, and providing for their conduct of examinations for admission to the bar; the order of admission by the District Courts of Appeal being based on a certificate of the board certifying to the applicant's mental and moral qualifications.

It is to be noted that prior to the 1905 amendment of section 276, Code of Civil Procedure, the Supreme Court exercised exclusive jurisdiction in the admission of applicants to practice as attorneys and counselors at law in all the courts of the state.

The power to remove or suspend from practice attorneys and counselors at law was vested by section 13 of said Act of 1851 (Stats. 1851, p. 48) exclusively in the Supreme Court. Section 13 was amended in 1859 (Stats. 1859, p. 60) so as to also vest in the district courts the authority of removal or suspension.

By the adoption in 1872 of the codes, section 287, Code of Civil Procedure, contained a provision similar to said section 13, leaving the authority to remove or suspend attorneys and counselors at law in the Supreme Court and the district courts. The amendment of section 287 in 1880 (Stats. 1880, p. 57) transferred to the superior court the authority theretofore vested in the district courts. By the later amendment of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 848) the power of removal or suspension was also given to the District Courts of Appeal and ever since such authority has resided in the Supreme Court, the District Courts of Appeal, and the superior court.

As already indicated, respondent contends that an applicant seeking readmission to practice is in the same position as an original applicant seeking admission, and hence, to be readmitted, the provisions of sections 276, 276a, and 277, Code of Civil Procedure, must be followed. Since under these provisions the power to admit original applicants to practice is vested exclusively in the District Courts of Appeal, this contention is tantamount to a claim that all applications for restoration to practice must likewise be made to those courts. Upon this hypothesis we will now proceed to consider whether such authority is vested exclusively in the District Courts of Appeal. So far as our research has extended, the Legislature has never conferred such authority on any court. This being so, it is well to consider what the practice has been in this regard.

Prior to the creation of the District Courts of Appeal in 1904 the Supreme Court exercised jurisdiction over applications for restoration to practice. We cite, for instance, the following authorities: People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 143; Id., 1 Cal. 190; Fletcher v. Daingerfield, 20 Cal. 427; Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 293; Case of Lowenthal, 61 Cal. 122; Ex parte Tyler, 107 Cal. 78, 40 P. 33; and In re Treadwell, 114 Cal. 24, 45 P. 993.

Since the creation of the District Courts of Appeal, and up to the amendment of section 276, Code of Civil Procedure, in 1919 (creating the board of bar examiners), the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal have both assumed original jurisdiction over applications for restoration to practice. As illustrative of this practice see Matter of Paul A. Vincillione, the decision appearing only in the minutes of the Supreme Court under date of December 15, 1913; Matter of Shepard, 35 Cal. App. 492, 170 P. 442; and In re Thompson, 37 Cal. App. 344, 174 P. 86.

Upon this question we think it was never contemplated that the Supreme Court, a court of final jurisdiction in the state—which has from the beginning exercised original jurisdiction in such matters, and with which the Legislature has never interfered, either prior to or since the creation of the District Courts of Appeal—is without jurisdiction to entertain such applications or without authority to exercise a salutary control over the bar of the state.

[2] And while the Legislature did not, when amending section 276, Code of Civil Procedure, in 1905, confer exclusive jurisdiction on the District Courts of Appeal to admit original applicants to practice, nor when amending the said section in 1917 and 1919 include authority to entertain applications for restoration to practice after disbarment, still, those courts having for years been vested with exclusive jurisdiction to admit original applicants to practice, having authority to remove or suspend attorneys and counselors at law, and having entertained applications for restoration, their jurisdiction, in restoration proceedings can hardly be said to be open to question. It follows that the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal have, for the reasons advanced, original jurisdiction over applications for restoration to practice after disbarment.

Though the application herein was not made to the superior court, nevertheless the question whether it has jurisdiction to restore to practice after disbarment is necessarily involved by respondent's position indicated above—that such authority is vested alone in the District Courts of Appeal. So far as we are aware, it may be said that this question has been involved in three cases. In Re Wharton, 130 Cal. 486, 62 P. 741, a judgment of disbarment had been entered by the superior court, and an application was made in the Supreme Court to set it aside. This court declared:

"As the original proceedings for the disbarment were had and determined before the superior court, any application for a modification or change in its judgment should be made in that court."

The application in that case, it would appear, was in its essence a demand for restoration to practice after disbarment, for, if such application "to set aside the judgment" had been granted, the disability would have automatically disappeared. Apparently the authority of the superior court to restore to practice was not brought into question. Evidently the court regarded the proceeding as an application to modify or change the judgment rather than one for restoration, and what is said in the decision that such relief could only be afforded by the court which rendered the judgment must be interpreted in that light, and not as a decision that the superior court had or had not jurisdiction to restore to practice after disbarment.

In Danford v. Superior Court, 49 Cal. App. 303, 193 P. 272, it was declared that In re Wharton, supra, erred in holding that the application in that case was for a modification or change of the judgment of disbarment rather than an application for "admission." What was said by the court in that connection will, to avoid repetition of quotation, appear under the next and final point.

While we agree with the conclusion announced in Danford v. Superior Court, supra, that the superior court cannot restore a disbarred attorney to practice, yet we cannot accept the conclusion that the determinative factor is the lack of authority in that court to admit original applicants to practice, for we have shown that, notwithstanding the Supreme Court also lacks such authority, it may, nevertheless, entertain applications for restoration to practice

In re Hahn, 56 Cal. App. 702, 206 P. 473, involved an application by the district attorney of Los Angeles county in the superior court to set aside the "reinstatement" by that court of the accused attorney. The disbarment had also been entered by the superior court. The District Court of Appeal declared:

"The action of the district attorney was taken under the view that the superior court was without jurisdiction to make the order of reinstatement. The decisions in re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548, 179 P. 897, and Danford v. Superior Court, 49 Cal. App. 303, 193 P. 272, affirmed this view, and the superior court held that the judgment of disbarment was still effective."

What we have said concerning Danford v. Superior Court, supra, is equally applicable here.

In the absence of direct provision on the subject, and in view of the facts that the authority of the superior court to admit to practice was confined to its own forum, that it was divested of such authority 30 years ago, that the later legislative policy was to vest that jurisdiction exclusively in the District Courts of Appeal, and that the practice for years has uniformly been to present applications for restoration to practice to the Supreme Court or the District Courts of Appeal, the conclusion is inescapable that the superior court is without jurisdiction to entertain applications for restoration to practice.

We therefore hold that the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal have, but that the superior court has not, original jurisdiction to determine applications for restoration to practice of attorneys and counselors at law after disbarment.

We will now pass to the final and principal question whether applicants for restoration to practice must, as in the case of original applicants, submit to an examination as to their mental qualifications. In other words, may a disbarred attorney be restored to the right to practice upon the production of satisfactory testimonials of good moral character without the necessity of submitting to a re-examination? We do not find that this question has ever before been presented in this state.

Respondent, while contending that a disbarred attorney seeking restoration to practice is in the same position as an applicant seeking admission for the first time, states that—

"By section 276a, added in 1919, provision is made for the appointment of the bar examiners, and for the holding of 'examinations for admission to the bar of applicants who have regularly filed their applications.' * * *

[3] But sections 276, 276a, and 277, Code of Civil Procedure, are concerned only with the procedure to be followed in the case of an applicant seeking admission for the first time. None of these sections assumes to cover the case of a disbarred attorney seeking restoration of the privilege to practice. Nowhere is it in terms required that such an applicant must produce "a certificate showing that he has satisfactorily passed an examination conducted by the board of bar examiners. * * *

Since the addition of section 276a, Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the board of bar examiners, and up to the present time, the practice has been followed by the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal, in the exercise of original jurisdiction, of entertaining applications for restoration to practice after disbarment without requiring the applicants to submit to an examination as to their mental qualifications. In re Application of John S. Delancey, and In the Matter of Hatch, reported only in the minutes of the Supreme Court under date of August 9, 1920, and September 20, 1920, respectively; Danford v. Superior Court, 49 Cal. App. 303, 193 P. 272; Bar Association v. Cantrell, 53 Cal. App. 758, 200 P. 968; In re Hahn, 56 Cal. App. 702, 206 P. 473; In re Stevens, 63 Cal. App. 682, 219 P. 1014; In re O'Connell, 64 Cal. App. 673, 222 P. 625.

The authorities relied upon by respondent to sustain the claim that a re-examination is a prerequisite to the granting of an application for restoration to practice are In re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548, 179 P. 897, and Danford v. Superior Court, 49 Cal. App. 303, 193 P. 272. In the former the petitioner had been admitted to practice in this state by the District Court of Appeal upon his production of a license to practice issued by the Supreme Court of Iowa. His California license was subsequently revoked on the ground that he had concealed, at the time of his admission here, certain facts concerning his past life which, if they had been revealed, would have resulted in a denial of his application to be admitted to practice in the courts of this state. Subsequently upon an application for restoration to practice the District Court of Appeal found the evidence tending to show his reformation sufficient to warrant his name again being placed on the roll of attorneys. In denying an application for transfer, the Supreme Court declared in part:

"The application to the district court is not to be regarded as a motion to vacate the order previously made by that court revoking its original order admitting Mash to practice law. That order stands unaffected. His present application to that court is to be considered as an application for admission to the bar, either on examination in open court and 'testimonials of good moral character,' under section 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or for admission on production of a license from a sister state 'and satisfactory evidence of good moral character,' under section 279 of the Code of Civil Procedure. * * * The power to admit persons to practice law is now vested exclusively in the District Court of Appeal, and consequently it is to that court that the 'satisfactory evidence,' or the 'testimonials,' as the case may be, are to be produced, and it is for that court to determine whether they are sufficient to establish the moral character required. Such a decision is a finding upon a question of fact.

"Our functions in such a case are supervisory only. We have no original authority to admit persons to practice law. Hence we should not interfere with the decision of the District Court of Appeal upon such question of fact, unless the record and proceedings in that court show that an error of law led it to the decision, or that the evidence was either wholly insufficient to establish the good moral character of the applicant or so slight as to be grossly inadequate."

In Danford v. Superior Court, 49 Cal. App. 303, 193 P. 272, the petitioner had been disbarred by an order of the superior court for the county of Los Angeles. Subsequently the superior court, upon its own motion, and without notice to the Los Angeles Bar Association, ordered the accused "reinstated" to the practice of the law in the superior court. At a later date another judge, sitting in said superior court, set aside the order of reinstatement upon motion of the Bar Association of Los Angeles county. Notwithstanding this latter order, the petitioner held himself out as a practicing attorney; and appeared as such in the superior court for the city and county of San Francisco. Contempt proceedings were thereupon commenced against petitioner in that case, and he sought a writ of prohibition to restrain said superior court from entertaining said contempt proceedings. In denying the writ, the District Court of Appeal said at page 305 (193 P. 274):

"Assuming the power to disbar, the order of disbarment became final upon its affirmation by the Supreme Court. Thereafter no court had power to modify or set aside the order either upon motion or otherwise. An application for reinstatement of an attorney disbarred by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, made after the order of disbarment has become final, must be treated as an application for admission to practice and not as an application to vacate the order of disbarment. As such it must be addressed to the court having jurisdiction to admit an attorney to practice. In re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548 [179 P. 898].

"Since the amendment to section 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in 1895, the superior court is without jurisdiction to admit an attorney to practice in any court of the state. That power, at the time the order purporting to reinstate the petitioner was made, was, and now is, conferred exclusively upon the district courts of appeal. Hence the superior court in Los Angeles, being without jurisdiction to admit petitioner to practice, could not entertain an application for restoration after disbarment. * * *

"In the case of In re Wharton, 130 Cal. 486, 62 P. 741, there is language intimating that where the disbarment took place in the superior court the motion for reinstatement should be made in that court, but the error of the ruling in that case is that the court treated the motion for reinstatement as a motion to modify the judgment of disbarment rather than a motion for admission to the bar. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Re Mash, supra, the Wharton Case is not controlling. Treating the motion for reinstatement as a motion for admission to the bar, as it must be treated, it necessarily follows that such motion must be addressed to a court which has jurisdiction to admit to the bar. As the superior court had no power to admit petitioner to practice in any court, there can be no doubt that the order in question is void on its face for want of jurisdiction in the court."

A petition for hearing in the matter of Danford v. Superior Court, supra, was denied by this court.

It is clear that in re Mash, supra, is not authority on this question. The applicant in that case, it is true, sought "an order restoring him to the roll of attorneys and counselors at law entitled to practice in the courts of this state," but the opinion of the Supreme Court in denying the petition for transfer did not declare that an attorney who had been duly admitted to practice and was thereafter disbarred must, upon an application to be restored to the roll of attorneys, apply to the courts having exclusive jurisdiction over original admissions to the bar and submit to a re-examination as to his mental qualifications. On the contrary, it was put upon the ground that, as the applicant's license to practice law in this state had been obtained by fraud, he stood before the court as if he had never been admitted to practice, and it was upon that reasoning the conclusion was reached that the statutory procedure governing original applicants (sections 276-277, Code Civ. Proc.) must be pursued or he should proceed "for admission upon production of a license from a sister state 'and satisfactory evidence of good moral character,' under section 279 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

Although Danford v. Superior Court, supra, does declare that "an application for reinstatement of an attorney disbarred by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction * * * must be treated as an application for admission to practice and not as an application to vacate the order of disbarment" and that "as such it must be addressed to the court having jurisdiction to admit an attorney to practice, (in re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548 [179 P. 893])," nevertheless, it is lacking in authoritative force, for the reason that it is founded on In re Mash, supra, which, as we have shown, is not authority on the point. We have examined the petition for a transfer of the Danford Case to this court, and find it was urged that the decision of the District Court of Appeal was in error in holding that applications for restoration can only be entertained by the courts having jurisdiction to admit to practice. From this it may be contended that the principle was accepted by this court. But, as the remedy sought involved a question of jurisdiction only, it is conceivable that in the denial of the transfer the question was either not passed upon or deemed not controlling. It is also pertinent to consider that, under the rule governing applications for transfer from the District Courts of Appeal in cases properly appealable to those courts, the denial of the petition for transfer "is not to be taken as an expression of any opinion by this court, or as the equivalent thereof, in regard to any matter of law involved in the case and not stated in the opinion of that court, nor, indeed, as an affirmative approval by this court of the propositions of law laid down in such opinion." People v. Davis, 147 Cal. 346, 350, 81 P. 713, 720. Moreover, this court exercised jurisdiction in restoration proceedings in the Delancey and Hatch Cases, respectively, a short time before, and a few days after the decision in the Danford Case was handed down by the District Court of Appeal. We think it as reasonable to hold that in denying the petition for transfer in the Danford Case this court did not approve the holding on this point as it is to hold that it did, for, as above indicated, the general subject was before the court about the time the Delancey Case and the Hatch Case were considered.

The Danford Case holds, as already indicated, that an application for restoration must be treated as an application for original admission, and as such must be addressed to the court having jurisdiction to admit to practice in the first instance. Our conclusion is that the Danford Case is in error in two particulars—first, in holding that such an applicant is in the same position as one seeking original admission; and second, in declaring that this principle was laid down in the Mash Case. It follows that the implication of the Danford Case that the applicant for restoration to practice must submit to a re-examination is also erroneous. In any event, it is proper to say that we are not prepared, in the absence of legislative expression, to accept the conclusion that every applicant for restoration to practice must submit to a re-examination as to his mental qualifications. No adequate reason occurs to us for making the rule invariable. The law is interested in the regeneration of erring attorneys, and in the enforcement of a sound discipline its disposition ought not to be to place unnecessary burdens upon them.

In some cases, where it would be in the interest of justice to restore to his life work a disbarred attorney, and concerning whose grasp of the law there is no question, such a requirement would be unnecessary. On the other hand, cases may arise where it is apparent the applicant has not shown as an attorney that he possesses the requisite mental qualifications, and in such cases the rule contended for would be properly applied. In our opinion, the alternative rule proposed by the respondent that the question of a re-examination of the applicant by the board of bar examiners should be left to the sound discretion of the courts we hold to be the proper one, and in a case calling for such re-examination and restoration the same procedure may be followed as in the case of an original applicant seeking admission.

It has been shown that the applicant has sought "readmission" to practice. We have considered the case upon the hypothesis that an order of "suspension" operates automatically—that is to say, when the period of suspension has expired the attorney is ipso facto entitled to practice; that "reinstatement" and "restoration" apply to the case of a disbarred attorney who has by an order of court been returned to practice. And, while there may be an etymological distinction between the latter terms and "readmission"—the latter possibly importing re-examination—we have given to "readmission" the same import as "reinstatement" and "restoration."

It is ordered that the matter be transferred to the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

RICHARDS, J. (dissenting). I am in agreement in the main with the discussion and conclusions arrived at in the foregoing opinion, but I disagree with and dissent from that portion thereof wherein the suggestion is made that the District Court of Appeal, in the hearing of disbarment or reinstatement cases, may put in issue the mental qualifications or equipment of the practitioner seeking evasion or removal of the bar sinister, and may in its discretion refer the latter to the bar examiners for re-examination. No precedent has been cited, and I am satisfied none exists, for such a procedure. The question as to the mental qualifications in point of learning of one seeking admission to the bar is determined in the first instance by the procedure provided by statute for the ascertainment of these qualifications, and, once ascertained, and the license issued, the ability and the right of the holder of such license by virtue of the ascertained possession of these qualifications is not thereafter the subject of review. If in the course of his subsequent practice the attorney commits any unethical act which brings him under the penalty of disbarment, the procedure for the ascertainment of such wrongdoing and the order inflicting such penalty are predicated wholly upon the proofs of his subsequent misstep. The question as to the mental qualifications or equipment of the accused practitioner is in no wise involved in that inquiry, and could not, in fact, be considered by the tribunal investigating the case. Upon the application of the disbarred attorney for reinstatement, the question of his mental qualifications and equipment are equally beyond the scope of inquiry—the sole question being whether by his good conduct since his disbarment he has shown cause for restoration to his former position at the bar; whether the doctrine of locus penitentiae shall be applied to his case. To extend the inquiry so as to invest the tribunal making it with the power to require the applicant for reinstatement to submit to a re-examination as to his mental qualifications or equipment would be to deny, especially to elderly practitioners, the mercy to which their repentance and good conduct would otherwise entitle them, and to invest the tribunal authorized to extend such mercy with powers never heretofore exercised and liable to great abuse.

In the Matter of the Application of Clyde E. CATE for Reinstatement as an Attorney at Law. (Cr. 2734.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1925.)

In Bank.

Application for reinstatement. Transferred to District Court of Appeal for further proceedings.

Vincent B. Vaughan, of Los Angeles, for applicant.

Norman S. Sterry, Oscar Lawler, and Guy R. Crump, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Ass'n.

LAWLOR, J. The applicant, Clyde E. Cate, was, on June 14, 1912, admitted by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District to practice law in all the courts of this state. According to the petition of the applicant in the said District Court of Appeal an action was commenced against him in the superior court for Los Angeles county on April 23, 1918, charging applicant with the violation of the oath taken by him as an attorney and counselor at law, with violation of his duties as such attorney and counselor at law, and with the commission of acts involving turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption, and seeking his disbarment. On June 6, 1918, the said superior court entered its judgment disbarring the applicant.

This is the third application for reinstatement. The opinions in each of the two earlier applications will be found in Re Application of Clyde E. Cate, 54 Cal. App. 401, 201 P. 964, and In re Application of Clyde E. Cate, 60 Cal. App. 279, 212 P. 694, respectively.

The same questions are involved in this proceeding as in Re Application of Walter H. Stevens (Cr. 2747) 241 P. 88, this day decided, and upon the authority of that case, and for the reasons therein stated, it is ordered that the matter be transferred to the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2.

for further proceedings in accordance with the views therein expressed.

WORTH v. DOWNEY et al., City Trustees.
(Civ. 5095.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 25, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 23, 1925.)

1. Municipal corporations — 159(1)—Petition for recall election held to demand election of successors.

Petition for recall of members of city board of trustees, which, though not in precise words of St. 1911 (Ex. Sess.) p. 128, was in language broad enough to include statutory requirement, held to contain demand for election of successors to trustees sought to be removed.

2. Municipal corporations — 124(5)—Statute providing for recall of elective officers liberally construed.

St. 1911 (Ex. Sess.) p. 128, providing for recall of holders of municipal elective offices and election of successors, should be liberally construed, with view to promote purpose for which it was enacted.

3. Municipal corporations — 159(1)—Signers to petition for recall election need not add to signatures business.

Signers to petition for municipal recall election need not add to their signatures their business or occupation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Proceeding by John M. Worth against Frank M. Downey and others, as Trustees of City of Lynwood, for a writ of mandate to compel defendants to call recall election. From a judgment granting writ of mandate, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Oscar E. Winburn, Julius V. Patrosso, and C. C. Mishler, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Carl V. Hawkins and Jonah Jones, Jr., both of Long Beach, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Three petitions, asking for the recall of three members of the board of trustees of the city of Lynwood were filed with the clerk of said board of trustees. The trustees sought to be removed thereby were Frank M. Downey, Lars C. Anderson, and Charles F. Reed. These petitions were precisely alike, except as to the name of the trustee sought to be removed. That against Trustee Downey was as follows:

"Petition for the Recall of Frank M. Downey, Trustee of the City of Lynwood, California.

"To the President of the Board of Trustees of the City of Lynwood, California—Gentlemen:

"We, the undersigned qualified electors of the said city of Lynwood, California, pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the state of California, hereby petition your honorable board to take such proceedings as are therein provided to recall Frank M. Downey, trustee of the city of Lynwood, upon the following grounds, to wit: Frank M. Downey has failed to establish or maintain public confidence in himself as city trustee. He has not intelligently planned or successfully maintained our city's progress. He has been unable to properly grasp the present needs of the city of Lynwood, or vision its future. He has not the necessary training or experience required to properly manage the development of the city's growth.

"For the above reasons, believing that he has not made good as city trustee, and that his continuance in office will serve only to retard municipal progress, destroy civic harmony, discredit the laws and government of our city, and to nullify the sacrifice which members of the board of trustees are making in civic service, we petition the recall of Frank M. Downey."

Each of these petitions was certified as sufficient by the clerk of said board and submitted to said board of trustees. The board of trustees, however, refused to call any election under said petitions and this proceeding was instituted in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles for a writ of mandate to compel said board to call such election. Upon the trial of said action, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff therein, and from said judgment the defendants have appealed.

The only contention made by appellants, in support of their appeal, is that the petitions failed to comply with the requirements of the statute under which said proceedings were brought. It is conceded that the statute applicable thereto is that certain act entitled:

"An act providing for the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns, approved March 2nd, 1912." Stats. 1911 (Ex. Sess.) p. 128.

A portion of section 1 of said act is as follows:

"The holder of any elective office of any incorporated city or town may be removed or recalled at any time by the electors; provided, he has held his office at least six months. The provisions of this statute are intended to apply to officials now in office, as well as to those hereafter elected. The procedure to effect such removal or recall shall be as follows: A petition demanding the election of a successor to the person sought to be removed shall be filed with the clerk of the legislative body of such city or town, which petition shall be signed by qualified voters equal in number to at least twenty-five per cent. of the entire vote cast within such city or town for all candidates for the office which the incumbent sought to be removed occupies, at the last preceding regular municipal election at which such officer was voted for. * * *

It is further provided in said section that:

"If the petition shall be found sufficient, the clerk shall submit the same to the legislative body of the city or town without delay, whereupon, that body shall forthwith cause a special election to be held. * * *

At this election, the section further provides, the question of the recall of the officer sought to be removed, and the election of his successor shall be submitted to the electors of said city or town.

[1, 2] The objection most strongly urged by appellants, as to the sufficiency of said petitions, is that they do not contain "a demand for the election of a successor to the person sought to be removed," as required by the above section of said act. It is true that these precise words are not to be found in any of said petitions, but each of said petitions contains a request or demand that the board of trustees of said city take such proceedings as are provided by law for the recall of its officers. These proceedings, as will be noted by the above reference to said act, provide, among other things, for the election of the successor to the person sought to be removed, provided a majority of those voting on the recall of said officer, vote for his removal. The petitions, therefore, if not in the precise words of the statute, yet in language broad enough to include the statutory requirements, do contain a demand for the election of successors to the trustees which are sought to be removed. This is so for the reason that they asked that the board of trustees take all the proceedings provided by the statute for the removal of officers sought to be recalled. The statute under which these proceedings were instituted should be liberally construed with the view to promote the purpose for which it was enacted. Conn. v. City Council, 17 Cal. App. 705, 713, 121 P. 714, 719. No person reading these petitions would be under any misapprehension as to their meaning. They would readily understand therefrom that their purpose was to initiate proceedings for the recall of the persons named therein. Such officers could not be recalled, except by the election of their successors. This is not only the plain provision of the law, but it is a subject of such general understanding that no one, we think, could be heard to say that he was either misled or deceived as to the actual intent and purpose of the petitions.

[3] A further objection is made to said petitions, in that the signers thereof failed to add to their signatures their business or occupation. This question in our opinion has been settled by the rulings of our courts adversely to appellants' contention. Conn. v. City Council, supra; Locher v. Walsh, 17 Cal. App. 727, 121 P. 712; Osborn v. Board of Supervisors, 27 Cal. App. 85, 148 P. 970.

We are therefore of the opinion that each of said petitions substantially complies with the statute in question, and is therefore valid. It was the duty, therefore, of said board of trustees, upon the submission to them by the clerk of said board of said petitions, properly certified to be sufficient, to call an election, as provided by said statute.

In holding that these petitions are sufficient under the statute, we do not desire to be understood as commending them as models to be followed in proceedings which may hereafter be instituted under this or similar statutes, nor as approving the practice, employed in the drafting of these petitions, of departing so radically from the words of the statute. While in this case we believe the petitions to be sufficient, yet the extreme difference in their phraseology from that of the statute afforded a reasonable opportunity for a successful contest as to their validity. The result has been that the proceedings which they initiated have been long delayed, probably to the great annoyance and vexation, not only of the parties directly interested, but to the community involved. This litigation has also taken much of the time of the courts, now already greatly overburdened. All this could no doubt have been avoided had the petitions been drafted as near as practicable in the words of the statute.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GEORGE et al. (Cr. No. 1194.)

1. Criminal law ⚖️44—"Attempt" distinguished from preparation.

An "attempt" to commit crime as distinguished from intention, involves some overt act, and consists of some direct movement beyond mere preparation toward consummation of intended crime, but falling short of ultimate design, and is committed if the actual transaction has commenced which would have ended in the crime if not interrupted.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Attempt.]

2. Conspiracy ⚖️43(5)—Indictment or information need not allege attempt to commit offense.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 182, 184, an information or indictment for conspiracy need not aver an attempt to commit the crime which is object of conspiracy, but allegation of any overt act tending in some degree to effect such object is sufficient.

3. Conspiracy ☞27—Conspiracy is gist of statutory offense.

The common-law rule that the agreement is the gist of the offense of conspiracy is not changed by Pen. Code, §§ 182, 184, requiring proof of some overt act.

4. Conspiracy ☞43(5)—Indictment for conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses from insurance company held to sufficiently allege overt acts.

Indictment for conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses, alleging that defendants procured one of their number to be insured and then staged fictitious drowning pursuant to agreement to defraud insurer, held to sufficiently allege overt acts within requirements of Pen. Code, § 184.

5. Indictment and information ☞71—Indictment held not bad for uncertainty as to object of conspiracy.

Indictment for conspiracy to obtain money from insurance company by false pretenses that insured had accidentally drowned held not uncertain, in that it could not be ascertained therefrom whether defendants were charged with conspiracy to commit crime denounced by Pen. Code, § 532, or that denounced by section 549, but to clearly and sufficiently charge conspiracy to violate section 532.

6. Conspiracy ☞47—Evidence held to warrant conviction of conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses.

In prosecution for conspiracy to obtain money from insurance company by false pretenses that insured had been drowned, evidence of the formation of conspiracy held sufficient to warrant conviction.

7. Criminal law ☞823(4)—Instruction authorizing conviction for conspiracy without reference to overt acts held not error.

In prosecution for conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses, an instruction, that defendants were to be found guilty if jury were satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the alleged combination was formed, held not error, because not informing the jury as to necessity of proof of an overt act, where the uncontradicted evidence of overt acts was so complete that jury could not have found that overt act had not been committed and where other instructions properly covered the law as to overt acts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

W. N. George and others were convicted of conspiring to obtain money by false pretenses, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Wadsworth, Herman Mohr, and Bordwell, Mathews & Wadsworth, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, J. Defendant W. N. George and others were charged by indictment with the crime of conspiring to obtain money by false pretenses. All of the defendants except Hughes were convicted. Defendant George appeals from the judgment of conviction.

The indictment, shortened by the omission of formal matters and of allegations which are not material to the inquiry upon which we now embark, was in the following language:

"The said defendants John Dexter Wiley, Belle Wiley, W. N. George, and H. J. Hughes are accused * * * of the crime of conspiracy to obtain money and property by false pretenses, a felony committed * * * as follows, to wit: That * * * said defendants * * * did * * * conspire, * * * by divers unlawful, false and fraudulent representations and pretenses to obtain the sum of ten thousand dollars * * * from the Great Republic Life Insurance Company, a corporation, * * * upon the false and fraudulent representation and pretense to be made by the said defendants Belle Wiley and W. N. George to the said * * * company that the said John Dexter Wiley had been drowned and lost his life * * * by falling overboard from a boat into the waters of the Pacific Ocean, * * * and that the said Belle Wiley was entitled to receive said sum * * * from the said * * * company under a policy of insurance covering the life of the said John Dexter Wiley, * * * the said Belle Wiley being then and there the beneficiary named in the said policy of insurance. * * * That thereafter and in the course of the said conspiracy and in furtherance thereof, * * * the company through the said defendant W. N. N. George the said policy of insurance upon his, the said John Dexter Wiley's life, * * * with the said Belle Wiley named therein as beneficiary in the event of the death of the said insured, John Dexter Wiley. That thereafter and in the course of said conspiracy and in furtherance thereof * * * the said defendants John Dexter Wiley and W. N. George caused and induced one Joseph McAfee to agree to permit the * * * defendants * * * to allow them * * * to use * * * the said Joseph McAfee's boat known as the Catalina Flyer for the purpose of making a false, fraudulent and fictitious showing and representation to said * * * company that the said John Dexter Wiley had lost his life by falling overboard from said boat while said boat was cruising in the waters of the Pacific Ocean, * * * That thereafter and in the course of the said conspiracy and in furtherance thereof * * * the * * * defendants * * * procured for the said John Dexter Wiley a hat and a pair of colored spectacles for the use and purpose of fraudulently disguising and changing the appearance of the said John Dexter Wiley to assist the said John Dexter Wiley in getting away undetected from the scene of said false and fraudulent representation of drowning by the said John Dexter Wiley. That thereafter and in the course of the said conspiracy * * * the said defendants secured certain other clothing and wearing apparel of [for (?)] the said John Dexter Wiley and caused * * * the said defendants H. J. Hughes and W. N. George to wait at the harbor of San Pedro * * * with the said clothing and an automobile for the purpose of carrying and conveying the said John Dexter Wiley out of the * * * state of California for the purpose of hiding the identity of the said John Dexter Wiley and for the purpose of assisting the said John Dexter Wiley, Belle Wiley, W. N. George, and H. J. Hughes in effectuating and making the said false and fraudulent claim to the said * * * company that the said John Dexter Wiley had met his death as aforesaid. That thereafter and in the course of the said conspiracy * * * the said defendants John Dexter Wiley and Belle Wiley went upon the said boat of the said Joseph McAfee, * * * and that * * * said boat under the command of said Joseph McAfee shipped away ostensibly for the purpose of making a cruise around * * * [the] Island of Catalina. That thereafter and in the course of the said conspiracy, * * * while the said boat was on its said cruise, and at a point adjacent to the shore of said island of Catalina, * * * the said Belle Wiley did then and there falsely and fraudulently represent and pretend to the said Joseph McAfee and to the passengers on said boat that the said John Dexter Wiley had fallen overboard from said boat; and the said John Dexter Wiley did then and there falsely and fraudulently represent and pretend to the said Joseph McAfee and to the passengers on said boat that he had fallen overboard from said boat. That in truth and in fact the said John Dexter Wiley had not fallen overboard from said boat, but in truth and in fact did then and there falsely and fraudulently make the representation that he had fallen overboard from said boat and had immediately thereafter gone through a hatch in the said boat and to a lower deck and portion thereof and there disguised his appearance and hid himself. That thereafter and in the course of the said conspiracy * * * the said defendants John Dexter Wiley, Belle Wiley and W. N. George caused and procured the said Joseph McAfee and the engineer of said boat to proceed to the city of Avalon, at said island of Catalina, * * * and there put ashore the said John Dexter Wiley from the said boat while the same was anchored in the harbor of said Avalon and while the said John Dexter Wiley was then and there disguised as aforesaid. That thereafter and in the course of said conspiracy * * * the said defendants H. J. Hughes and W. N. George procured the clothes and wearing apparel of the said John Dexter Wiley and procured an automobile and thereafter * * * proceeded to the harbor of San Pedro * * * aforesaid, and there awaited the arrival of the said John Dexter Wiley to take him out of the * * * state of California for the purpose hereinabove stated. * * *

This pleading was demurred to and the demurrer was overruled. It is now contended that it should have been sustained.

Section 182 of the Penal Code provides, in part:

"If two or more persons conspire: * * * To cheat and defraud any person of any property, by any means which are in themselves criminal, or to obtain money or property by false pretenses or by false promises with fraudulent intent not to perform such promises, * * * they shall be punished in a certain manner."

Section 184 of the same enactment reads:

"No agreement amounts to a conspiracy, unless some act, besides such agreement, be done within this state to effect the object thereof, by one or more of the parties to such agreement and the trial of cases of conspiracy may be had in any county in which any such act be done."

These are the provisions which determine the question whether the indictment states a public offense. The specific question presented for our consideration is this: Does the pleading allege the commission of the overt act contemplated by the language of section 184?

It is insisted that in determining this question we may resort with profit to adjudications passing upon the sufficiency of indictments or informations which charge attempts to commit various crimes. It is said that the strength and stature of the present indictment may be measured accurately by the standards furnished by such adjudications, and as introductory to an examination of them appellant quotes the following from a noted text-writer:

"Two elements—each distinct from the other, and not commonly operating together, but each in its own separate class of cases, dominate the law of conspiracy. The one is combination, the other attempt. Thus— * * * In many circumstances, if two or more combine to do a wrong—whether as the means to something else or as the contemplated end—such mere combining more endangers or disturbs the community than would the executed wrong accomplished by the single will. This is the central idea in the law of conspiracy. * * * In other circumstances, there is no special evil in the combination, and its indictable quality does not consist in this linking of wills for wrong. Then the thing contemplated must be such as would be indictable if performed by one, and the conspiracy is punishable simply because it is an attempt. * * * We have already seen, in a general way, that to a certain extent conspiracy is a species of attempt. And— * * * The act of conspiring, and the specific intent to accomplish what constitutes a substantive crime, are in combination a criminal attempt, and it is the professional usage to term it a conspiracy. It follows the same rules, and is subject to the same limitations, as other attempts. * * * In attempt conspiracies—wherein the mischief does not lie specially in the combining, the wrong intended must be such as would be indictable if actually done by a single individual; and when it is such, the conspiracy is generally punishable." Bishop, New Crim. Law (8th Ed.) §§ 173, 191, 195.

"A conspiracy being an attempt to do something not yet accomplished, in reason the rule in other attempts applies to it. * * *"

Bishop, New Crim. Proc. vol. 2, § 207.

Respondent vigorously assails these views of Mr. Bishop, and we are thus brought to a consideration of some of the basic principles of the law of conspiracy, for if the celebrated author correctly states the law the indictment under which appellant was convicted falls far short of sufficiency. Granting that the quoted text is not obnoxious to the vigorous protest registered by respondent, it is evident that under the law of this state such conspiracies as that with which we have now to deal must fall within the class designated as attempts in the early part of the excerpts which we have culled from the book. If we take the portion of section 182 of the Penal Code which is set forth above, and add to it the terms of section 184, it is obvious, if also we concede that Mr. Bishop is right, that in this jurisdiction there is no "special evil"—no criminality—"in the combination." If he is right, the test is here met that "the thing contemplated must be such as would be indictable if performed by one." Also, then, "the conspiracy is punishable simply because it is an attempt," and the indictment must be viewed in the light of the law touching attempts. The eighth edition of Bishop's New Criminal Law, from which the greater part of the above quotations is made, was published in 1893. The ninth edition of the same work appeared in 1923—30 years later—and the text of the eighth is repeated verbatim in it. We have made no attempt to ascertain the state of the author's text upon the same subject in editions earlier than the eighth. Without that, the time is more than ripe for a condemnation of Mr. Bishop's language, if he is wrong. In order to ascertain whether he is wrong, we must determine whether, under statutory enactments similar to section 184 of our Penal Code, it was the legislative intent merely to fasten criminality upon several for the performance of acts which would be criminal as "attempts" if performed by one, or whether it was intended to make the test of criminality the performance of acts, as distinguished from the mere meeting of minds in the formation of a conspiracy, even if such acts, when measured by the law concerning attempts, were but acts of preparation and therefore not punishable.

It may be premised without the citation of authority that under the English law, from which, of course, our law of conspiracy is descended, the crime mentioned lay in the combination—in the mere meeting of the minds of the conspirators in an intent to embark upon an illicit enterprise. The requirement that an overt act must be committed in furtherance of a conspiracy before criminality will attach is an American innovation in the law of criminal conspiracy. Statutes inaugurating the innovation have been enacted by Congress and by the Legislatures of several of the states, including our own. We are therefore to inquire what was the basic object of the departure from the principles of the English law upon the subject, and of the law of the several states in which those principles still obtain.

[1] In order to lay a further foundation for the ascertainment of this basic object, and, further, in order to elucidate more fully certain general observations which we have made above, it is necessary to examine a little more closely into some features of the law of attempts as it exists in the jurisprudence of this state. This purpose will be sufficiently accomplished by the making of quotations from several cases:

"Between preparation for the attempt [to commit a crime] and the attempt itself, there is a wide difference. The preparation consists in devising or arranging the means or measures necessary for the commission of the offense; the attempt is the direct movement toward the commission after the preparations are made. To illustrate: a party may purchase and load a gun, with the declared intention to shoot his neighbor; but until some movement is made to use the weapon upon the person of his intended victim, there is only preparation and not an attempt. For the preparation, he may be held to keep the peace; but he is not chargeable with any attempt to kill. * * * The attempt contemplated by the statute must be manifest by acts which would end in the consummation of the particular offense, but for the intervention of circumstances independent of the will of the party." People v. Murray, 14 Cal. 159.

"Mere intention to commit a specific crime does not itself amount to an 'attempt' as that word is employed in the criminal law. There must, in addition to the wicked intent—the mens rea—be some act done toward the ultimate accomplishment of the proposed crime. But even such acts do not always of themselves amount to an 'attempt,' or to an offense of which human laws will take cognizance, for if they be but acts of preparation, however elaborate, our municipal law * * * would not assume to deal with them. For instance, the construction of the dynamite bomb by the prisoner at his home * * * with the deliberate intention on his part to employ it the next morning in destroying the lives and property of others, atrocious as it was, and indefensible in foro conscientiae, was but an act of preparation, and when perfected did not render him amenable to the municipal law, * * * or punishable by its rules." People v. Stites, 75 Cal. 570, 17 P. 693.

"If one deliver to his agent a false instrument with the design that the agent shall utter or pass it, the crime of uttering or attempting to pass is not complete until after some overt act done by the agent to this end, for, until this shall come to pass, in contemplation of law the paper is still within the control of the principal, and all the steps are but steps of preparation." People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44.

"An attempt to commit a crime is an endeavor carried beyond mere preparation but falling short of execution of the ultimate design. It is an act immediately and directly tending to the execution of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he had the power of carrying his intention into execution, and would have done so but for some intervening cause. The law recognizes a distinction between an intention to commit a crime and an attempt to commit such crime. An intention followed by no overt act cannot be punished." Ex parte Floyd, 7 Cal. App. 588, 95 P. 175.

"Generally speaking, the attempt, as distinguished from mere preparation, consists of some direct movement toward the consummation of the intended crime after the preparations have been made. * * * The difficulty generally is in determining the proximity of the overt act or acts to the complete accomplishment of the substantive crime. The acts proximately leading up to the consummation of the intended crime need not include the last proximate act for its completion. It is sufficient if the overt acts reach far enough toward the accomplishment of the intended offense to amount to the commencement of its consummation. That is to say, if the actual transaction has commenced which would have ended in the crime if not interrupted, there is an attempt to commit the crime." People v. Lanzit (Cal. App.) 233 P. 816.

These authorities, it will be noted, establish a clear line of distinction between mere acts of preparation, on the one hand, and those acts, on the other, which are more than merely preparatory and which rise to the dignity of actual attempts to commit crime. In ingrafting their innovation upon the principles of criminal conspiracy at common law, did American legislative bodies, in requiring the commission of overt acts before criminality attaches, contemplate the performance of acts which under the law of attempts would be merely preparatory, and therefore innocuous under that law, or did they intend that such overt acts should amount to criminal attempts? Did they, in other words, intend no more than that the law of conspiracy should be so altered that under it the law of attempts should be applied to conspiracies, that by means of the illicit concord of minds all the conspirators should be punished when the attempt was committed by all of them, or by any number less than all, and that short of actual "attempts" by some or one of them, none should be punished? Did they intend so to reframe the law that, again to quote from Bishop, "the conspiracy is punishable simply because it is an attempt"? It will be observed that an affirmative answer to the last two of these questions is to be based only upon the view that, in those jurisdictions in which an overt act is required before criminality appears, a drastic and revolutionary change has been effected in the law of conspiracy.

There are a few decided cases in which the courts, with a greater or less degree of explicitness and precision, have yielded assent to views similar to those of Mr. Bishop, and they have occasionally cited him. In one case the information failed to allege an overt act amounting to an attempt to commit a crime. In passing upon the sufficiency of the pleading the court said:

"An 'overt act' is one done to carry out the intent, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result. Whether a certain act was in pursuance of the conspiracy depends entirely upon what the conspiracy was, and upon whether the parties conspired to accomplish their purpose by the means alleged. Where a conspiracy to commit a crime is established, any act in pursuance of the conspiracy and to effect its object is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction in the county where the act was committed. It is said that a conspiracy to commit a particular crime is essentially of the nature of an attempt to commit the crime."

Portions of the text which we have above set forth from Mr. Bishop's work were then quoted, along with statements substantially to the same effect from Wharton's Criminal Law. The court then said further:

"An attempt to commit a crime can only be made under circumstances which, had the attempt succeeded, would have constituted the substantive offense." Williams v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 217, 182 P. 718.

In another case the following appears:

"It is well settled that the unlawful agreement is the gist of the conspiracy. The unlawful agreement, however, does not become the basis of an indictable offense till one of the parties to such agreement takes a step in furtherance of the execution of it. It is therefore essential, where there is a charge of conspiracy which requires an overt act to be done in execution of it, in order to make the conspiracy indictable, that such overt act should be set out in the indictment. It is not necessary to constitute the offense that it should appear that the object of the conspiracy was attained; a step taken in that direction by one of the parties to the agreement is sufficient. An indictable conspiracy is in its nature an attempt to commit an offense. 2 Bish. on Cr. Law (5th Ed.) par. 191." State v. Hemmendinger (N. J. Sup.) 126 A. 544.

Although we shall see later that the general trend of decision in the United States courts is to the contrary, one or two of those tribunals have put forth language similar in effect to that employed in the two opinions of the state courts from which quotation has just been made. In a case in which the defendants were charged with a conspiracy to defraud certain corporations which were engaged in a mail order business, a federal district judge said in his instructions to the jury:

"It seems to me that an overt act must be an act which has a tendency at any rate to carry out the object of the conspiracy, or in some way tends to make it effectual. It may not be sufficient of itself to complete the offense, but it should have a tendency to do so.

I do not imagine that any letter which could have no tendency to mislead the corporations which are the alleged victims could be claimed to be an overt act at all. It must be an act having a tendency to effectuate the object of the conspiracy." U. S. v. McLaughlin (D. C.) 169 F. 302.

From the viewpoint of the question here to be decided, this language is not clear, but it seems to import that an overt act must be more than an act of preparation, as that term is understood when applied to the law of criminal attempts. This view is strengthened by other language contained in the judge's charge to the jury. Another judge of the United States District Court has said that—

"A conspiracy to commit an offense, and an act done in pursuance and to effectuate the object thereof, may easily, if it does not necessarily, comprehend an attempt to commit the crime as to which the conspiracy relates." U. S. v. Rachmil, 270 F. 869.

These are all the cases which, so far as we can discover, either directly or indirectly, adopt the view of Mr. Bishop that an overt act under the law of conspiracy must partake of the nature of a criminal attempt. We now turn from them for the purpose of exhibiting the reverse side of the shield.

We doubt whether State v. Hemmendinger, supra, states the law of New Jersey upon the question now under discussion, although we shall not attempt here specifically to resolve the doubt, but shall leave the question to the tribunals of that state, where, of course, it belongs. Certainly, earlier views of the courts of the jurisdiction, expressed in opinions which are not noticed in State v. Hemmendinger, are at war with the attitude assumed in that case. The following dictum appears in an early case:

"[An] overt act may or may not be in itself criminal. The conspiracy is the crime, and the overt act bringing it within the requirement of the statute, may be a very insignificant affair. A completed crime is shown on the record before us by the averment of a criminal conspiracy, and the averment of the doing of anything, no matter what, in furtherance of it. * * *" State v. Young, 37 N. J. Law, 184.

The italics in the quotation are ours.

In another case the Supreme Court of New Jersey, in passing upon a charge of conspiracy, determined that the indictment sufficiently alleged the commission of an overt act, although under the law of criminal attempts the act so characterized would have been a mere act of preparation. The indictment charged that the defendants had conspired to unlawfully and corruptly procure certain persons to vote at an election in a certain election district knowing them not to be qualified electors of the district. The court said:

"The overt acts pleaded are that the defendants in pursuance of their conspiracy, aided and abetted the disqualified persons, whom they had conspired to have vote, to falsely register their names, or the names of others, on a certain registry list, as persons qualified to vote. It is * * * said that there is no charge that such persons voted or offered to vote * * * If there was a design to procure a disqualified person to vote, followed by an overt act in pursuance of that design, the conspiracy was complete, although for some reason its purpose failed and the person did not actually vote. * * * Respecting the essential act in execution of the joint design required by the statute, we think that the registration is such a step in the assertion of the right to vote, and in the equipment of the person asserting the right, with the privilege of voting, that where there is a design to vote fraudulently, then a fraudulent registration is an act taken in the execution of that purpose. It follows that the aiding and abetting in the false registration of W. B. was an overt act in carrying into execution the design to procure W. B. to vote at the following election." State v. Nugent, 77 N. J. Law, 84, 71 A. 485.

At least one decision of the courts of New York casts some light upon the question which now engrosses our attention. The case (People v. Miles, 123 App. Div. 862, 108 N. Y. S. 510, affirmed 192 N. Y. 541, 84 N. E. 1117) is principally noteworthy because the decision rendered is in some measure based upon the language of the New Jersey court in State v. Young, supra.

By far the greater body of the law upon the question now before us is to be found in the decisions of the United States courts. As already hinted, it will be seen that their trend is not in accord with the general expressions contained in the opinions in U. S. v. McLaughlin, supra, and in U. S. v. Rachmil, supra. In a number of the federal cases, without particular reasons being given for the result, charges of the commission of overt acts have been held to be sufficient where, apparently in some instances, certainly in others, the acts would have been nothing more than acts of preparation under the law of criminal attempts. Those cases are U. S. v. Sanche (C. C.) 7 F. 715; Daly v. U. S., 170 F. 321, 95 C. C. A. 107; Donaldson v. U. S., 208 F. 4, 125 C. C. A. 316; U. S. v. Burke (D. C.) 218 F. 83; Witte v. Shelton, 240 F. 265, 153 C. C. A. 191; Gretsche v. U. S., 242 F. 897, 155 C. C. A. 485. There are also, however, cases in which the courts have gone further than merely to uphold charges of that nature. The first of these, so far as our research has enabled us to discover, was decided as early as 1873. The court concluded its opinion thus, italics being ours:

"If, then, an indictment correctly charges an unlawful combination and agreement as actually made, and, in addition, describes any act by any one of the parties to the unlawful agreement, as an act intended to be relied on to show the agreement in operation, it is sufficient, although, upon the face of the indictment, it does not appear in what manner the act described would tend to effect the object of the conspiracy. It is sufficient, if the act be so described as to apprise the defendant what act is intended to be given in evidence as tending to show that the unlawful agreement was put in operation, without its being made to appear to the court, upon the face of the indictment, that the act mentioned is necessarily calculated to effect the object of the unlawful combination charged. It is not the case of an attempt to commit crime. The crime is committed when the combination is made, and the act of one of the conspirators is not required by the statute to show the intent. That is inferred from the unlawful act of combining to defraud, or to commit an offense, but the object of requiring proof of some act in furtherance of the unlawful agreement is, to show that the unlawful combination became a living, active combination." U. S. v. Donau, Fed. Cas. No. 14,983.

This pioneer adjudication has been cited and followed in U. S. v. Benson, 70 F. 591, 17 C. C. A. 293; Gantt v. U. S., 108 F. 61, 47 C. C. A. 210; U. S. v. Greene (D. C.) 115 F. 343; Ex parte Black (D. C.) 147 F. 832; U. S. v. Shevlin (D. C.) 212 F. 343; Collier v. U. S., 255 F. 328, 166 C. C. A. 498. Two of these cases made substantial addition to the language employed in the opinion of U. S. v. Donau.

"The policy of Congress was, not to introduce a new element into the crime, but to allow a period of grace, an opportunity for repentance, after the plot had been perfected, and before any decisive act had been done in furtherance of it. Therefore, the courts are required to differentiate sharply between the agreement per se [italics ours] and acts in furtherance of the agreement." Ex parte Black.

"To complete the crime denounced by the statute there must be some action in addition to the mental one of jointly agreeing or assenting to participate in the commission of the crime. Nothing in the language of the statute indicates an intention to require that that additional action be calculated or have a tendency to accomplish the object of the conspiracy. It is enough if it is done with the purpose or intention of putting the unlawful agreement into operation, whether it is or is not effective towards that end." Collier v. U. S. The italics are ours.

We have now given the result of our research among the adjudications of outside jurisdictions which touch upon the question here under scrutiny. If we turn to the opinions of our own courts we find nothing which materially aids us in our quest. In People v. Daniels, 105 Cal. 262, 38 P. 720, it happened that the overt act alleged and proved amounted to an attempt to commit the crime which was the object of the conspiracy. People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44, is not a conspiracy case. Both People v. Johnson, 22 Cal. App. 362, 134 P. 339; and People v. Cory, 26 Cal. App. 735, 148 P. 532, relate to phases of the law concerning overt acts in conspiracy cases, but neither of them touches the present question. In People v. Beck, 60 Cal. App. 417, 213 P. 61, the overt acts alleged apparently would have been nothing more than acts of preparation under the law of attempts. The allegations were held to be sufficient, but the specific question now under investigation was not discussed. The overt act charged in People v. Rodriguez, 61 Cal. App. 69, 214 P. 452, was an attempt to commit the crime contemplated in the formation of the conspiracy. People v. Silbello, 61 Cal. App. 92, 214 P. 462, was a companion case with People v. Rodriguez.

It becomes material now to examine the statutes of other jurisdictions making necessary the commission of overt acts in conspiracy cases before criminality will attach, in connection with section 184 of our Penal Code. The latter enactment, it will be remembered, provides:

"No agreement amounts to a conspiracy, unless some act, beside such agreement, be done * * * to effect the object thereof. * * *"

The statute of Oklahoma (Rev. Laws 1910, § 2234) is to the effect that "the crime of conspiracy to commit a felony or misdemeanor is not complete 'unless some act besides such agreement be done to effect the object thereof. * * *'" Williams v. State, supra. The New Jersey enactment (Revision 1877, p. 261) provides in part, that "no agreement to commit any offense other than [certain designated ones] shall be deemed a conspiracy unless some act in execution of such agreement be done to effect the object thereof. * * *" Wood v. State, 47 N. J. Law, 180. The cognate section of the Penal Code of New York (section 171) is to this effect:

"No agreement except to commit [certain specified crimes] amounts to a conspiracy, unless some act besides such agreement be done to effect the object thereof. * * *" People v. Miles, supra.

The enactment upon which most of the decisions of the United States courts are based, although some of them relate to special statutes concerning the law of conspiracy, reads, in part:

"If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States * * * and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable. * * *" Rev. Stats. U. S. § 5440 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10201).

Two of these foreign enactments, those of Oklahoma and New York, are practically identical with section 184 of our Penal Code. It requires no extended examination or argument to justify the assertion that the other two, those of New Jersey and the United States, although couched in somewhat different language, are not different from ours in legal effect. All of the cases which we have cited are therefore in point and we may follow that one of the opposing lines of decision which appears to us to be in accord with the better reason.

[2] It is plainly apparent from the list of cases we have spread upon the foregoing pages that the weight of authority is to the effect that, in pleading an overt act under the law of conspiracy, an information or indictment need not aver an attempt to commit the crime which is the object of the conspiracy and that the text of Mr. Bishop, and perhaps of other law writers, to the contrary, is unjustified and incorrect. Does the better reason lie in the same direction? Before proceeding to a line of argument which to our minds positively demonstrates the necessity of an affirmative answer to the question, we shall pause to consider the language of section 184 of the Penal Code, which seems to lead to the same end. That enactment, with a resort to italics, provides that no agreement "amounts to a conspiracy, unless some act, beside such agreement" be done to effect the object of the agreement. With these words before us, it seems extremely doubtful that the "some act" required by the law to stamp the agreement with criminality must be an attempt to commit the offense contemplated by the conspirators. The overt element of the crime, in so far as it is an element therein, is not to be merely "some" act, but it must be, as well, an act "beside" the agreement. Does not this concatenation of words indicate a legislative intent merely to distinguish, or to draw a line, between the mental activity evident in the meeting of the minds of the conspirators and the first outward manifestation of an intent to put into operation their concord upon the illicit purpose of the conspiracy—their first "act"? The fact that the overt act must tend to "effect the object" of the agreement does not interfere with an affirmative answer. Every act of the conspirators in and about the subject-matter of the conspiracy, even an act which under the law of criminal attempts would be but an act of preparation, must in some degree tend to effectuate the object of the illicit enterprise. In truth, the meeting of the minds of the conspirators, even if strictly not an act, tends toward the consummation of the unlawful purpose. It is the first step, the first movement, taking both these words in a figurative sense, toward the object of the wrongful concord. The situation is this: The meeting of the minds is a mental phenomenon. The overt manifestation must be physical. It seems to us that there is great reason, from the very language of section 184, for adopting the view that the Legislature intended to draw a line between the mental phenomenon exhibited in the formation of the agreement and the first nonmental, the first physical and therefore the first outward, manifestation by any conspirator of the will to put the illicit purpose of the conspiracy beyond the terms of thought and into terms of action—to make it, in the language of one of the United States courts, "a living, active combination."

[3] We come now to what we deem a controlling and conclusive consideration in the solution of the question to which we have given such extended attention. If the position of appellant, based upon the text of Mr. Bishop, be a tenable one the law of conspiracy becomes a dead letter, as an effective instrumentality for the punishment, as conspirators, of those who engage in unlawful combinations. This is a startling statement. We must at once explain its meaning and establish its truth. It is evident that under the terms of section 184 of the Penal Code the agreement or combination is the gist of a criminal conspiracy. The negative mandate of the section, if we may employ a contradiction of terms, that "no agreement amounts to a conspiracy" unless an overt act be performed in furtherance of it, must surely, when an overt act is performed, resolve itself into the affirmative that the agreement thereupon amounts to a conspiracy. This view is in accord with the law in the jurisdictions generally in which the performance of an overt act is necessary to fasten criminality upon those who conspire to consummate a forbidden purpose. At common law the combination was the gist of the conspiracy. Under the authorities the situation is not changed by statutes requiring the performance of an overt act in order to complete the crime. The agreement is still the gist of the offense. The decisions of the United States courts upon this particular point, a few of which are among those cited above, but many more of which are not cited, are uniform in their effect. With the adoption of appellant's view all this is changed. It is not too much to say, as we have already said, that the law of conspiracy, properly so called, then practically disappears. The requirement that there be an overt act is no longer an innovation in the law of conspiracy. It but works an extension of the law of attempts and makes operative an innovation in that law. The attempt becomes the gist of the offense contemplated by the change in the law and the attempt is the real crime. Therefore, strictly speaking, the combination or agreement is no longer a conspiracy in the older sense, but is merely a means provided by law whereby a group of individuals may be so tied together that they all may be punished for a plain and ordinary "attempt" committed by any number of them less than all. Such is the effect—not only the effect, but the indubitable meaning—of the statement of Mr. Bishop that "the conspiracy is punishable simply because it is an attempt." We cannot perceive that the Legislature has employed language apt to work such a result. We are convinced that the better reason accompanies the weight of authority upon the question now under examination.

[4] We are therefore satisfied that the indictment before us is amply sufficient in the face of the attack upon it with which we have dealt. Many "acts" are charged in it, following the allegation that they were done after the illicit combination "and in the course of said conspiracy and in furtherance thereof." These acts are, in part, at least, the taking out of the insurance policy; the procuring of the boat, the Catalina Flyer, from McAfee; the procuring of the garb with which to disguise Wiley; and the embarkation upon the Catalina Flyer. We are satisfied that these allegations, taken together, and without pointing to any one act which is alleged, as distinguished from the remainder, meet completely the requirements of section 184 of the Penal Code.

[5] It is contended by appellant that the indictment is uncertain in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether the defendants were charged with a conspiracy to commit the crime denounced by section 532 of the Penal Code, or to commit the crime punishable under section 549 of that enactment. The demurrer to the indictment presented only the general ground. It is therefore extremely doubtful whether the point now urged is properly before us, but we do not decide that particular question. The penalties prescribed by the two sections mentioned are different and, therefore, if there be such an uncertainty in the indictment as that which is claimed to exist the substantial rights of appellant are affected by it. For that reason, and because the attorney-general has joined issue with appellant in argument of the question suggested, we shall for the purposes of this case, only, concede that it is properly before us and shall decide it. The point presented is one of substantial moment. Section 182 of the Penal Code "denounces the crime of conspiracy to commit particular offenses, and indictments under it must be so framed as to point out the separate offense which persons are charged with conspiring to commit." People v. Barnard, 63 Cal. App. 562, 219 P. 756. Section 532 of the Penal Code reads, in part:

"Every person who * * *, by any false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defrauds any other person of money, * * * and thereby fraudulently gets possession of money * * *, is punishable * * *"

Parts of section 549 are as follows:

"Every person who presents * * * any false or fraudulent claim, or any proof in support of any such claim, upon any contract or policy of insurance * * * for the payment of any loss, or who prepares, makes or subscribes any account, * * * proof of loss, or * * * writing, with intent to present or use the same * * * in support of any such claim, is punishable. * * *"

A brief survey of the indictment will convince that it charges a conspiracy to violate the provisions of one of these sections and not of the other; in fact, that there is nothing substantial in it to indicate a purpose to base the charge upon the terms of that other. Viewed as a pleading founded upon section 532, it will be observed that the indictment charges a conspiracy "to obtain money and property by false pretenses * * * as follows, to wit: That * * * said defendants * * * did * * * conspire, * * * by divers unlawful, false and fraudulent representations and pretenses to obtain the sum of ten thousand dollars * * * upon the false and fraudulent representation and pretense" that John Dexter Wiley had been drowned and that Belle Wiley was entitled to receive the sum mentioned as proceeds of the policy of insurance which had been issued. Then follow the allegations showing the various things done pursuant to the conspiracy, including the following: That two of the conspirators induced McAfee to allow them to use the Catalina Flyer "for the purpose of making a false, fraudulent and fictitious showing and representation" that Wiley had been drowned; that several things were done for the purpose of assisting the conspirators "in effectuating and making the said false and fraudulent claim to the" insurance company that Wiley had been drowned; that during the cruise of the Catalina Flyer Belle Wiley did "falsely and fraudulently represent and pretend" to those on the boat that Wiley had fallen overboard; and that Wiley then made the same false and fraudulent representation and pretense. Viewed as an effort to charge a conspiracy to violate the provisions of section 549 the indictment is barren. The most that can be said of the pleading on that head is that in it the word "claim," a word also found in section 549, is employed. That circumstance, considering the manner and the connection in which the word is used, is utterly insufficient to make it a charge founded upon that section. Taking the indictment as a whole, it appears to us plainly, singly and with certainty to charge a conspiracy to violate the terms of section 532. There is nothing in it which could have misled appellant to the view that the charge was based upon section 549.

[6] It is contended that at the trial there was no evidence of the formation of the conspiracy. On the contrary, however, the evidence of the conspiracy was unusually full and complete. It is often difficult to make proof of the formation of the unlawful combination in conspiracy cases, but that difficulty was not experienced in any marked degree in the present instance. There was ample evidence from which the jury was justified in finding that the following was the sordid story of the unusual and bizarre crime charged in the indictment: Appellant, introducing himself under the assumed name of Spear, opened negotiations with McAfee for the use of the Catalina Flyer and for the services of McAfee himself, who was the captain of the boat, in the consummation of the illicit enterprise. The pretended Spear, after a preliminary and introductory exchange of remarks, asked the captain if he desired to make $2,000 easy money. The skipper inquired how he could enrich himself to that extent. Appellant then said that he was connected with an insurance company, that he had a party who was insured, and that, to quote McAfee, "he [the insured] wanted to go around the island with me on my boat and pull off a fake drowning, and with my reputation there," McAfee having lived on the island of Catalina for eighteen years, "if I reported him as drowned, you know, the money would be paid in the neighborhood of forty-eight hours after the case was taken into their office, and that after the money was paid from the insurance company that I would be paid $2,000 in Liberty Bonds." McAfee said he would think the proposed plan over. The two had dinner together on the evening of the day of this first meeting, when McAfee says that appellant "continued his talk on what the case would be, in regard to having a man that he had insured, and the man apparently would fall overboard." During this second conversation appellant referred to the insured man as one Cameron. Appellant said to McAfee that he would take up the matters they had talked about with Cameron. McAfee later had conversations with appellant and Wiley together, but in the meanwhile McAfee had made the authorities acquainted with the pending plot, and it was arranged that he should appear to fall in with the plans of appellant and Wiley and that he should apparently aid in the monstrous scheme to defraud the insurance company. From that time forward the conspiracy proceeded under the surveillance of officers of the law. At the conversations between the appellant, Wiley, and McAfee, details were arranged for the carrying out of the plot. Mrs. Wiley, who has not yet appeared in this story of the unfolding of the plot, was to play an important part in the consummation of the plan, under the arrangement made by the three men. We shall not describe the plan, but shall proceed to relate what was done pursuant to it, as McAfee testified that it was carried out as contemplated. It is well to say here, by way of interpolation, that during the conferences between the three men appellant and Wiley disclosed to McAfee their true names. Some days before Wiley was to be "drowned" he and McAfee went to sea in the latter's boat and put on a "dress rehearsal" of the prospective descent of Wiley into a watery grave. Finally, and after all these preliminaries, the great day arrived. The stage was set, the actors were in their places, and the calcium threw its spot on the scene of histrionic endeavor. Even an "audience" was present, for the Catalina Flyer was an excursion boat and the general public was not on this occasion denied the right to partake of the joys of the cruise. Some of the audience knew that the trip was to be enlivened by the production of a "farce," to lapse again into the language of the "boards," for several detectives, thoroughly interested "first-nighters," were in the loges and boxes. Appellant was also present at the "production." All that now occurred followed closely the "script" of the play, as composed by Messrs. George, Wiley, and McAfee. A number of the excursionists, including Wiley and his wife, were on the forward deck of the boat, when McAfee ordered them all aft and below. This was done for the alleged reason that the weather had become so rough as to make the position of the forward passengers dangerous. All obeyed the order, but Mrs. Wiley left behind her a purse which she had been carrying. When all the forward passengers were settled aft, Mrs. Wiley conveniently "discovered" that the purse was missing. She exclaimed that she had left it forward and rushed to obtain it. She was accompanied by her husband, who, like the redoubtable Dick Deadeye in "Pinafore," another epic of the sea, was vigilant to aid "a female in distress." When the leading man and the leading woman reached their position up stage, Wiley threw overboard two chairs, the purse, and a straw hat which he had worn and which had the initials of his name inside it. But Wiley did not himself plunge into the raging main. Not he! The "drowning" was not to approach that near to realism. Instead, he plunged down the forward hatchway, which had been left open for the purpose, and hid himself in the forward part of the vessel. The other actors in the drama proceed with their parts. Mrs. Wiley runs aft in tears, actual or apparent, calling out that her husband has fallen into the sea. McAfee yells "Man overboard!" and "brings to" the boat. They cruise about the spot for a time, to the accompaniment of the lamentations of Mrs. Wiley—and McAfee says she played well her part—and amid the great confusion which reigns among the passengers; but as they have the "body" of Wiley with them they do not find it in the water. They do, however, fish out the initialed hat, as mute evidence of this latest catastrophe of the sea! After a time the boat returns to Avalon, the port of Catalina island, apparently Wileyless. The passengers, no male Wiley among them, are put ashore in a small boat. Mrs. Wiley is cared for in the hour of her bereavement by some of the kindly disposed passengers, and they eventually escort her to the mainland. After the coast is clear, McAfee returns to the Catalina Flyer and takes off Wiley in disguise. That individual also proceeds to the mainland, where he finds appellant awaiting him. There they are both put under arrest. Could there have been plainer proof that appellant and Mr. and Mrs. Wiley had conspired as charged in the indictment? If there could be plainer proof, it was not necessary. There was enough. It was, of course, proved, in addition to what is above set forth, that the insurance policy was taken out as charged, that the life of Wiley was insured under it, and that Mrs. Wiley was the beneficiary.

[7] It is contended that the trial court erred in giving an instruction to the jury to the effect that the defendants were to be found guilty if the jury was satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the illicit combination was formed, for the reason that the particular instruction did not inform the jury as to the necessity of proof of an overt act. There are two answers to this objection: (1) Other instructions which were given by the court properly covered the law as to overt acts; (2) the uncontradicted evidence was so complete upon the subject of overt acts that the jury could not have found that no overt act was committed.

Various other points are made by appellant. They are, however, answered by what we have already said, or they fall of their own weight. It is particularly to be noted that the error of Mr. Bishop, doubtless justifiably concurred in by appellant's counsel, runs through and colors most of the questions presented upon the appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

STRONG v. OLSEN et al. (Civ. 5261.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Oct. 3, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 30, 1925.)

1. Carriers $\S$ 347(6)—Evidence of contributory negligence of one riding on outside of bus held properly submitted to jury.

In action for injuries received by passenger of automobile bus, evidence showing that plaintiff had been riding outside on fender, though there were vacant seats inside of bus, held properly submitted to jury on question of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

2. Carriers $\S$ 348(5)—Instruction that, if jury found that, if plaintiff had ridden inside of bus instead of outside, he would not have sustained injuries, verdict must be for defendant, held proper.

In action for injuries received by passenger in collision of bus, instruction that, if jury found there was room for plaintiff inside, and if he had ridden inside he would not have suffered injuries, and that his act in riding outside contributed proximately to injury, verdict must be for defendants, held proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Joseph Theodore Strong, by Joseph A. Strong, his guardian ad litem, against Leander Olsen and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; Myers, C. J., not participating, Lawlor, J., voting for the granting of the petition.

Kelby & Lawson and Samuel M. Garroway, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joe Crider, Jr., and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment denying compensation for personal injuries received while riding upon an automobile bus owned and operated by the defendants. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, proximately causing his injury, and the questions raised upon the appeal relate to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the jury in finding a verdict for the defendants and the propriety of a certain instruction which will be considered hereinafter.

There are some conflicts in the evidence, but most of the facts appear by uncontradicted testimony of several witnesses, and in our statement we shall emphasize, as we must, the testimony which supports the verdict. Plaintiff was a boy 15 years of age and a student at the high school at Alhambra, Cal., which was about four miles from his home. He and other students were transported between their homes and the school by means of an automobile bus owned and operated by the defendants. On the day of the accident, plaintiff boarded the bus at the school. He was inside of the bus at first, but later took a position upon the running board, either standing or lying over a fender, although there were several vacant seats inside of the bus in the rear. While he was occupying this position upon the running board, there occurred a collision between the bus and an automobile truck, and the plaintiff's leg was broken, and his foot was so badly crushed and torn as to necessitate amputation.

[1, 2] With this evidence in the record, the trial court submitted to the jury the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence. Certainly it was a question for the jury, and the appellant here is, in effect, asking this court to declare that, as a matter of law, there was no contributory negligence under the facts recited. The instruction submitting this question is the only other subject of attack upon appeal. It is as follows:

"I instruct you that, if you find from the evidence that there was room for plaintiff to have ridden inside of the bus, and that, if plaintiff had ridden inside of the bus instead of at the point where you find he was riding, he would not have suffered the injuries which you find he suffered, and if you find further that, under the circumstances as they existed at the time of the accident and immediately before the accident and in and around the bus, an ordinarily reasonable, prudent, and careful person of like age, experience, and intelligence would not have ridden at the place where you find plaintiff was riding when the accident occurred, and if you find further that plaintiff's act in so riding contributed proximately to the injury which he suffered, then your verdict must be in favor of both of the defendants."

The objection which the appellant makes to this instruction is:

"That it misled the jury to believe that the plaintiff, in taking the position on the bus that he did, assumed all the increased risk attendant thereon, including the negligence of the driver of the bus."

The instruction carefully states that, to find for the defendants, the jury must believe that the injury was proximately caused by the unusual position of the plaintiff. In other words, it permitted the jury to find, if it could, that the injury was caused proximately by the negligence of the driver—that it would have been caused if the plaintiff had been inside the bus. But the facts and circumstances and the nature of the plaintiff's injuries were such that the jury did not and could not reasonably so find.

There are no other questions involved, and the judgment is affirmed.

BROWN v. JERNIGAN, Sheriff. (Civ. 5169.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 8, 1925.)

1. Execution §171(1)—Injunction to prevent enforcement of judgment because of matters arising prior or subsequent thereto proper.

Injunctive relief may be granted to prevent enforcement of judgment because of matters arising prior or subsequent thereto, which renders its execution inequitable.

2. Mandamus §5—Sheriff cannot be compelled by mandamus to sell property taken on execution, where superior court in exercise of its discretion had enjoined sale.

Sheriff is not subject to mandamus to compel him to sell property taken on execution, where judgment debtor has brought action wherein he sought to state equities entitling him to injunction, and court in exercise of its discretion granted restraining order or temporary injunction.

3. Mandamus §4(3)—Writ of mandamus should not be used as writ of error to interfere with order of injunction made by court within its jurisdiction.

Writ of mandamus to compel sheriff to proceed despite injunction should not be used as writ of error to interfere, where court was acting within its jurisdiction, even though such action was erroneous.

Application by W. H. Brown for writ of mandamus to be directed to Sam Jernigan, as Sheriff, requiring him to advertise and sell property under execution. Writ denied.

H. L. Sacks, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.
L. A. West, of Santa Ana, for respondent.
Bruns & Mooney, of Los Angeles, amici curiae.

CONREY, P. J. On application of petitioner this court issued a writ of mandate requiring the respondent, as sheriff of Orange county, to advertise and sell property on which levy has been made under an execution, or show cause why he should not so proceed. Respondent by his answer seeks to justify his refusal by showing that he has been enjoined and restrained by an injunction issued out of the superior court of Orange county.

In March, 1915, in the superior court of Los Angeles county, a money judgment was entered in favor of W. H. Brown, plaintiff, against Walter C. Rowell and Ethel Rowell, defendants. The execution was issued on the 1st day of July, 1925, pursuant to an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county. Prior to the injunction the sheriff levied upon personal property and also upon real property as property of the defendants.

After the levy made under the execution the defendants Rowell commenced an action in the superior court of Orange county by verified complaint, wherein they alleged facts whereby they sought to show that it was inequitable to permit the enforcement of said judgment against them. On presentation of that verified complaint and an undertaking approved by the court, the superior court of Orange county granted a temporary restraining order and an order on Brown and his attorney and the sheriff of Orange county, defendants, requiring them to appear and show cause why an injunction should not be granted. At the hearing of that matter, on August 7, 1925, the court granted the temporary injunction, and at the same time allowed plaintiff five days to amend the complaint. That amendment was filed on August 12, 1925. Said complaint, with the amendment thereto, and certain affidavits and other documents which were before the superior court of Orange county at the hearing on August 7, are to be found in respondent's return herein and in the supplemental petition of petitioner

Brown filed herein on August 10, 1925. At the hearing of this proceeding before this court on August 24, 1925, it was stipulated that said supplemental petition may be considered the same as if it had been filed prior to the issuance of the alternative writ of mandate.

[1] The facts, as above stated, raise a question concerning the extent and the limits of power of a superior court to interfere with the execution of the judgment of another superior court. A like problem was presented in Von Der Kuhlen v. Cline, 38 Cal. App. 545, 176 P. 883, where this court granted a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the sheriff to sell property levied upon by him under an execution, notwithstanding that under a third-party claim the claimant had filed an action in claim and delivery against the sheriff, and in that action had obtained an order purporting to enjoin and restrain the sheriff from selling the property. Observing that the action in claim and delivery was purely an action at law, in which the complaint did not state any facts upon which equitable relief should be grounded, it was held that the case was not one in which the superior court had authority to grant an injunction; that such party could not by an injunction thus obtained interfere with the execution of process under a lawful judgment between other parties. But the court further said:

"The only exception to this rule must be found in some case of an equitable nature wherein a third-party claimant's cause of action itself furnishes ground of equitable relief."

[2, 3] The quoted sentence was not intended to limit such rights to third-party claims. The intention was to recognize the principle, about which there is no doubt, that one of the most clearly recognized grounds for injunctive relief is the prevention of the enforcement of a judgment because of matters arising prior or subsequent thereto which render its execution inequitable. 14 Cal. Jur. 188. The same subject was before the Supreme Court at an early date in Buffandeau v. Edmondson, 17 Cal. 436, 79 Am. Dec. 139. The court there said:

"It is unnecessary to consider whether the bill of complaint showed a proper case for an injunction, or whether the injunction was regularly granted or not. It was enough for the sheriff to know that a court of competent jurisdiction had made the order, and then it became his duty to obey it. It is no part of a sheriff's duty to sit in judgment upon judicial acts, and reform the errors or revise the orders of the judge. As the execution is only an order of the court, it would be strange if the sheriff were held under onerous penalties to obey its commands, and yet be absolved from the duty of yielding obedience to an order made directly by the judge, touching the same subject-matter. The injunction, so long as it remained in force, operated as a supersedeas to the execution; the legal authority to sell the property was withdrawn by the same authority which had given it, to wit, by the act of a competent court; and the sheriff had no more legal justification for his act than if he had proceeded to sell after the execution had been quashed."

See, also, Baines v. Zemansky, 176 Cal. 369, 373, 168 P. 565, where it was held if the superior court has jurisdiction, upon any possible state of facts, to prohibit or enjoin the performance of an act, the sufficiency of the petition or complaint upon which that court acts, so far as the facts stated therein are concerned, cannot be inquired into by the Supreme Court in a collateral proceeding, such as an application for a writ of mandate.

So here it is likewise unnecessary to consider whether the complaint in the superior court shows a proper case for an injunction. For the present purpose it is enough that the nature of that action, as shown by the complaint, is that the plaintiff therein has sought to state equities which he claims entitle him to an injunction, and that that court in the exercise of its discretion has held that the complaint on the face of it states facts which entitle the plaintiff to a restraining order and a temporary injunction, which will hold the property and the levy in status quo until the merits of that action can be determined. If that were clearly and solely an action at law (as in Von Der Kuhlen v. Cline, supra), wherein the court clearly had no power to grant an injunction, we agree that an injunction granted therein would not affect the duty of the sheriff to proceed under the execution, and he would be subject to mandamus to compel him to proceed. But we think that the writ of mandamus should not be used as a writ of error to interfere with an order of injunction made by a court where the court was acting within its jurisdiction, even though such action may be erroneous.

The alternative writ is discharged and the peremptory writ denied.

COUNTY SANITATION DIST. NO. 4 OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. PAYNE, Auditor. (L. A. 8780.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1925.)

1. Statutes §225½ — Statutes, dealing specifically with particular subject, not controlled by general statutes.

Ordinarily, statutes dealing specifically with particular subject are not controlled or affected by general statutes.

2. Health §4—Publication of resolution of intention to form sanitation district sufficient.

Under County Sanitation District Act, St. 1923, p. 498, amended by St. 1925, p. 4, publication of resolution declaring intention to form sanitation district, in newspaper of general circulation within district proposed to be created, designated by board of supervisors, held sufficient notwithstanding Pol. Code, § 4458, especially where no paper was published on printing press within limits of proposed district.

3. Health §4—Statutes, relating to notice by publication, not applicable to sanitary district.

In proceeding to form sanitary district under County Sanitation District Act, St. 1923, p. 498, amended by St. 1925, p. 4, publication of notice of intention under section 2 of act is not governed by rules of Pol. Code, §§ 4458, 4459, 4460, 4462, 4463, which were passed many years before adoption of Sanitation Act.

4. Health §4—Supervisors of sanitation district entitled to publish notice of intention in county newspaper outside of district; "political subdivision."

Supervisors of sanitation district, being county officers under Pol. Code, § 4013, could publish notice of intention to form district in newspaper of general circulation in county notwithstanding sections 4458 or 4460; sanitation district not being a "political subdivision" within meaning of section 4458, and, if it were, strict compliance with section 4460 would make impossible creation of sanitary districts within which no newspaper is published, thereby violating County Sanitation District Act, § 22.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Political Subdivision.]

5. Evidence §25(2)—Court will take judicial notice that there are many thickly populated rural settlements not in police jurisdiction of incorporated city and in which no newspaper is published.

The court will take judicial notice that there are many rural settlements and residence districts thickly populated which are not within the police jurisdiction of any incorporated city or municipality, and in which no newspaper is published or printed.

6. Health §16(1)—Publication of notice of bond issue in newspaper other than designated by board of supervisors of sanitary district does not comply with law.

Publication of resolution calling a bond election for a sanitation district, under County Sanitation District Act, St. 1923, p. 498, amended by St. 1925, p. 4, in a newspaper not designated by board of supervisors of district, is not in compliance with law.

7. Health §16(1)—Publication, of resolution calling bond election, in 5½ point type, substantial compliance with statute.

Publication of resolution calling bond election for sanitation district, under County Sanitation District Act, in 5½ point type, instead of 6 point, as required by Pol. Code, § 4459, held substantial compliance with Pol. Code, § 4459, especially where 6 point slug was used.

In Bank.

Application by County Sanitation District No. 4 of Los Angeles County for writ of mandamus directed to H. A. Payne, Auditor of County Sanitation District No. 4 of Los Angeles County, to compel him to sign certain bonds. Writ granted.

Hugh Gordon, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, of Los Angeles, for respondent.
Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and J. F. Moroney, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for defendant.

SEAWELL, J. This is an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent, H. A. Payne, who, as auditor of the county of Los Angeles, under the provisions of the "county sanitation district act" (Stats. 1923, p. 498, chap. 250; amended Stats. 1925, p. 4, chap. 8), is ex officio auditor of sanitation district No. 4, county of Los Angeles, to affix his official signature to certain bonds, as required by said act; the issuance thereof having been authorized in the sum of $240,000 for sewage and sanitation purposes, at an election called and held in said district March 1, 1925. There is no dispute as to the facts.

Two reasons are urged by the auditor, either of which, it is claimed, is sufficient to justify him in withholding his official signature from said bonds, to wit: First, that the resolution adopted by the board of supervisors declaring its intention to form said district was not published according to law; second, that the resolution adopted by the board of supervisors calling said election, at which the proposition of the bonded indebtedness of the district was to be submitted to a vote of the electors of said district, was not published according to law.

[1, 2] The specific objection first made is that the publication of the resolution of intention did not comply with section 2 of the county sanitation district act, nor with the provisions of section 4458, Political Code. Section 2 is a part of a comprehensive act specially providing for the creation of sanitation districts, while section 4458, supra, is general. The rule of construction is that statutes dealing specifically with a particular subject are not ordinarily controlled or affected by general statutes. Section 2 of said act provides that the board of supervisors desiring to create a sanitation district shall adopt a resolution of its intention so to do, and said resolution "shall, prior to the time of hearing, be published at length twice in at least one of the newspapers of general circulation in the proposed district and brief notices of the passage of such resolution and the time and place of hearing provided thereby may be published in one or more of the daily and weekly newspapers published and circulated in said proposed district." (Italics supplied.) It is admitted that no newspaper was composed, printed, and issued from a printing press operated within the limits of the proposed district, and that the newspaper which was designated by the board of supervisors, to wit, Los Angeles Daily Journal, in which the resolution was published, was a newspaper of general circulation within the district proposed to be created, and it was also the newspaper in which the official notices and publications are usually printed on behalf of both the city and the county of Los Angeles. Clearly the statute deals with two separate and distinct matters, to wit, the publishing at length of the resolution of intention in a newspaper of general circulation in the proposed district, to be designated by the board, and for the publication of brief notices of the passage of said resolution of intention and the time and place of hearing thereof in one or more of the daily and weekly newspapers published and circulated in said proposed district. The language of said section, taken in a literal sense, means simply this: The resolution of intention shall be published at length in a newspaper to be named by the board of supervisors, which has a general circulation within the proposed district, but the board is not required to publish said resolution in a newspaper which is published and circulated in the district even if such a newspaper should be so published and circulated. If the board, in its discretion, in addition to making the mandatory publication, which seems necessary to jurisdiction, should also determine that brief notices of the passage of the resolution of intention to form said proposed district and notices stating the time and place of hearing ought to be published, it may publish the same in one or more of the daily and weekly newspapers published and circulated in said district. If the word "published" as used in conjunction with "circulated," providing for discretionary action upon the part of the board as to the giving of publicity by brief notices of the passage of the resolution and the time and place of hearing, may be said to be used in the sense that said notices, if given, may be published only in a newspaper the mechanical work of producing which is performed wholly within the proposed district and circulated therein, the board, by the language of the statute, was, in the instant case, deprived of the privilege of exercising its discretion inasmuch as no newspaper so produced was printed or published or circulated within the boundaries of the proposed district. The mandatory portion of said section was literally complied with by the publication of the resolution of intention as actually made by the order of the board of supervisors of the county.

[3] It is the contention of respondent that said section 2 of the County Sanitation District Act must be construed with sections 4458, 4459, 4460, 4462, and 4463, Political Code. Respondent's arguments are chiefly grounded upon the provisions of sections 4458 and 4460 of said Code. The first in numerical order provides as follows:

"Whenever any publication, or notice by publication, or official advertising is required to be given or made by the provisions of this Code, the Civil Code, the Code of Civil Procedure, the Penal Code, or by any law of the state, by any officer now existing, or any hereafter created, in this state, or any political subdivision thereof, or by any officer of any court, or officer of a county, city, and county, or town in this state, such publication or notice by publication, or official advertising shall be given or made only in a newspaper of general circulation, where such a newspaper is published within the jurisdiction of such official. Where no newspaper of general circulation is published within the jurisdiction of such official, then such publication or notice by publication, or official advertising, shall be given or made in a newspaper of general circulation, published nearest thereto."

The last clause of the section above set out furnishes the grounds for the argument that, since there was no newspaper of general circulation, as the same is defined by the Code, within the proposed district, the publication of the resolution of intention should have been made in a newspaper of general circulation published nearest thereto, of which there were two published nearer to the boundary lines of said proposed district than the Los Angeles Daily Journal. In considering the application of statutes or laws we must take notice of the persons, things, and conditions not intended to be affected thereby as well as the persons, things, or conditions which it was the evident intention of the Legislature that such laws should affect or operate upon. The section last above cited defines the duty of an officer of a political subdivision or of any court, county, city, and county, or town in this state who by virtue of his office is charged with the duty of giving notices by publication as required by law in the administration of his official duties. If the section be given a literal interpretation, the members of the board of supervisors being county officers (Pol. Code, § 4013), the board was authorized to make publication of the resolution of intention in the Los Angeles Daily Journal, a newspaper of general circulation, published within the jurisdiction of such officials, to wit, county of Los Angeles. While this conclusion is sustainable under the language of the Political Code sections cited, we feel satisfied that as those sections were enacted many years before the adoption of the sanitation act under consideration, it was not intended that they should have application to a county sanitation district. While it is not necessary, in our view of the law of the case, to interpret the phrase "or any political subdivision thereof," as found in section 4458, supra, this court held in Bettencourt v. Industrial Accident Commission, 175 Cal. 559, 166 P. 323, that reclamation districts, which surely partake in a greater degree of the nature of political or governmental powers than a sanitation district, possess no political nor governmental powers and are not public corporations but mere "governmental mandatories or agents vested with limited powers to accomplish limited and specific work." From the foregoing it follows that petitioner is not within the phrase or clause of the section of the Code last above referred to.

[4, 5] If section 4460, Political Code, which defines "a newspaper of general circulation" to be one "established, printed and published at regular intervals, in the state, county, city, city and county, or town, where such publication, notice by publication, or official advertising is given or made," etc., is to govern section 2, County Sanitation District Act, and the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors which is as broad as the limits of the county which it serves, is to be cut down to come within section 4458, supra, as contended by respondent, then it would not be possible, as respondent frankly admits, to organize a sanitation district within any area, however populous or extensive its limits may be, in which no newspaper is "established, printed and published." Such a construction would have the effect of defeating the creation of sanitation districts in very many instances. We may take judicial notice of the fact that there are many rural settlements and residence districts thickly populated which are not included within the police jurisdiction of any incorporated city or municipality and in which no newspaper is published or printed as in the instant case. The construction contended for, if accepted, would lead to harsh results and would be violative of section 22 of said act, which provides:

"This act, and every part hereof, shall be liberally construed to promote the objects hereof, and to carry out its intents and purposes."

[6] It is next urged that the Hollywood News, the newspaper designated by the board of directors of said district to publish the resolution calling the bond election, used in publishing said resolution 5½ point type instead of 6 point type, and this departure from the statute, it is claimed, renders the election invalid. The statute provides that such a publication must be set in type not smaller than nonpareil, which is 6 point type, and must be preceded with words printed in black-face type, not smaller than nonpareil, describing the notice intended to be given. Sections 4459, Pol. Code. It is admitted that the resolution was printed in the Hollywood Citizen, a newspaper circulated within the proposed district, and printed in type of legal size and for the period prescribed by law. The Hollywood Citizen, however, was not designated as the newspaper to make such publication. For that reason the publication as made by that newspaper was not in compliance with law. Donnelly v. Tillman, 47 Cal. 41; Napa v. Easterby, 61 Cal. 509; Wade on Notice, §§ 1106, 1108, 1123.

[7] The question remaining is whether or not the publication of the resolution in 5½ point type instead of 6 point is a substantial compliance with the requirements of section 4459, supra. The difference in size between 5½ point type and 6 point type is exceedingly slight. In the instant case, however, a 6 point slug was used which had the effect of making the resolution stand out quite as prominently and attractively as if 6 point had been used. Construing this section as to the requirement of "black-face type," which is closely analogous to the point here made, this court in Clark v. City of Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 43, 116 P. 722, thus disposed of the question:

"Another objection is that the publication of the ordinance was insufficient because it was not preceded by words in black-face type describing in general terms the purport or character of the notice intended to be given, as directed by section 4459 of the Political Code. See Derby v. Modesto, 104 Cal. 523, 38 P. 900. The ordinance was preceded by its title, which clearly described its purport. We do not regard the fact that it was not printed in black-face type of sufficient importance to warrant a holding that the proceedings were thereby invalidated, even if the section cited was applicable to the election notice in question, which we do not decide."

The plain letter of statutes in such cases should not be departed from, and by our holding in the instant case that there was a substantial compliance with the statute and no injury resulted therefrom we do not mean to be understood as encouraging departures from legislative requirements, under any circumstance. Such departures or omissions, though seemingly slight, might in some cases compel the annulment of the entire proceeding or cause a reversal of the cause.

Let the peremptory writ of mandate issue.

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 1255.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 2, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 30, 1925.)

1. Robbery ☞26—Jury must determine whether identification by general description was sufficient.

Where one accused of robbery was not positively identified as one of parties, but general description tallied with that given by witnesses, it was for jury whether this method of identification was sufficient.

2. Robbery ☞24(1)—Possession of stolen articles after robbery, and failure of accused to answer written accusation made by companion, are circumstances which jury may take into consideration.

Possession by one accused of robbery of stolen articles immediately after commission of offense, and failure to make answer to written accusation made by companion at time of apprehension, clearly involving him in commission of robbery, were circumstances which jury were justified in taking into consideration in fixing on accused responsibility for crime.

3. Robbery ☞24(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for robbery, evidence showing that accused had attempted to dispose of property stolen, and that he was related to one of servants who might have admitted persons committing robbery, and that he failed to deny accusation made in his presence by companion, held sufficient to sustain conviction.

4. Criminal law ☞753(2)—Instruction advising jury to return verdict of not guilty properly refused, where evidence would warrant jury in arriving at verdict of guilty.

Where there was sufficient evidence to warrant jury in arriving at verdict of guilty, instruction advising jury to return verdict of not guilty was properly refused.

5. Criminal law ☞814(18)—Instruction properly refused, which would not have been applicable to any particular incident in trial.

Instruction relating to degree of credit which should be given to various witnesses, particularly to right of jury to reject entire testimony of witness shown knowingly to have testified falsely on trial, held properly refused, where there was no single incident in course of trial to which such instruction would have been applicable.

6. Criminal law ☞404(3)—Pistol identified as one used in robbery, ownership of which was not denied by accused, properly admitted in evidence.

Pistol, which was discovered in presence of accused at time of arrest, ownership of which was not denied by accused, when companion identified it as his, which pistol was later identified as one used in commission of robbery, held properly admitted in evidence.

7. Robbery ☞23(1)—Evidence of relation of servants in home robbed to accused properly admitted.

Admission of testimony that servants in home which was robbed were related to accused was proper, as showing method by which parties gained entrance to home for purpose of committing robbery.

8. Criminal law ☞829(13)—Instruction that statement of companion of accused could not be taken as evidence against accused properly refused, in view of instructions given and statement of judge at time of admission.

Refusal of instruction that written statement of companion of accused at time of arrest, which had been read to accused while under arrest, could not be taken as evidence against accused of facts therein, but used solely for purpose of evidencing conduct of accused, while it was being read to him and thereafter, was proper, when such instructions were covered in statement of judge at time of introduction of statements and in former instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

John Smith was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Leslie Hubbard and Hubbard, Hubbard & McClellan, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was convicted upon information charging him and one Edward Egan jointly with the crime of robbery. The two were separately tried, and the defendant has appealed from the order denying him a new trial and from the judgment.

The facts of the case are that on the 28th day of October, 1924, the complaining witnesses, Mr. and Mrs. P. I. Jacoby, returned to their home in Jackson street, in the city and county of San Francisco, at about 12 o'clock midnight, and retired to their sleeping apartments upon one of the upper floors of the building. Their home had two entrances, one in the front of the house, through which they entered, and another in the rear, which was known as the tradesman's entrance, and was used by servants of the family. When the Jacobys entered their sleeping apartment, two men, both masked and armed with black automatic pistols, confronted them, and, after robbing them of jewelry of the value of over $12,000, locked them in a closet, and left without disturbing anything else in the house. When the Jacobys escaped from the closet, they telephoned to the police, and immediately gave them a description of the bandits and of the jewelry which had been taken. They then examined the premises, and found that none of the doors or windows had been disturbed, but that the rear door, or the tradesman's entrance, was unbolted. At this time the Jacobys had in their employ two servants, namely, Delia Cooney, a cook, and Maria Beraudiere, a second maid. The Jacobys had left their home at 7 o'clock that evening, with the intention of spending the evening with friends, and the two servants were the only other occupants of the house at the time.

Three days after the night of the robbery the defendant, Egan, and one Harry Wright were arrested while seated in a Ford sedan, which was parked outside of Wright's cleaning and pressing establishment. At the time they were talking to a woman by the name of Mamie Manning. The three men and the woman were all taken into Wright's place of business, and following a search the Jacoby jewels, with one exception, were found in Wright's pocket. At that time, in answer to the question from the police officers, Wright stated, in the presence of both the defendant and Egan, that he had obtained the jewels from those two. Of this accusation neither the defendant nor Egan made any denial. At the same time, upon a search of the premises, a black automatic pistol was found, as to which Wright stated at the time that he had seen the pistol in Egan's possession that morning. To this no reply was made by either the defendant or Egan. On the same day, while all the parties were present at the police station, Wright made a written statement which directly charged defendant and Egan with the robbery. This statement was later read to both the defendant and to Egan in Wright's presence, and these two were asked whether they had anything to say regarding it, and both failed to make answer. At the same time it was brought out that Delia Cooney, the cook in the Jacoby home, was a sister-in-law of Egan, and that a short time before the robbery the two Jacoby servants had visited a home in the city, where they had met Egan and Mamie Manning, the woman who was with the defendant and Egan at the time of their arrest.

At the trial all the facts were placed before the jury for the purpose of showing the circumstances surrounding the condition of the robbery and the methods by which the participants of the crime were able to gain entrance into the Jacoby home and conceal themselves for the single purpose of obtaining the jewelry which the Jacobys were wearing at the time. Evidence was also offered that upon the day before defendant's arrest he had approached one Abe Cohn, a pawnbroker, telling him that he knew some people who had some jewels to sell, describing them as a string of real pearls, bracelets, rings, and earrings (the identical articles which were the subject of the robbery), and endeavored to persuade Cohn to either purchase or arrange for the purchase of the same. When the parties were arrested on October 31st, they were seated in a Ford sedan, which was similar to one which a witness testified he had seen parked in front of the Jacoby place at about 7:30 on the evening of the robbery, and again at 11:30 of the same night. Though the complaining witnesses were not able to positively identify either the defendant or Egan as the bandits who had attacked them on the evening in question, the description of them, given at that time, closely tallied with the defendant and Egan, and it was upon this description that the police officers were able to identify the two whom they subsequently arrested. It appears that on the day following the arrest both Mr. and Mrs. Jacoby were taken to the police station for the purpose of identifying the defendant and Egan as being the participants in the robbery. When Mrs. Jacoby was confronted by the defendant and Egan, she stated, in answer to the question by one of the police officers, that she did not recognize them, but "maybe they recognize me." Whereupon both defendant and Egan "snickered," but made no further reply.

[1-3] The main attack of the appellant is based upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. At the outset it may be conceded that the evidence connecting the appellant with the commission of the crime is scanty, as is usually the case in cases of this nature, where the party committing the crime by masking his features partially conceals his identity. But, as said in People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 553, 89 P. 124, 128:

"This court cannot disturb a verdict, unless there is no evidence to support it, or where the evidence relied on by the prosecution is apparently so improbable or false as to be incredible, or where it so clearly and unquestionably preponderates against the verdict as to convince this court that its return was the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury."

All the evidence in this case was offered by the prosecution. The defendant did not, at the time of the trial or at any time subsequent to his arrest, make any effort to explain the suspicious circumstances in which he was involved. Though he was not positively identified as one of the parties to the crime his general description tallied with that given by the witnesses, and it was for the jury to determine whether this method of identification was sufficient. His possession of the stolen articles immediately after the commission of the offense—that is to say, his efforts to dispose of the jewelry, and his failure to deny the accusation of Wright that the jewelry had been given him by appellant and Egan, and his failure to make answer to the written accusation, later made by Wright, clearly involving him in the commission of the robbery—were all circumstances which the jury was justified in taking into consideration in fixing upon the appellant the responsibility for the crime. As we look upon the entire record, we are unable to say that the evidence is any less convincing than that which was before the court and held to be sufficient in People v. Cataline, 54 Cal. App. 36, 200 P. 1060; People v. Reed, 58 Cal. App. 7, 207 P. 1025; People v. Deases, 60 Cal. App. 170, 212 P. 407; People v. Peterson, 61 Cal. App. 63, 214 P. 247; and People v. Ross, 61 Cal. App. 61, 214 P. 267.

While it is true that possession of the stolen property immediately following a robbery is not in itself sufficient evidence to warrant a verdict of robbery, nevertheless slightly corroborative evidence of other inculpatory circumstances, taken with the evidence of possession of the stolen property, is sufficient to support a conviction. People v. Cataline, 54 Cal. App. 36, 200 P. 1060. Putting it in another way, possession of stolen property, if unexplained, "is an item to be taken into consideration by the jury, together with other incriminating circumstances in arriving at a verdict." People v. Reed, 58 Cal. App. 8, 207 P. 1026. Appellant has cited People v. Fitzsimmons, 144 App. Div. 211, 128 N. Y. S. 996, People v. Mullen (Cal. App.) 231 P. 588, and State v. Campbell, 69 Iowa, 556, 29 N. W. 604, as holding that the evidence in each case was insufficient to sustain the conviction. It would serve no purpose to analyze these cases, for in each instance the holding was merely that there was no evidence of any nature to connect the particular defendant with the commission of the crime of which he was charged. Cases of this nature all depend upon their own facts, and in reaching a conclusion as to whether those facts will sustain a verdict of conviction "we must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence." People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 326, 184 P. 389, 393. For these reasons we hold that the evidence is sufficient.

[4, 5] Criticism is also made of the action of the trial judge in refusing to give certain instructions proposed by the appellant. Instruction No. 1 advised the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. It is evident, of course, that, if there was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in arriving at a verdict of guilty, this instruction would have been improper. Objection is also made to the failure of the trial judge to give instruction No. 7, relating to the degree of credit which should be given to the various witnesses, and particularly to the right of the jury to reject the entire testimony of a witness shown knowingly to have testified falsely on the trial. The Attorney General concedes that this instruction was a proper one, and that it should have been given, but insists that its refusal does not constitute prejudicial error. We have read the entire record with care, and are satisfied that no prejudicial error arose from the failure to give this instruction, and in fact this seems to be conceded by the appellant, as he has not pointed to a single incident in the course of the trial to which the instruction might have been applicable.

[6, 7] Objection is also made to the action of the trial judge in admitting in evidence the pistol which was found in the shop of the witness Wright at the time of the arrest of the appellant and Egan. In this connection People v. Mullen (Cal. App.) 231 P. 588, is cited, and it is argued that the cases are parallel. We see a clear distinction between the Mullen Case and this, inasmuch as in this case the pistol was discovered by the arresting officer in the presence of the appellant and his codefendant, and at that time, and while all of these parties were present, Wright told the police officer that the pistol belonged to Egan. No denial was made by either Egan or the appellant, and the pistol was later identified as one used by the parties in the commission of the robbery. It thereupon became a material link in the chain of circumstances and was properly admitted in evidence. We see no error in the admission of the testimony covering the relationship of Egan and Della Cooney, the cook at the Jacoby home, as this evidence went to show the methods by which the parties gained entrance to the Jacoby home for the purpose of committing the robbery.

[8] Objection is also made to the refusal of the trial judge to give to the jury appellant's proposed instruction No. 8, to the effect that the written statement of Harry Wright, which had been read to the appellant and his codefendant while they were under arrest, should not be taken as evidence against the appellant of the facts stated therein, but that it should be used solely for the purpose of evidencing the conduct of the appellant while it was being read to him and thereafter. When the written statement was offered in evidence, it was distinctly stated that such was the purpose of the offer, and at that time the trial judge clearly informed the jury that it was an accusatory statement, only to show the conduct of the appellant at the time, and nothing else, "and they are not to consider any of these facts, as being proven, or that this statement in any way tends to prove the facts." In closing his formal instructions the trial judge advised the jury regarding the evidence of a defendant standing mute in the face of an accusation, and "that the reason for admitting the accusation in such cases is to explain the conduct of the accused," and again, "regarding statements which may have been read, that they are not, of themselves, to be taken as independent evidence of the facts therein contained." We see no prejudicial error resulting from the refusal to give the instruction as requested by appellant.

Other grounds urged by the appellant do not require consideration.

Judgment and order affirmed.

SPITZER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF ALAMEDA COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5222.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 1, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 30, 1925.)

1. Judgment $\S$ 948(1)—Former adjudication, interposed as defense, must be presented by pleading or evidence.

Former adjudication is generally an affirmative defense, which must be presented either by pleading or evidence.

2. Judgment $\S$ 948(1)—Benefit of prior adjudication as bar may be waived by failure to plead or present it.

The bar of former adjudication may be waived by failure to plead or present it.

3. Judgment $\S$ 948(4)—Judgment, not available until after entry of interlocutory decree in subsequent action, may be presented before entry in final decree.

Where no opportunity existed at commencement of action to plead bar of former adjudication, owing to fact that it did not become final until after entry of interlocutory decree in subsequent action, the judgment may be presented before entry of a final decree therein.

4. Judgment $\S$ 948(1/2)—Interposition of former adjudication to whole cause of action is not plea to jurisdiction, but one in bar.

The interposition of a former adjudication against entry of final decree in subsequent proceeding is not a plea to the jurisdiction, but a plea in bar or in estoppel, and cannot deprive court of jurisdiction.

5. Judgment $\S$ 822(1)—Full faith and credit clause provision in Constitution does not establish rule affecting jurisdiction of court in which judgment is offered in evidence.

The provision in U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1, that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to judicial proceedings of every other state, establishes a rule requiring enforcement of such judgments without investigation of the merits, and not a rule affecting jurisdiction of court in which judgment is offered in evidence.

6. Judgment $\S$ 823—Foreign judgment, though in rem, not executory in another state.

A foreign judgment, though in rem, is not executory in another state.

7. Divorce $\S$ 326—Trial court's determination as to legal effect of foreign judgment held act in exercise of its jurisdiction over parties and cause.

In divorce action by wife, trial court has jurisdiction to determine legal effect of foreign judgment procured by husband, which became final after institution of instant action in bar of which such judgment was interposed.

8. Divorce $\S$ 59—Court in which action pending not deprived of jurisdiction to hear and determine cause by reason of decree of another court adjudging dissolution on merits becoming final during pendency of subsequent action.

A court in which action for divorce is pending, and which has jurisdiction of the parties and cause, is not deprived of jurisdiction to hear and determine that cause by the fact that a decree of another court adjudging the dissolution of the marriage has become final during the pendency of the subsequent action.

9. Appeal and error $\S$ 456 — Supreme Court has inherent power to prevent, in a proper case, any action by the lower court which would render appeal ineffective.

The Supreme Court has inherent power to prevent, in a proper case, any action by the lower court which would render an appeal ineffective.

10. Prohibition $\S$ 3(2)—Prohibition does not lie to prevent error, where appeal furnishes adequate remedy.

Prohibition does not lie to prevent error, where appeal furnishes adequate remedy.

11. Prohibition $\S$ 3(3)—Appeal, by petitioner, from erroneous determination by trial court of legal effect of foreign judgment interposed by petitioner against wife's action for divorce, held adequate remedy.

Appeal, by petitioner, from erroneous determination by trial court of legal effect of foreign judgment in divorce action interposed by petitioner, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, against entry of final decree in bar of wife's action for divorce, held adequate, under section 963, subd. 1, precluding issuance of writ of prohibition.

Application by Sidney Spitzer for prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Alameda, Hon. T. W. Harris, as Judge, and others. Writ denied.

Courtney L. Moore and Grant H. Smith, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Annette Abbott Adams, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An original application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the entry by the superior court in and for the county of Alameda of a final decree of divorce in an action pending therein entitled "Hazel M. Spitzer, Plaintiff, v. Sidney Spitzer, Defendant."

The defendant, who is the petitioner herein, and plaintiff, intermarried in the territory of Hawaii during the year 1917 and lived together therein until the month of June, 1920, when a separation occurred; petitioner remaining in that territory, while his wife, with the minor child of the marriage, came to California, and has since resided in the county of Alameda. It is alleged in the petition—and there have been filed herein exemplified copies of the proceedings—that petitioner on March 2, 1922, commenced in the circuit court of that territory an action for divorce, alleging desertion by his wife, who appeared therein and contested the action; that on December 5, 1923, judgment was therein entered granting a divorce to petitioner, awarding the custody of the child to its mother, and providing for the payment by petitioner of certain sums for the support of the child, and which judgment—an appeal (which was thereafter dismissed) having been taken therefrom by petitioner—became final on July 29, 1924.

In the meantime, on September 6, 1923, Hazel M. Spitzer filed in respondent superior court an action for divorce against petitioner on the ground of cruelty, wherein service of summons was had pursuant to sections 412 and 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Petitioner, who at all times mentioned herein has been a resident of Hawaii, failed to appear therein except in the manner herein-after stated, or to answer the complaint, whereupon his default was entered and an interlocutory decree of divorce granted to plaintiff therein on March 11, 1924, and from which decree no appeal was taken.

On December 11, 1923, petitioner, assuming that respondent court was without jurisdiction, appeared therein for the special purpose of moving a dismissal of the action on that ground, in that there was then pending the action mentioned in the Hawaiian court. The moving papers having been stricken out on motion by plaintiff, petitioner moved no further therein until after the entry of the interlocutory decree mentioned, when, on October 14, 1924, he filed therein his motion for relief under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for an order of respondent court vacating the interlocutory decree and permitting petitioner to answer the complaint, filing therewith his verified answer thereto, wherein was pleaded the decree of the circuit court mentioned as a bar to the action. This motion was by respondent court denied, and from the order an appeal, which is now pending and undetermined, was taken by petitioner to the Supreme Court of the state of California.

It is further alleged that thereafter, on February 26, 1925, petitioner, anticipating an application by plaintiff for a final decree, filed therein certain affidavits, alleging the entry and effect of the Hawaiian decree, with exemplified copies of the judgment and proceedings in that action, and with a notice directed to respondent court and Hazel M. Spitzer that petitioner would and did oppose the entry of such final decree. An order was thereupon made by respondent court fixing a day for the hearing of petitioner's objections, and directing that notice of such hearing be served upon plaintiff therein or her attorney. It does not appear that plaintiff or her attorney was present at such hearing, or that any motion or application had or has been made by her for such final decree; but it is admitted that upon such hearing documentary evidence was introduced, which we assume included copies of the proceedings in the Hawaiian court, and that the court signified its intention to grant a final decree in the action should application therefor be made.

It is not contended here that the complaint in the action last mentioned did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for divorce against petitioner, or that respondent court failed to obtain jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause; but it is urged that the circuit court of the territory of Hawaii has by its decree adjudged the dissolution of the marriage of the parties; that respondent was thereby deprived of jurisdiction to proceed further in the action before it; and that, the fact of such judgment appearing to this court, respondent should be prohibited from entering a final decree therein.

[1-4] A former adjudication as a defense is generally regarded as an affirmative one, which must be presented, whether by pleading or evidence, by the one relying upon it (McLean v. Baldwin, 136 Cal. 565, 69 P. 259; Brown v. Campbell, 110 Cal. 644, 43 P. 12; Estate of McNeil, 155 Cal. 333, 100 P. 1086); and the benefit of a prior adjudication constituting a bar may be waived by failing to plead or present it in the subsequent action (15 Cal. Jur., Judgments, § 233; Freeman on Judgments, § 808 [5th Ed.]). Where it appears, however, that there was no opportunity to plead a judgment urged as a bar, owing to the fact that it did not become final until after the entry of an interlocutory decree in a subsequent action, it may be presented before the entry of a final decree therein. Penfield v. Potts & Co., 126 F. 475, 61 C. C. A. 371; Bradley, etc., Co. v. Eagle Mfg. Co., 57 F. 980, 985, 6 C. C. A. 661; Freeman on Judgments, § 798 (5th Ed.). It is not a plea to the jurisdiction, but, where it is pleaded to the whole cause of action, is a plea in bar, or, if to a particular fact or issue, a plea in estoppel, but cannot be given the effect of depriving the court of jurisdiction. Fields v. Walker, 23 Ala. 155; Granger v. Sup. Ct., 159 Cal. 2, 112 P. 854.

[5, 6] The provisions of article 4, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States, that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the * * * judicial proceedings of every other state" established a rule requiring the enforcement of such judgments without an investigation of the merits of fact, and not a rule affecting the jurisdiction of the court in which the judgment is offered in evidence (Anthony v. Tarpley, 45 Cal. App. 72, 187 P. 779; Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 291, 8 S. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239); and such judgments, though in rem, are not executory in another state (Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 S. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366; Thompson v. Whiteman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; Rose v. Himeley, 4 Cranch, 241, 2 L. Ed. 608).

[7] The fact of a judgment urged as a bar, the identity of the parties, jurisdiction to render it, and the legal effect to be given it, are matters for determination in the first instance by the trial court, are questions on which the party against whom the judgment is urged has the right to be heard, and such determination, though erroneous, and hence not an act in the proper exercise of its jurisdiction, would nevertheless be an act in the exercise of its jurisdiction over the parties and the cause.

[8] While in the case of Gloyd v. Sup. Ct., 44 Cal. App. 39, 185 P. 995, it was held that the death of one of the parties to an action for divorce (in that case an admitted fact), after the entry of an interlocutory decree which adjudges only that a divorce should be granted, deprives the court of jurisdiction to enter a final decree, and that prohibition will lie unless it appears that an appeal will afford a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, it is also the rule that the court in which an action is pending, wherein it has jurisdiction of the parties and the cause, is not deprived of jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause by the fact that a decree of another court adjudging the dissolution of the marriage has become final during the pendency of such action. Granger v. Sup. Ct., supra; Davis v. Davis, 70 Colo. 37, 197 P. 241. In the instant case it is not alleged or contended that the interlocutory decree does more than to adjudge the right of the plaintiff in the action to a decree dissolving the marriage, or that the entry of a final decree therein, assuming the Hawaiian decree to be valid and to have the legal effect contended by petitioner, would effect a change in the status of the parties.

[9] The court in which is pending the appeal mentioned has inherent power to prevent, in a proper case, any action by the lower court which would render the appeal ineffectual. Carit v. Williams, 67 Cal. 580, 8 P. 93; Weldon v. Rogers, 154 Cal. 632, 98 P. 1070; Rogers v. Sup. Ct., 158 Cal. 467, 111 P. 357; Bryan v. Sup. Ct., 169 Cal. 761, 763, 147 P. 938.

[10, 11] Where appeal furnishes an adequate remedy, prohibition will not lie to prevent error (Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission, 189 Cal. 228, 207 P. 903; High on Extraordinary Remedies, § 772; McGregor v. Board of Trustees, 159 Cal. 441, 447, 114 P. 566; Kinard v. Police Ct., 2 Cal. App. 179, 83 P. 175), and should respondent erroneously determine the fact and the legal effect of the alleged adjudication in the Hawaiian court, and enter a final decree in the action, from that judgment an appeal would lie, which would afford petitioner under all the circumstances shown by the petition a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy (Reynolds v. Reynolds, 191 Cal. 435, 216 P. 619; Gloyd v. Sup. Ct., supra; 9 Cal. Jur., Divorce and Separation, p. 776; § 963, subd. 1, Code Civ. Proc.).

It is our conclusion that the proceedings of respondent court are within the exercise of its jurisdiction over the parties and the cause, and that for any error therein petitioner has and will have, so far as shown, a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal.

The petition for a writ of prohibition is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action for money by Amy Graves against Florence E. Rickershauser and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. Franklin Baxter, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Schweitzer & Hutson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. The controversy between the parties hereto out of which this appeal grows has been before this court on other appeals. They are all concerned with the attempt of the plaintiff to collect money due her from the defendant Florence E. Rickershauser. A very brief recital of facts will indicate how tortuous has been the road to that end.

In the year 1915 the defendant Florence Rickershauser, being heavily indebted, transferred all her property to the defendant Thomas McMahan, who executed a declaration of trust, declaring that he held same for the benefit of certain creditors of Florence Rickershauser, named therein, whose aggregate claims amounted to $28,978. The plaintiff, Amy Graves, was not included in this list of creditors. She brought an action against Florence Rickershauser in the superior court of Los Angeles county, and obtained a judgment for $3,474.24. Thereafter, in August, 1917, plaintiff purchased at the sale under execution issued upon said judgment the beneficial interest of Florence Rickershauser in said trust property, if any there was, after the satisfaction of the purposes of the trust; i. e., the payment of the debts specified therein. The net purchase price of said interest—$2,583.56—was credited upon plaintiff's judgment. It was found that in July, 1917, McMahan, as trustee, sold the trust property to the defendants Susie M. Kibbe, Frank Rickershauser, and Charles Rickershauser, children of Florence Rickershauser, for the sum of $33,641.85. The court found that this amount was necessary to discharge the purposes of the trust. It appears that debts amounting to nearly $29,000 were specified in the trust instrument, and the testimony is that the balance was consumed in legal fees and expenses in connection with litigation involving the trust property and other legitimate expenses connected with the administration of the trust. There is nothing to contradict this testimony, and the trial court accepted it as true. It is, perhaps, not so satisfactory as if the items had been specified in detail by the witness, but it is, nevertheless, the only testimony on the subject appearing in the record.

Appellant contends that, even though the amount allowed for taxes, interest, and expenses be conceded to be correct, there is still $3,000 representing Mrs. Rickershauser's beneficial interest which should belong to the plaintiff because of her purchase of such beneficial interest. This claim is made because the trustee actually received $36,641.85, or an excess of $3,000 over and above the amount necessary for the debts and expenses. Appellant asserts that this $3,000 was actually part of the consideration for the trust property, and, being in excess of the debts to be paid by the trust fund, it represented the beneficial interest of Florence Rickershauser, plaintiff's debtor.

The trial court resolved this disputed question in favor of the defendants, holding that this $3,000 which was returned to the purchasers of the property was never intended as a part payment therefor, but was always the property of the purchasers, and was returned to them as such and not as the beneficial interest of Florence Rickershauser. This determination is supported by uncontradicted testimony of defendant Frank Rickershauser that the trustee had made repeated unsuccessful efforts to sell the trust property, and finally the children of Florence Rickershauser concluded to purchase it for an amount sufficient to pay the debts secured by the trust deed, the expenses, etc. These items were estimated by the trustee to aggregate $33,641.85. The trustee lived in Montana, but came to California to consummate the transaction. The deed was made, executed, and recorded before the full consideration was paid, the purchaser having previously advanced $13,000 of the consideration to pay urgent claims against Florence Rickershauser. When the deed was returned from the recorder's office, Frank Rickershauser saw it for the first time and noticed that the amount of the consideration was erroneously stated therein to be $3,000 more than agreed upon, or $36,641.85. He immediately called attention to this fact, and a consultation was had with the attorney representing the trustee, who advised that the consideration stated in the deed should be paid, and that the excess should be returned later to the purchasers. This method of overcoming the difficulty was adopted, because the deed had already been recorded. The purchasers owned some property in Alma, Kan., which was sold by the trustee for their account, and the proceeds therefrom, amounting to about $24,000, was remitted directly by a bank in Kansas to the trustee in Montana. This remittance, together with the $13,000 previously advanced, completed the amount specified in the deed, $36,641.85. About a month later the trustee returned to the children of Florence Rickershauser the $3,000 excess which they had paid, in accordance with the agreement between the parties.

[1] If this testimony be true, the $3,000 in dispute was the sole property of the defendant Frank and Charles Rickershauser and Susie Kibbe, and never represented any interest or property of the debtor, Florence Rickershauser, and plaintiff has no claim upon it. The testimony just recited stands uncontradicted in the record, and supports the finding of the court unless it is inherently improbable, and we think it does not merit such description. The trial court saw and heard the witnesses and believed this uncontradicted testimony, and we are powerless to interfere merely because it may seem peculiar that the consideration in the deed should have been stated incorrectly.

[2] Like the trial court, we appreciate the hardship under which a plaintiff labors in a creditor's bill, seeking to discover hidden assets, but if there is no testimony in a record which indicates there are any hidden assets of a debtor, other property may not be subjected to the creditor's claim merely upon suspicion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Attorney retaining client's ring, deposited as collateral, until note of client and his fees and expenditures in her divorce case were paid to him held not shown to have violated Civ. Code, § 2235, where client did not plead a violation of statute, and trial court was not asked to make, and did not make, any finding on the subject, and it did not appear that attorney was retained by client on date when note was executed, or that fee allowed attorney by trial court was unreasonable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Louise Foster against A. L. Abrahams, with cross-complaint by defendant. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Kemp & Clewett and E. L. Foster, all of Los Angeles, and Lester R. Godward, of Maricopa, for appellant.

Paul Barksdale D'Orr and Minor Moore, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action in replevin to recover a diamond ring. The defendant appeared and answered, and also filed a cross-complaint. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, and a trial was had in the lower court without the intervention of a jury. The trial court made findings on all of the issues on which evidence was introduced in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, the motion was denied, and the plaintiff has appealed, bringing up a bill of exceptions.

In the earlier part of the year 1921 Louise Foster and E. L. Foster were man and wife. In July of that year Mrs. Foster engaged Mr. Abrahams to act as her attorney in obtaining a divorce for her. He commenced the action, and, after the papers were served on Mr. Foster, the latter appeared and moved that the venue be changed from Los Angeles county to Kern county. The motion was granted. After the divorce case was transferred to Kern county, such proceedings were had that Mr. Kaye, an attorney at law residing at Bakersfield, in Kern county, was substituted as attorney for Mrs. Foster in the place of Mr. Abrahams. Some time in the month of July, 1921, Mrs. Foster called on Mr. Abrahams, and borrowed $100. Later she called again and borrowed $200. At the time of the second loan she produced a diamond ring as security. A note was made out in favor of W. N. Hamaker as payee. The note was dated August 3, 1921, payable 90 days after date, and bore interest at 8 per cent. per annum. It was on a printed form, and is what is commonly called a collateral note. Among other provisions the note contained the following:

"And I hereby deposit with said W. N. Hamaker as collateral security for the payment of this or any other liability or liabilities of mine to said W. N. Hamaker or other holder hereof, due or to become due, or that may be hereafter contracted, the following property, viz.: One diamond (3 large stones and several small stones) ring, platinum setting.
* * *"

After signing the note, Mrs. Foster delivered the note and ring as security into the hands of Mr. Abrahams for Hamaker. However, it is not controverted but what Hamaker was a naked trustee for Abrahams. In accordance with the undisputed testimony, the trial court found that the note was indorsed and delivered by Hamaker to Mr. Abrahams before the maturity of said note.

Prior to the 2d day of November, 1921, Mr. Abrahams sent to Mrs. Foster a bill in the divorce action, which included his fee and costs paid, amounting to $260. On the date last mentioned Mrs. Foster caused to be tendered to Mr. Abrahams $300 and interest, and demanded the return to her of the note and the ring. Mr. Abrahams refused to return the ring, claiming that he had the right under the terms of the note to retain the ring until the principal and interest on the note were paid, and also the amount of his fee as an attorney, and the amount of his expenditures, made in the divorce case, were paid to him.

[1] In her brief the appellant makes several points, claiming that the defendant, while acting as her attorney, violated the provisions of section 2235 of the Civil Code. We think these contentions are not supported by the record. By his cross-complaint the defendant set forth all of the facts, and asked a decree establishing the amount of his lien, and that the ring be sold, etc. In her answer to the cross-complaint Mrs. Foster did not plead a violation of any of the provisions of the section cited, and the trial court was not asked to make, and did not make, any finding on the subject. In the next place, the record presented to us does not disclose the data from which we can ascertain whether Mr. Abrahams was the attorney for Mrs. Foster on the 3d day of August, 1921, the date when the note was executed, or whether at that time Mr. Kaye had been substituted. Furthermore, by his pleading Mr. Abrahams stated that the amount of his fee had not been agreed upon, and he asserted that he was entitled to a reasonable fee, and submitted the question as to the amount thereof to the determination of the trial court. There is nothing in the record showing that the finding made by the trial court holding that $260 was a reasonable charge was not sustained by the evidence.

[2] The appellant earnestly urges many reasons why the note should not be construed as providing security to Mr. Abrahams for his fee and expenditures in the divorce action; but that it should be construed as providing security for the $300 and the interest thereon. The point is a new one in the state of California. The appellant cites no case that rules the point. The respondent cites and relies on the case entitled Oleon v. Rosenbloom, 247 Pa. 250, 93 A. 473, L. R. A. 1915F, 968, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 233. In that case two notes were involved. Each one contained a passage as follows:

"Having deposited herewith as collateral security for payment of this or any other liability or liabilities of * * * to the holder hereof now due or to become due, or that may be hereafter contracted, the following property."

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania stated that there was no case in Pennsylvania that exactly ruled the point and then that court cited and discussed certain cases in other jurisdictions, and thereafter reached the conclusion that an indorsee of a note for the security of which collateral is pledged is entitled to the benefit of a provision in a note that the collateral is security for the payment of this or any other liability or liabilities to the holder hereof now due or to become due so that he can apply the collateral to other claims held by him against the maker.

On the authority of that case we think that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Ernest Weyan, Judge.

Joe Hay was convicted of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin and W. P. Rich, both of Marysville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, a Chinese, was convicted by a jury in the superior court of the county of Yuba of the crime of unlawfully having in his possession, on or about the 19th day of March, 1925, a quantity of intoxicating liquor, of the prohibited alcoholic content, such possession not being for nonbeverage purposes, under an information charging said crime, and also charging two previous convictions of a like offense, one in the police court in and for the city of Marysville, county of Yuba, and the other in the superior court in and for said county.

A motion by the accused for a new trial upon a number of the statutory grounds was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment of conviction and the order denying the motion for a trial de novo.

The complaint against the result reached below is that the verdict fails of sufficient evidentiary support, and that the court erroneously, and with prejudice to the rights of defendant, admitted certain evidence, and also permitted inquiry to be made by the district attorney into a matter having no pertinent relation to the case, and which tended to prejudice the accused in the minds of the jurors.

[1] The evidence discloses that the defendant had under lease for a term of five years a certain building situated and fronting on First street, near Oak street, in the city of Marysville. This building was divided into two large rooms or compartments, and the entrances thereto from the street were separate from or independent of each other. One was numbered "318" and the other "320." In No. 318 the defendant conducted the business of a restaurant. The other, No. 320, was, for a time from February or March, 1924, to a date not shown by the record, occupied by one Frank Donnelly under a lease from defendant, made either in February or March, 1924, and for a period of time, including the date of the discovery by the officers of the intoxicating liquor for the alleged possession of which the defendant was arrested and prosecuted to conviction under the information, in the possession, so defendant testified, of and occupied by one McGee. It appears also that a man named McKeevey had something to do with the premises (No. 320) after Donnelly gave up possession thereof, but was not in charge or present at the time the liquor was found in the place.

Taking up now the point that the verdict is without sufficient support, it should be explained that there are several small rooms in the rear of the building, all separated from the two larger or main rooms by a partition; that the room in which the liquor was found by the officers making the "raid" on the premises was situated directly in the rear of the part of the building occupied by the defendant—No. 318 First street; that there was a door opening into one of the smaller rooms from the Donnelly compartment (No. 320); that this door (No. 320) was always kept bolted by a spring lock, and could be opened in no other way than by means of a string attached to the spring lock extending through the partition into and ending in the defendant's compartment, where only the string could be manipulated so as to unlatch the lock. The smaller room so referred to was situated directly back of or in the rear of defendant's compartment from which, as stated, said smaller room was separated by a partition. As counsel for the defendant say in their brief:

"The evidence showed that, while a person in room No. 320, where gambling and drinking were going on, could, by pushing the button, signal a man standing in the small rooms 'X' and 'Y' (thus two of the smaller rooms above referred to were designated on the plat prepared by the county surveyor and used at the trial) and into which the defendant could enter from his room, No. 318, yet there was no way whereby a person could signal in the reverse order—that is, from either room 'X' or 'Y,' or from the compartment, No. 318, to compartment 320."

It was also made to appear that the smaller rooms could be entered from the rear of compartment 320. This entrance led into a small room, thence into several other small rooms, including the one in which the liquor was found. At the time of the "raid," a small room immediately in the rear of the Donnelly or 320 compartment (a room other than the one in which the particular liquor in question here was found) contained a stock of liquors of various kinds. The evidence further shows that an electric bell was maintained in the room situated directly back of the defendant's compartment, and in which the liquor referred to in the information was found. In brief, the interior of the lower floor of the building had been and was with evident design so arranged as to facilitate the successful prosecution clandestinely of a "bootlegging" business until such time, at least, as the authorities might, by an investigation pursued with more than the usual alertness and vigor, discover the unlawful traffic in intoxicants which had unquestionably been carried on therein.

Police Officer Allen, who led the raid on the premises on the occasion in question, testified that in the room in which there was found a quantity of intoxicating liquors he also saw numerous other articles of personal property, including a bed, with bedclothing, "junk, Chinese medicine, shoes, hats, Chinese stamps, and several photographs of Joe Hay (defendant), and several letters addressed to Joe Hay." The envelopes containing the letters referred to were addressed in English, but the letters themselves were in the Chinese language.

The defendant was not in any of the smaller rooms or in compartment No. 320 at the time of the raid, and, when arrested shortly after the raid, was in the restaurant conducted by him in the larger room, numbered 318 First street. The defendant testified that Frank Donnelly, above mentioned, had under lease all of compartment 320 and all the smaller rooms in the rear of both compartments. Explaining the presence in the small room referred to of the bed and the letters, photographs of himself, and other personal property belonging to him, he testified in effect that he indifferently suffered said articles to "lie around" anywhere about the premises, and not because, at the time of the raid, or for some time prior thereto, he occupied said room as his sleeping apartment; that a Chinese cook, employed at "some club" in the city of Marysville, had been and was at the time of the raid occupying the room as his sleeping apartment. He did not give the name of the "Chinese cook."

[2, 3] The evidence, of which the substance is above presented, while not of a direct character as in proof of the guilt of the accused, is circumstantially such as to preclude the declaration by this court that it does not afford sufficient support to the verdict. The defendant was admittedly the lessee of the entire building, and since, as seen, Donnelly, to whom he sublet the No. 320 compartment, had, previous to the raid and the arrest, abandoned his lease and possession of said compartment, it was for the jury to determine the vitally important question whether Donnelly had transferred his sublease and rights thereunder to the said Magee, or the defendant, upon Donnelly's surrender of possession, sublet to Magee, or whether the latter was a mere employee of defendant at the time of the raid. This was really the pivotal question in the case so far as the defendant's defense was concerned; and, the jury having found the defendant guilty, it must be assumed that they rejected his testimony as to Magee's possession of No. 320, the same being wholly uncorroborated, except in so far as the fact of the maintenance of a partition between the two compartments might be regarded as corroborative of his testimony in that respect. The jury, of course, had the right to reject that testimony, or, for that matter, any testimony given in the case, not arbitrarily, however, but in the exercise of their right and duty to pass upon the question of the credibility of the witnesses, or, which is the same thing, the weight to which their testimony was entitled. Viewing, then, as we may, the testimony offered in support of the defense as having been rejected by the jury as unworthy of belief, we have left in this record nothing but circumstances singularly incriminatory as against the accused, and from which, indeed, the jury, if accepting them as verity, as evidently they did so accept them, could well have been persuaded to the conviction, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant was guilty under the information. At all events, while the defendant's testimony would, if believed and accepted by the jury, have exonerated him, the facts and circumstances presented by the people in support of the charge are not so wanting in persuasive force or not characterized by any such inherent weakness or improbability as to make the case, so far as the evidence is concerned, one of law, or one that would warrant this court in declaring, as a matter of law, that the verdict is devoid of sufficient support. The rule is too well settled hardly to require repetition that, where, in a criminal case, the evidence which bears against the accused, considered by itself, and without regard to conflicting evidence, is sufficient to support the verdict, "the question ceases to be one of law—of which alone this court has jurisdiction—and becomes one of fact upon which the decision of the jury and the trial court is final and conclusive." People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 P. 1069. See, also, People v. Rongo, 169 Cal. 71, 145 P. 1017, in which a conviction was obtained entirely upon circumstantial evidence no more powerful in probative force, apparently, than the evidence pointing to guilt in this case.

ing, as his sleeping apartment, said room, and was therefore in possession thereof and its contents, including the liquors therein found. Indeed, that circumstance would itself warrant the inference that he was in possession of the whole of the premises and all that they contained. Moreover, his testimony that said room—the room in which his letters, photographs, and other articles of personal property were found—was not occupied by him or in his possession is anything but satisfactory, even as it is presented here. He said, as we have seen, that the room had been and was occupied by a Chinese employed as a cook for “some club,” and that the box containing the articles belonging to him was left in that room as a matter of convenience; at least, that was the natural inference from his testimony in that particular. He did not, however, give the name of the Chinese cook, or the name of the club at which he was employed, or where it was located. The jury could justly have concluded, as it is probable they did conclude, that, if the defendant’s testimony in that regard was true, he would have known and, if not directly asked a question calling for it, have voluntarily given the name of the “Chinese cook,” and probably the place at which he was then employed. As a matter of common knowledge, it is known that in small communities, where the Chinese population is limited to a comparatively few persons, every Chinese is acquainted with every other Chinese residing in such communities, and knows his occupation and place of employment. It is also worthy of note, in this connection, that the Chinese so referred to by defendant was not called as a witness in the case, nor was there any explanation given for the failure to call him, if, in point of fact, he was not a mythical individual conjured up by the defendant to sustain an equally mythical alibi, so to speak.

[6] It is next contended that it was error prejudicial to the rights of the accused to allow the police officer who made the raid to testify that the envelopes found in the room in which some of the liquors were found, and which contained letters written in Chinese, bore the name, written in English, of the defendant. The ground of the objection to that testimony was and is that it contravened the mandates of section 1937 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides, inter alia, that, where a writing is sought to be proved, the original thereof “must be produced and proved, except as provided in sections 1855 and 1919.” See, also, sections 1829 and 1830, Code Civ. Proc. It is clear that the testimony objected to here does not come within the purview of said sections. This was not a case of proving the contents or terms of a writing, but one where the purpose was to prove a fact which the witness knew from his own knowledge or of which he derived knowledge from or through his own perceptions. Code Civ. Proc. § 1845. As reasonably might it be contended that, to prove an inscription on a stone monument or a name or words carved on a boulder of great weight and imbedded in the ground, it would be necessary to produce in court the stone or boulder itself. The rule invoked by the defendant against the legal propriety of the testimony here objected to is founded upon the proposition that, where a writing or its terms are vital to the determination of the ultimate fact or issue, the instrument itself, if available to the party relying upon it, must be produced, since it affords the greatest certainty of its real terms or contents, thereby averting the necessity of relying, for proof of the instrument as written, upon the treacherous human memory or the testimony of designing persons interested to prove an instrument of vitally different import from that intended or upon a copy from which, either advertently or inadvertently, important provisions may have been deleted. It is obvious that the reason for the rule can have no application in the present instance.

[7] A like objection was made to the testimony of the same witness that he found in said room a number of photographs of the defendant. The ground of the objection was subsequently swept aside by the introduction in evidence of the photographs themselves. It may parenthetically be observed that the objection that the photographs themselves constituted the best evidence of the fact that they were of the accused lines up nearer to the rule requiring the best evidence of a fact of which the case is susceptible than is the like objection as to the name written on the envelopes.

[8] The defendant was asked on cross-examination, and over his objection was required to answer, the question whether shortly after his arrest on the charge alleged in the information, at the sheriff’s office, in the presence of the sheriff, he directed a colored girl, who was in his employ, to sell certain groceries then situated in No. 320 First street. The answer was that, on the occasion mentioned, he directed the girl to sell certain sugar and coffee which he had in his own part of the building. The asking of the question was at the trial, and is here assigned as prejudicial misconduct on the part of the prosecutor. It does not appear that the district attorney asked the question with knowledge of the fact, if it was a fact, that the defendant when directing the sale of the sugar and coffee as indicated, had reference to sugar and coffee situated in his part of the premises and not in the part known as No. 320. It is therefore to be assumed that he had no such knowledge at the time he propounded the question and asked it in good faith. We cannot, therefore, say that the asking of the question involved misconduct. If it was true, however, that the defendant, at the time stated, directed groceries or other personal property situated, when he was arrested, in No. 320, to be sold, the question constituted proper cross-examination upon his denial of having possession or control of that part of the building, since that fact would tend in a measure to show that he did at the time of the raid have some personal interest in the business conducted in No. 320, a fact which would tend in some degree to show that the liquors therein found were in his possession, whether solely or jointly with some other person is of no consequence, for, whether the unlawful possession of the liquors by the defendant was several or joint, he would in either case be subject to punishment for such unlawful possession.

No other points than those above considered are made.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

J. W. Roche was convicted of passing a fictitious check with intent to defraud, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. D. Perry, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CASHIN, J. An information was filed in the superior court in and for the county of Alameda charging appellant, J. W. Roche, with having violated section 476 of the Penal Code in passing a fictitious check with intent to defraud, and, further, that prior to the commission of that offense he had been convicted in the superior court in and for the county of Santa Clara of the crime of forgery, and that pursuant to the judgment upon such conviction had served a term of imprisonment in the California state prison at San Quentin. Appellant pleaded "guilty" to the second, but entered a plea of "not guilty" to the first charge in the information, on which charge he was tried and convicted, and by the judgment of the court sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison at Folsom. A motion for a new trial having been denied, he appeals from the order denying the motion for a new trial and from the judgment, urging as ground for reversal that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict.

[1] The facts as shown by the evidence adduced by the prosecution were that appellant on December 1, 1924, in the county of Alameda, indorsed and delivered to one Wong Loy, a Chinese restaurant keeper, an instrument in form a check dated on that day, purporting to have been drawn by one J. C. Bauwer on the Seventh street branch of the Oakland Bank of Savings, for the sum of $49.65, made payable to the order of L. C. Bailey, representing it to be "a good check," and requesting payment to appellant of the amount thereof. The check, though not indorsed by the payee named therein, was accepted by the restaurant keeper, who, not having at the restaurant sufficient money to pay the entire amount, paid to appellant the sum of $10; it being agreed that the balance should be paid on the following day. Thereafter inquiry was made at the banking house of the drawee named, and the fact ascertained, as testified by the assistant manager of the bank and the restaurant keeper, that the bank had no account with J. C. Bauwer. The restaurant keeper thereupon visited appellant at his place of residence, which had been noted by appellant on the back of the check at the time of the indorsement, and demanded repayment of the sum advanced. Appellant agreed to repay when he could procure the sum necessary, but subsequently on the same day, in response to demands of the restaurant keeper, ordered him from the premises with threats of bodily harm. According to the testimony of a police officer appellant stated, following his arrest, that the check had been given to him by a friend residing in the city of Oakland (the name of the person referred to does not appear from the record), and stated, as testified by the officer, that the person named had a telephone. The officer further testified that the name given could not be found in the telephone directory of the city of Oakland, and that appellant stated further that the transaction in the restaurant resulted from the fact that he was then under the influence of intoxicants. It was further testified that search had been made in the city of Oakland and neighboring cities for a person bearing the name of the drawer appearing on the check, but without success. According to the testimony of appellant the check was not written by him, but was indorsed and delivered as security for the payment of the sum advanced by the restaurant keeper, and which sum he agreed and intended to repay on the following day; no denial being otherwise made of the facts testified by the witnesses for the prosecution.

[2-5] The essence of the offense charged in the information was the passing with intent to defraud another of a fictitious check purporting to be a check for the payment of the money of an individual, when, in fact, there was no such individual in existence, knowing the check to be fictitious. Section 476, Pen. Code; People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 P. 538. The testimony of the assistant manager of the bank on which the check was drawn was prima facie evidence of the fictitious character of the check (People v. Eppinger, supra; People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 400, 114 P. 1009; People v. Bernard, 21 Cal. App. 56, 130 P. 1063); and the testimony of the officer that search for the person named as the drawer of the check had been made at the places stated within the county of Alameda, while it does not show the means used therefor or the thoroughness of the inquiry, was sufficient prima facie to establish the fact that no individual of that name existed (People v. Bernard, supra). The intent to defraud and appellant's knowledge of the fictitious character of the check were questions for the jury, and such intent and knowledge were facts which might reasonably have been inferred by them from the circumstances shown by the evidence. People v. Walker, supra; People v. Thal, 61 Cal. App. 48, 214 P. 296; People v. Hamby, 55 Cal. App. 37, 202 P. 907.

The verdict was supported by the evidence, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

FOTHERINGHAM v. MOORE. (Civ. 5141.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 14, 1925.)

Appeal from unappealable order must be dismissed as matter of course.

2. Appeal and error ⇨430(2)—Plaintiff's application for relief from consequences of mistake in specifying unappealable order as subject of appeal held not to entitle her to relief prayed for.

Plaintiff's application for relief from consequences of a mistake in specifying order denying motion for new trial as the subject of the appeal, instead of the judgment, held not to entitle her to relief prayed for, when considered with affidavit upon which application rested and counter affidavits of defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. C. Doran, Judge.

Action by J. H. Fotheringham against Presley E. Moore. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. On defendant's motion to dismiss appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jones, Wilson & Stephenson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. [1, 2] This case came before the court on motion to dismiss plaintiff's appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial. As the purported appeal is not taken from an appealable order, of course it must be dismissed. At the hearing of the motion appellant attempted to show that the notice of appeal was intended to be a notice of appeal from the judgment; and that by inadvertence and excusable neglect, and a resulting clerical error, the notice failed to specify the judgment as the subject of appeal. Thereupon respondent, at said hearing of the motion, waived notice of application for relief from the default resulting from failure to include an appeal from the judgment in said notice of appeal, and consented that the application for relief be heard forthwith. The matter was then submitted on affidavits.

Let it be assumed that upon sufficient showing of facts in excuse of the plaintiff's error, this court could grant relief to plaintiff from the consequences of the stated error in his notice of appeal. See Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Edmonds, 45 Cal. App. 410, 187 P. 755.

Plaintiff's application for relief rests upon the affidavit of the secretary of the firm of attorneys who represented plaintiff in the action. She says that Mr. Collings, of said firm, instructed her to prepare "said notice of appeal," and that by her error, inadvertence, and mistake she worded said notice to the effect that said appeal was from the order instead of from the judgment of the court. She does not in direct terms assert that Mr. Collings instructed her to prepare a notice of appeal from the judgment. After considering said affidavit, together with the counter affidavits filed on behalf of defendant, we think that plaintiff is not entitled to the demanded relief.

Plaintiff's application is denied, and the appeal is dismissed.

BRACKLEY v. BRACKLEY. (Civ. 5266.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1925.)

Husband and wife ⚭133(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding that wife was sole owner of property.

In action by husband to have declared his interest in property claimed by wife, evidence held to sustain finding that wife was sole owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by Frank A. Brackley against Daisy May Brackley. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John C. Miles, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. G. Ferrahian, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The appellant and respondent, husband and wife, shortly before this action was commenced, separated and thereafter continued to live separate and apart. On the 17th day of August, 1921, the husband commenced the action, and in the second amended complaint alleged that the plaintiff and the defendant are husband and wife; that the plaintiff and the defendant are the owners of certain real estate (describing two lots in the city of Hawthorne, county of Los Angeles); that said real estate stands of record in the name of the defendant, but said property is the joint property of the plaintiff and the defendant; that the value of said real estate is $4,000; that the plaintiff is the owner of an undivided one-half interest therein, and that the defendant claims to own the whole of said property and that the said property is her separate property. On the foregoing facts the plaintiff asked a decree establishing his title of record. The defendant filed an answer in which she denied any ownership rested in the plaintiff, and alleged that she was the sole owner, and that on the 24th day of August, 1920, about two months prior to her marriage, that she bought the property from J. I. Yorke for the sum of $2,950 and paid down $1,750, and gave a mortgage back to said J. I. Yorke for the sum of $1,200, and that said mortgage was being paid in monthly installments of $35 or more. The case was tried before the judge of the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendant, and from a judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, claiming that the findings are not sustained by the evidence.

On the trial of the case the defendant was called as a witness, and testified that she was formerly the wife of Harry F. Squire residing at Joliet in the state of Illinois. Later Mr. Squire obtained a divorce. In the settlement of their affairs Mr. Squire paid to her in the year 1920 in July $250, and in August $250, and in the latter part of September $2,500. On the 24th of August, 1920, she paid, as the first payment on the lots, $250. Thereafter, on the 1st day of October, 1920, she made another payment of $1,500, received her deed, and executed a mortgage back to the former owner. She testified that all of the payments were made by her out of the moneys so received by her from Mr. Squire. Under her contract she agreed to make the deferred payments in the sum of $35 per month. The defendant further testified that thereafter she made the payments, and that she had so paid $546, and that there remained due $654.

The plaintiff and the defendant intermarried on the 4th day of October, 1920. Thereafter the plaintiff was employed on a weekly salary of $39.50 or less. After the parties married the plaintiff worked on the premises making alterations and repairs and additions. The defendant testified that all bills for materials were paid by her out of the moneys which she had received from Mr. Squire. The labor done and performed by the plaintiff consisted of painting, calsomining, building a chicken yard, laying a sidewalk, and other minor matters. There is no testimony in the record to the effect that the parties agreed that the services of the plaintiff were to be paid by the wife. The contention of the plaintiff is that he advanced to the defendant $200 to make the initial payment, and that out of the proceeds of his time checks the defendant made the deferred payments above mentioned. In this connection the plaintiff does not give testimony regarding any specific item except the $200 which he claimed went into the initial payment. In her testimony the defendant flatly contradicted all of the husband's statements regarding any payments being made by him, or out of moneys given to her by him, or out of moneys earned by him. In this condition of the record it cannot be said that the finding of the trial court was not sustained by the evidence, but on the other hand it must be frankly stated that the evidence preponderated in favor of the respondent.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action in claim and delivery by W. T. Kinsey against John M. Boyes, as Sheriff of Sonoma County, and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, wherein J. F. Ryan was substituted for the defendant Sheriff. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, for appellant.

E. S. Page, of Oakland, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. On the 20th day of January, 1923, the plaintiff and one J. H. Madison entered into a conditional contract of sale, whereby the said J. H. Madison conditionally sold to the plaintiff a certain Nash automobile for the sum of $900, $360 payable in cash, and the remainder thereof as follows: $108 on February 15, 1923; $108 on March 15, 1923; $108 on April 15, 1923; $108 on May 15, 1923; and $108 on June 15, 1923. Possession of the automobile was then and there delivered to the plaintiff.

The conditional contract of sale provided, first, that, if the monthly payments were not made as provided therein, they should bear interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month until paid. It was also further conditioned that the purchaser should keep the property insured, and take other precautions for its safety, and keep it within the territorial limits of the state of California. It was then provided, that, if the purchaser failed to make the payments as stipulated, the party of the first part might, at his option, retake possession of said automobile, including all new parts added thereto by the buyer, and that the rights of the purchaser should thereupon terminate, and action might be begun for the collection of the remaining installments set forth in the contract and then remaining unpaid, or might waive the conditions of the contract, consider the sale absolute, and sue for the balance due, or take possession of the automobile, sell the same, apply the proceeds toward the payment of the balance due and, in case of deficiency, proceed against the buyer for the amount due thereon, or that the seller might avail himself of any and all rights, privileges, or elections which are or may be granted to a seller by operation of law. On the 23d day of January, 1923, said J. H. Madison, for the purpose, as shown by the testimony, of giving collateral security for general advances to be made to him by the Sonoma County National Bank, assigned his interest in said contract to the Sonoma County National Bank by a written assignment in the following words:

"For value received, J. H. Madison hereby transfers, assigns, and sets over all its right, title, and interest in and to the within contract and in and to the property therein described, and to all of the moneys payable thereunder to Sonoma County National Bank, and hereby guarantees the payment of all moneys due or to become due under the said contract, and also the full performance by the second party therein named of all the second party's promises and covenants and it hereby consents that the time of payment of any of the said installments therein provided may be extended at the request of the second party, notice of which is hereby waived.

"Dated, the 23d day of Jan., 1923.

"J. H. Madison."

Thereafter and on the 13th day of April, 1923, in an action instituted by the Sterling Lumber Company against the said W. T. Kinsey, wherein an attachment was levied, the defendant John M. Boyes, as sheriff of the county of Sonoma, levied upon the automobile herein mentioned. Thereupon and on the 20th day of April, 1923, the seller mentioned in the conditional contract herein referred to, filed his third party claim as owner of said automobile in the following words and figures, to wit:

(Title of Court and Cause.)

"Notice of Claim Under Conditional Sale Contract.

"State of California, County of Sonoma—ss.:

"J. H. Madison, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is the owner of that certain Nash automobile, engine number 13856, state license number 121,680, taken under attachment issued in the above-entitled cause from the defendant W. T. Kinsey; that said W. T. Kinsey is in possession of said automobile under a conditional sale contract dated Petaluma, California, January 20, 1923, for the total sum or price of $900.00; that there is now due affiant from defendant the installment due on the 15th day of April, 1923, amounting to $108.00, together with interest from the date of the contract at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum; that there will accrue on the 15th day of May and the 15th day of June, 1923, respectively, installments of $108.00 together with like interest; that affiant hereby demands of the sheriff either the possession of said car or that said sheriff shall pay to affiant the above installments now due and to accrue in full in cash within five days from the receipt of this notice and affidavit.

"This notice and affidavit is given in accordance with sections 689, 689a, and 689b of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, and affiant hereby claims and demands all of the right accorded to him under said provisions of the law. J. H. Madison.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 18th day of April, 1923. [Seal.] E. J. Dole, Notary Public in and for the County of Sonoma, State of California.

"(Indorsed) Received in the sheriff's office of Sonoma Co., Cal. Apr. 20, 1923, at 35 min. past 9 o'clock A. M."

Following the filing of this claim, a representative of the Sterling Lumber Company went with said Madison and the sheriff to the place of business of the Sonoma County National Bank, where the said representative of the Sterling Lumber Company paid to the Sonoma County National Bank the unpaid portion on said contract, then amounting to the sum of $324, and received from said Sonoma County National Bank said contract, with the following indorsements thereon:

"For value received, we hereby transfer, assign, and set over all our right, title, and interest in and to the within contract and in and to the property therein described and to all of the moneys payable thereunder to the Sterling Lumber Company.

"The Sonoma County National Bank,

"By A. P. Behrens, Cashier.

"[In pencil:] W. T. Kinsey made the following payments:

February 15, '23.....	$108 00
Mar. 15, '23.....	108 00
Sterling Lumber Company paid the balance, April 23, '23.....	324 00
	$540 00"

The sheriff then stored the automobile and retained possession thereof up to the time of the trial of this action.

The Sterling Lumber Company was unsuccessful in its attachment suit, judgment being entered in favor of the said W. T. Kinsey, the defendant in that action and the plaintiff in this. After the rendition of judgment in favor of the defendant in the attachment suit, the plaintiff in this action, demand was made upon the sheriff for the return of the attached automobile. This demand not being complied with by the sheriff, this action was begun for its recovery, or for the value thereof. The complaint is in the usual form of claim and delivery for personal property. The defendants in this action admitting the attachment of the property, set up in their answer the conditional contract of sale, to which we have referred, and, among other things, alleged as follows:

"That on or about the 23d day of January, 1923, said J. H. Madison assigned, transferred, and set over said contract to the Sonoma County National Bank, a corporation. That after defendant sheriff had levied on said automobile, to wit, on the 20th day of April, 1923, a third party claim was filed with defendant sheriff claiming title to said automobile under and by virtue of said contract of conditional sale with J. H. Madison and Sonoma County National Bank. That thereupon, said Sterling Lumber Company, in pursuance of law, paid the amount unpaid under said conditional sale contract, and said contract of conditional sale was assigned and transferred by said Sonoma County National Bank to said Sterling Lumber Company. That said Sterling Lumber Company is now the owner and holder thereof."

It is further pleaded by defendants that the said W. T. Kinsey, the plaintiff herein, did not make the three payments provided to be made on the 15th day of April, 15th day of May, and 15th day of June, respectively, and that the whole of said sums remained unpaid and that, pursuant to the terms of the contract of conditional sale, the Sterling Lumber Company had declared all rights of said W. T. Kinsey in and to said automobile to be at an end.

There is no testimony in the record showing that such payments have not been made by the plaintiff, nor is there any testimony in the record showing that the Sterling Lumber Company has exercised any election whatever in the matter of the forfeiture of the plaintiff's ownership or right to the automobile in question, or has taken any proceedings whatever under and by virtue of the terms of the conditional sale contract herein referred to. It may be here stated that the conditional sale contract does not provide by any of its terms that, upon failure of the buyer to make payments as therein provided, the buyer's rights in and to the automobile shall ipso facto terminate and thereafter be considered as ended. It provides simply, as we have hereinbefore stated, for certain remedies which the seller may take upon his election. The court, in its findings found that the defendant sheriff is in possession of the automobile in question, that he had refused to deliver the same to the plaintiff, that his withholding thereof is not unlawful, and then the execution of the conditional contract of sale, as we have stated. The court also made the following findings:

"That on or about the 23d day of January, 1923, said J. H. Madison assigned, transferred, and set over said contract to the Sonoma County National Bank, a corporation. That after defendant sheriff had levied on said automobile, to wit, on the 20th day of April, 1923, a third party claim was filed with defendant sheriff claiming title to said automobile under and by virtue of said contract of conditional sale with J. H. Madison and Sonoma County National Bank. That thereupon, said Sterling Lumber Company paid the amount unpaid under said conditional sale contract, and said contract of conditional sale was assigned and transferred by said Sonoma County National Bank to said Sterling Lumber Company. That said Sterling Lumber Company is now the owner and holder thereof."

It is then further found that the said W. T. Kinsey had not paid the last three payments mentioned in said conditional contract of sale, and that, by reason of said default in making said payments, the Sterling Lumber Company had declared all rights of said W. T. Kinsey to said automobile to be at an end; that said Sterling Lumber Company was the owner of said automobile and entitled to the possession thereof. Conclusions of law were drawn to the effect that the Sterling Lumber Company was the owner of said automobile, and judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by his action was entered. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It is insisted by the appellant that under the terms of section 689b, Code of Civil Procedure, and as alleged in defendant's answer, when the Sterling Lumber Company, in pursuance of law, paid the amount unpaid on said conditional contract, the absolute and unconditional title to the automobile in question immediately passed to the plaintiff in this action. That section, after setting forth the manner in which property subject to a conditional sale may be attached and requiring the deposit or payment of the unpaid portion of the contract, concludes, "then the title shall pass to the buyer and the property may be sold as in this chapter provided, free of all lien or claim of the seller"; the contention being that, immediately upon the payment of the $324, as hereinabove stated by the Sterling Lumber Company, the absolute title to the automobile under the last clause of said section became vested in the purchaser of the automobile named in said contract, to wit, the plaintiff herein. To support this contention, our attention is expressly called to the case of Carstenbrook v. Wedderien, 7 Cal. App. 465, 94 P. 372, wherein this court was considering sections 2969 and 2970 of the Civil Code, where the procedure is set forth for attaching personal property, covered by a chattel mortgage. The mortgagee had been paid the amount of his claim, and satisfaction of the mortgage had been entered of record. This court, under such circumstances, held that the action to cancel the satisfaction of the mortgage and subrogate the plaintiff to the rights of the mortgagee could not be had, and, in referring to section 2970, Civil Code, held as follows:

"It is obvious that said section is intended to furnish the exclusive method for the reimbursement of said creditor as the preceding section prescribes the condition by compliance with which he may, under process, take possession of the property."

No assignment of the chattel mortgage was had in that case, nor was there any attempt made to subrogate the plaintiff to the possession or rights held by the mortgagee. In this particular the facts are dissimilar to those in the case at bar. Here there appears an assignment by the bank to the lumber company. It seems to us evident that, if no attachment had been levied, the Sterling Lumber Company might have taken an assignment from the bank of all the interests it held in and to the conditional contract, and we do not perceive any valid reason why such assignment should not be made or taken at any time before the plaintiff had made final and full payment thereon, but, for the reasons herein stated, we do not need to decide the question of where the absolute ownership of the automobile vested upon the performance of the acts which we have narrated. The stipulated evidence of the seller of the automobile, J. H. Madison, is to the effect that the conditional contract was assigned to the bank as collateral security for general advances made and to be made to him by the bank. The record also shows that three months after such assignment to the bank Madison was the one who filed the third party claim setting forth his ownership of the attached automobile. This affidavit and claim of ownership was acted upon by all parties. It is thus apparent that the bank never acquired the ownership of the automobile. This exact question was before the Supreme Court of Washington in Bank of California v. Danamiller, 125 Wash. 255, 215 P. 321, 36 A. L. R. 573. We quote from that case as follows:

"We are convinced that the mere assignment for security of a conditional sales contract does not vest in the assignee the title to the property covered by the contract, and which title is reserved in the vendor. There is, it seems to us, a clear-cut distinction between a purchaser of such a contract and one who receives it only as security. One who purchases outright places himself in the stead of him from whom he purchases. The money he pays represents the value of the property itself, plus the rights of the vendor in the contract. The assignee, being in the shoes of the vendor, must be considered as having taken the title to the property in order that he may comply with the terms of the contract made between the vendor and vendee. The very transaction itself indicates that it was the intention of the parties to transfer the title to the property covered by the contract. Such is the rule of the case of the State Bank of Black Diamond v. Johnson, 104 Wash. 550, 177 P. 340, 3 A. L. R. 235, supra. An assignment of such a contract to a purchaser is, in effect, in the nature of a bill of sale covering the property contracted for. Whether such a transfer of the title to the property, there being of record no bill of sale or other evidence of the transfer to give constructive notice, would be good as against a bona fide purchaser of the subject-matter of the contract, we need not here decide. But one who takes an assignment of the contract only for the purpose of security is in no true sense a purchaser either of the contract or of the property covered by it. He receives only the right to collect and apply to the payment of the debt secured the money which the vendee has obligated himself to pay. When the debt which the assignment is given to secure has been discharged, the interest of the assignee in the contract is also discharged, and he must surrender it to his assignor. The purpose of the assignment having been accomplished, the interest of the assignee in the contract necessarily ceases. The very nature and purpose of the transaction negatives the idea that the assignee receives the actual title. It follows from what we have said that the appellant could not maintain this action on the ground of its ownership of the truck as alleged in its complaint."

No assignment was taken from Madison by the lumber company, and all the title which it received was at the utmost only the title held by the bank. What right and title the Sterling Lumber Company acquired under the contract, and what right or title it now possesses, or what claim or lien, if any, it has against the automobile, need not be decided, and any statement concerning the same would be obiter, for the simple reason that the record does not show a word of testimony concerning such claim, nor is the Sterling Lumber Company a party to this action, but the figures show that the bank at the utmost could not have had a claim or lien against the automobile in excess of the sum of $324, the unpaid balance at the time of the attachment, and therefore could not have assigned to the Sterling Lumber Company a claim or right or lien against the property, or interest in the contract in excess of that sum.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment of the trial court should be, and the same is hereby, reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

TAYLOR v. EXNICIOUS et al. (S. F. 10744.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1925.)

Receivers  212—Surety on bond under void order of court not liable.

A surety of a receiver on a bond, predicated on and given in compliance with an order appointing the receiver, which court had no jurisdiction to make, held not liable.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Charles W. Taylor, trustee in bankruptcy for the Goewey Investment Company, against John Exnicious and the Aetna Casualty & Surety Company. From a judgment dismissing the action as against the defendant last named on its demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin H. Williams, of San Leandro, for appellant.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, J. Plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of the Goewey Investment Company, a corporation, brought an action to recover certain sums of money, together with interest, from the defendant Exnicious, as receiver of the investment company, and the Aetna Casualty & Surety Company, as surety on the receiver's bond. The allegations of the complaint, in substance, are that in an action brought by a stockholder against the Goewey Investment Company the superior court purported to make its order appointing Exnicious as receiver of the company, but that the court had no jurisdiction in the action, "and that said order was and is in excess of the jurisdiction of said court and utterly void and of no effect." The Aetna Casualty & Surety Company executed a receiver's bond for Exnicious in the usual form in the sum of $25,000. Thereupon Exnicious, assuming to act as receiver under the order of the court, seized the assets and business of the investment company, and retained possession thereof until he turned part of the property over to the plaintiff, who had in the meantime been appointed trustee in bankruptcy upon an adjudication that the investment company was bankrupt. While in possession of the property of the investment company, Exnicious received certain sums of money which he has refused and neglected to turn over to plaintiff. During the same period he operated the business of the company at a net loss, and depleted its capital assets to the extent of $7,758.78. The prayer of the complaint is that plaintiff have judgment against Exnicious and his surety for the last-mentioned sum, with interest and costs of suit, and for such other and further relief as may be meet and equitable in the premises.

A demurrer to the complaint interposed by the defendant Exnicious was overruled, and he was given time to answer. The demurrer of the defendant Aetna Casualty & Surety Company was sustained. The plaintiff failing to amend, his default and judgment in favor of the defendant surety company and against him were entered. Thereupon plaintiff appealed.

The real question in the case is that presented by the demurrer of the respondent surety company in the court below, and urged by it on appeal, that the complaint does not state a cause of action against it because of the specific allegation that the superior court had no jurisdiction in the action to make the order appointing the receiver, and that the order was and is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and utterly void and of no effect. Its contention is that, as the court had no jurisdiction to appoint the receiver or to require the bond, the order was invalid, there was no consideration for the execution of the bond, and the surety cannot be held upon it. It cannot be successfully denied, of course, that, if the superior court had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, the appointment was in excess of its jurisdiction, and void. Sullivan v. Gage, 145 Cal. 759, 768, 79 P. 537. The appellant contends, notwithstanding, that it makes no difference, so far as the question of substantive law is concerned, whether the order for the appointment of the receiver was irregular, in the sense that the defect was not jurisdictional, or whether the defect reached to the jurisdiction of the court. He contends for a general rule that the sureties on a bond given by a designated officer or fiduciary, to enable him to exercise the functions of his office, will not be relieved from liability on the bond because of the invalidity of the appointment. While there are cases from other jurisdictions which appear to follow the rule contended for by appellant, this court has consistently adhered to a different doctrine. It was held at a very early date that a bond exacted by a court which had no authority to require it was void. Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 251, 255, 56 Am. Dec. 332: see, also, People v. Cabannes, 20 Cal. 525. In a much later case action was brought upon the official bond of a receiver. It appeared from the complaint that the appointment was made by a court commissioner, instead of by the court or judge. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff failing to amend, judgment went for the defendant. On appeal, this court held that, as the court commissioner had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, the bond given by the receiver was void, and affirmed the judgment. Quiggle v. Trumbo, 56 Cal. 626. In Coburn v. Townsend, 103 Cal. 233, 235, 37 P. 202, it was held that bonds exacted and given under an unconstitutional provision of the Code were void, and a recovery could not be had against the sureties. See, also, City & County of San Francisco v. Hartnett, 1 Cal. App. 652, 82 P. 1064. In Reay v. Butler, 118 Cal. 113, 115, 50 P. 375, it was held that a bond purporting to stay execution, but not given in a case provided by the statute, was void, and the sureties were not liable. See, also, McCallion v. Hibernia S. & L. Society, 98 Cal. 442, 33 P. 329.

We take it therefore to be the well-settled law of this state that a surety upon a bond given pursuant to an order of court or pursuant to a statute becomes such in contemplation of a valid order or valid statute, and not otherwise. If the order appointing the receiver be void, a material consideration for the execution of the bond has failed, and the surety cannot be held upon it. The same rule holds in many other jurisdictions. See Cornant v. Newton, 126 Mass. 105; Mitnacht v. Kellermann, 105 N. Y. 461, 12 N. E. 28; Olds v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 91; Alexander v. Silbernagel, 27 La. Ann. 557; Walker v. Fetzer, 62 Ark. 135, 34 S. W. 536; Alderson on Receivers, p. 188; 34 Cyc. 505, 506; 9 C. J. pp. 27-29.

The condition and obligation of the bond in the instant case is that:

"Whereas, an order was made on the 26th day of June, 1919, by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, appointing the above-named principal receiver in the above-entitled cause, and requiring that a bond be executed by said receiver in the sum above named: Now, therefore, if the said John Eknicious, as such receiver, shall faithfully perform the duties of his office, according to law and the orders of said court, then this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

The bond is squarely predicated upon and is given in compliance with an order which the court had no jurisdiction to make. In Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co., 138 Cal. 543, 69 P. 250, 71 P. 701, a contractor's bond recited that it was given pursuant to section 1203 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring contractors for the erection of buildings to secure their contracts by bonds. The section was declared unconstitutional, and the bond was held to be void. The contention that the bond might be considered a common-law undertaking was denied consideration. In Loop Lumber Co. v. Van Loben Sels, 173 Cal. 228, 235, 159 P. 600, the court held that, as the legislative act requiring the giving of the bond in suit was ineffectual for that purpose, the bond was without consideration and void.

The appellant has cited a number of cases, for the most part from other jurisdictions, but they do not overcome the weight of authority supporting the rule which prevails in this state. Baker v. Bartol, 7 Cal. 551, is not in point. In that case application was made to a court, having jurisdiction for the appointment of a receiver. In order to avoid that being done, the defendant consented to the court making an order requiring him to give a bond to secure his accounting for the property in his possession. Such a bond was given, and in a subsequent action against the sureties the court held that the bond was executed as a voluntary act on the principal's part, based upon a good consideration, and was good as a common-law obligation. So in Smith v. Fargo, 57 Cal. 157, 159, an attachment bond did not conform to the requirement of the statute, but was given voluntarily upon a sufficient consideration, and was held good as a common-law bond. We deem it futile to further discuss the authorities relied upon by appellant. Those from other jurisdictions will be found collected in the citations contained in an extensive note in 18 A. L. R. 274. No California case is there cited, and we have found none which in our opinion supports the position of the appellant.

The conclusion we have reached on the main issue presented by the appeal renders it unnecessary to consider the other points relied upon by respondents to further support the action of the court below.

The judgment is affirmed.

74 Cal. App. 404

Ex parte NICHOLS. (Cr. 1290.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 2, 1925.)

1. Municipal corporations ⇨639(1)—Municipality may maintain prosecution for violation of its ordinances in name of people of state.

In view of Const. art. 6, § 20, and Pen. Code, § 684, and San Francisco Charter, art. 5, c. 8, §§ 2, 3, the city and county of San Francisco, which adopted a charter under provisions of Const. art. 12, § 8, may prosecute violation of its ordinances in name of people of state of California.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨597—Methods for conveyance of sewage from private dwellings within branch of police power pertaining to public health; "plumbing."

Regulations by ordinance of methods and devices for conveyance of sewage from private dwellings is an exercise of branch of police power pertaining to public health, and word "plumbing," as used in plumbing law of city and county of San Francisco, includes the pipes, fittings, and fixtures for conveyance of such sewage.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Plumbing.]

3. Municipal corporations ⇨591, 597—Ordinance requiring permit for installation of sewage systems in private dwellings to be granted by board of health held valid and not delegation of city's power.

There being no provision in charter of city and county of San Francisco, art. 2, c. 2, § 1, article 6, c. 1, § 9, subds. 1, 2, 5, or article 10, §§ 3 and 4, regulating the installation or alterations of sewage systems in premises privately owned, requirements of plumbing law that permit therefor be granted by board of health is not in conflict with powers of board of public works, or delegation to former of power to legislate thereon.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨111(4)—Statutes ⇨64(1)—Possible invalidity of independent provision cannot affect validity of other provisions.

The possible invalidity of an independent provision in an act or ordinance cannot affect validity of other provisions therein, unless giving of such partial effect would accomplish purpose not intended by lawmaking power, or unless no one part could be eliminated without destroying force of whole act.

5. Habeas corpus ⇨92(1)—Sufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction not reviewable.

In habeas corpus seeking release from custody after conviction of violation of plumbing law of San Francisco, questions as to effect or sufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction cannot be reviewed.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨597—Sewer pipe in building forming part of sewage system held part of "plumbing" of such building.

Sewer pipe, forming part of system for conveyance of sewage from a building, held to constitute "plumbing" in such building, within meaning of plumbing law of San Francisco, requiring permit before installation or alteration thereof.

Application by George V. Nichols for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, to secure the release of petitioner from custody after conviction of violation of plumbing law. Writ dismissed, and petitioner remanded.

Chas. W. Kitts, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

R. M. J. Armstrong, of San Francisco, for respondent Sheriff of City and County of San Francisco.

Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., of San Francisco, for respondent Barendt, representing Board of Health.

CASHIN, J. Petitioner was convicted in the police court of the city and county of San Francisco of a misdemeanor; as a punishment was sentenced to pay a fine, and in default of such payment to be imprisoned. Having been committed pursuant to the judgment, he has applied for a writ of habeas corpus.

The complaint in the action, which was prosecuted in the name of the people of the state of California, charged a violation of an ordinance of the city and county known as the "Plumbing Law," making it a misdemeanor for any person to install or to alter the plumbing in any new or old building or in any premises therein without first obtaining a permit from the board of health of the city and county; the complaint alleging that petitioner installed and changed certain sewer pipe on premises described therein by reference to a street and number in that city and county without first obtaining a permit as provided by the ordinance mentioned.

[1] It is contended by petitioner that, the city and county of San Francisco having adopted, under the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution of the state of California, a charter for its own government, any prosecution for a violation of its ordinances can be maintained only in the name of the municipality and not in the name of the people of the state of California.

A violation of the ordinance in question being made an offense punishable by both fine and imprisonment, petitioner's contention is met, not only by the provisions of such charter (sections 2 and 3, c. 8, art. 5), giving to the police court exclusive jurisdiction of all prosecutions for the violation of ordinances, and requiring that the proceedings in that court shall be conducted in accordance with state laws regulating proceedings in justices' and police courts, but by the constitutional and statutory requirement that criminal actions shall be prosecuted in the name of the people of the state. Article 6, § 20, Const. of Cal.; section 684, Pen. Code; In the Matter of Clark, 24 Cal. App. 389, 141 P. 831; Santa Barbara v. Sherman, 61 Cal. 57.

It is further urged that the provisions of the ordinance requiring the procurement from the board of health of permits for the doing of work of the character mentioned are void as an attempt to confer on that board powers which by the charter are vested in the board of public works. It is provided by subdivision 1, section 9, c. 1, of article 6 of the charter, that the board of public works shall have charge, superintendence, and control, under such ordinances as may be adopted by the supervisors, of all public streets and places, with exclusive authority in that connection to prescribe rules and grant permits in conformity with such ordinances for the construction, laying down, and taking up of sewers and drains therein; and while by subdivisions 2 and 5 of the same section that board is given charge, superintendence, and control under such ordinances "of all sewers, drains and cesspools and of the work pertaining thereto or to the drainage of the city and county," and "the supervision of any and all building construction in the city and county," it is granted exclusive authority to issue permits only in connection with the construction, taking up and laying down of such sewers and drains in public places.

The board of supervisors has general power to enact all necessary sanitary laws and regulations (charter, art. 2, c. 2, § 1), and it is further provided that the board of health shall have the control of all matters pertaining to the preservation, promotion, and protection of the lives and health of the inhabitants of the city and county, it being made the duty of the latter board to enforce all ordinances, rules, and regulations adopted by the board of supervisors for the protection of the public health (charter, art. 10, §§ 3 and 4).

[2] Regulation by ordinance of methods and devices for the conveyance of sewage from private dwellings in municipalities is recognized as an exercise of that branch of the police power which pertains to the public health; and the word "plumbing" is held to include the pipes, fittings, and fixtures for the conveyance of such sewage. 31 Cyc. p. 890; Bregman v. Winkler, 120 Misc. Rep. 483, 198 N. Y. S. 758.

[3] No provision being made by the charter regulating the installation or alteration of such systems in premises privately owned, or for the granting of permits therefor or inspection by the authorities of such work either during its progress or upon completion, and such regulation being within the powers granted to the supervisors, the requirement that a permit therefor be granted by the board of health, and that there be an inspection thereof by officers duly authorized, is not in conflict with the powers of the board of public works, or a delegation to the board of health of the power to legislate as to the terms or conditions upon which a permit should issue, but a proper preliminary requirement in order that it may be ascertained that the work or alteration proposed would be in accordance with the sanitary regulations of the board of supervisors, and may at the proper time be inspected to the end that the public health be preserved and protected. In re Holmes, 187 Cal. 640, 203 P. 398; Laurelle v. Bush, 17 Cal. App. 409, 119 P. 953; Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 125, 13 P. 310.

[4] It is further urged that certain provisions of the ordinance requiring those who would engage in the business of plumbing to submit to examination by the board of health as to their qualifications, to pay certain fees, and file an undertaking with that board for the faithful performance of duty, as conditions precedent to registration as plumbers, and making it unlawful to engage in the business of plumbing without procuring a certificate of registration, render the ordinance invalid in that the power to require such examination, if it exists, is vested in the board of supervisors and could not be delegated to the board of health.

The question of the validity of these provisions of the ordinance is, however, not necessary to be determined in this proceeding. Petitioner was not charged with having been engaged in the business of plumbing in violation of the ordinance, but with the doing of certain acts without the permit required to be obtained by all persons, whether registered plumbers or others, who would perform the acts therein mentioned.

The provision of the ordinance requiring the permit here in question had no necessary relation to the provisions thereof fixing the qualifications of those engaged in the business of plumbing, and was directed solely to enforcing compliance with sanitary regulations as to the methods and devices to be used in the conveyance of sewage and the inspection of the system as installed or changed.

The possible invalidity of an independent provision in an act cannot affect the validity of other provisions therein unless the giving of such partial effect would be to accomplish a purpose not intended by the lawmaking power, or unless all the parts of the act are so interdependent as that no one part can be eliminated without destroying the force of the whole act. In re Spencer, 149 Cal. 396, 86 P. 896, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105; In re Mitchell, 19 Cal. App. 567, 126 P. 856; Roberts v. Police Court, 148 Cal. 131, 82 P. 838.

[5, 6] Petitioner urges further as a fact conceded at the trial that the act alleged to have been done in violation of the ordinance was the alteration of a certain sewer without, though alleged in the complaint to have been situated within, a described building; and that the word "plumbing" as used in the ordinance does not properly include sewers either within or without a building, though a part of the system used in the conveyance of sewage therefrom.

The question of fact suggested cannot be considered in this proceeding. Petitioner having been found guilty as charged in the complaint, questions as to the effect or sufficiency of the evidence cannot be here reviewed (In re Leonardino, 9 Cal. App. 690, 100 P. 708; In re Gutierrez, 46 Cal. App. 94, 188 P. 1004); and we are of the opinion that a sewer pipe within and forming a part of a system for the conveyance of sewage from a building may reasonably and should be held to constitute within the meaning of the ordinance a part of the plumbing in such building.

The complaint having stated a public offense of which the police court had jurisdiction, the proceedings and process being regular in form, and the provisions of the ordinance under which the conviction was had not being shown to be invalid, the writ is dismissed and petitioner remanded.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

PEOPLE v. PARKER. (Cr. 1253.)

1. Infants $\S$ 20—Statute defining offense held to create exception to statute relating to punishment where more than one penalty authorized.

Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, declaring it a felony for any person to commit any lewd or lascivious act on the body of a child under the age of 14 years, with intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying sexual desires of such person or child, but excluding from its purview acts constituting offenses otherwise punished, creates an exception to section 654, declaring act punishable under different provisions of Code may be punished under either of such provisions.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 29—That certain of defendant's acts constituted statutory rape held not to preclude conviction for preceding lewd acts.

That certain of defendant's acts may have constituted crime of statutory rape held not to preclude conviction for preceding lewd and lascivious acts, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 288.

3. Rape $\S$ 16(5)—Assault with intent to commit rape on female under age of consent may be committed notwithstanding her actual consent.

Assault with intent to commit rape on female under age of consent may be committed notwithstanding her actual consent.

4. Rape $\S$ 16(1)—Existence of specific intent is essential to offense of assault with intent to commit rape.

Existence of specific intent is essential to offense of assault with intent to commit rape.

5. Rape $\S$ 16(1)—Intent and overt act essential to crime of attempt to commit rape.

Intent, and an overt act falling short of execution of ultimate design, are essential to crime of attempt to commit rape, though overt act need not be last proximate act to consummation of contemplated rape.

6. Rape $\S$ 16(1)—The overt act essential to offense of attempt to commit rape must be something more than mere preparation.

The overt act essential to offense of attempt to commit rape must be something more than mere preparation.

7. Infants $\S$ 20—Finding that defendant's acts did not constitute offense under another statute warranted, and conviction under statute for lewd conduct with child sustained.

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, for lewd and lascivious conduct with a child under 14, held that, though intent necessary to make act otherwise punishable might be assumed, jury were warranted in finding no such intent accompanied preceding acts as would make them punishable under some other section, and that conviction under such section was warranted.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 738—It is province of jury to determine whether intent essential to offense charged existed.

Where intent is essential element of offense charged, it is province of jury to determine whether it existed in accused's mind when he committed act.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 29—Separate crimes may be committed, though so connected in point of time that evidence relating to each cannot be separated.

One may commit two separate and distinct crimes, though they are so closely connected in point of time that it is impossible to separate the evidence relating to them.

10. Criminal law $\S$ 29—That evidence relating to lewd conduct and subsequent rape inseparable not bar to conviction for former.

That lascivious conduct constituting violation of Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, was so closely followed by act of rape that it was impossible to separate evidence relating to the two offenses does not bar conviction under named section.

11. Criminal law $\S$ 29—That rape committed following lewd conduct is not bar to conviction for latter.

That crime of rape was committed following lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, does not bar conviction for latter offense.

In prosecution for lewd and lascivious conduct with child, it is exclusive province of jury to determine weight to be given complaining witness' testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

J. M. Parker was convicted of lewd and lascivious acts on and with the body of a female child under the age of 14 years, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. & Guy Lewis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant was charged under section 288 of the Penal Code with committing certain lewd and lascivious acts upon and with the body of a female child under the age of 14 years, with the intent specified in that section. He was found guilty as charged, and now appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Section 288 reads, in part:

"Any person who shall wilfully and lewdly commit any lewd or lascivious act, other than the acts constituting other crimes provided for in part two [one]" [as authority for the substitution of "one" for "two" see People v. Troutman, 187 Cal. 313, 201 P. 928] "of this Code, upon or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a child under the age of fourteen years, with the intent of arousing, appealing to or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person, or of such child, shall be guilty of a felony. * * *

[1] The provision to the effect that lewd and lascivious acts, to be punishable under this section, must be "other than the acts constituting other crimes provided for in part two [one] of this Code" constitutes an exception to the general rule announced in section 654, wherein it is declared that:

"An act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this Code may be punished under either of such provisions."

Appellant's main contention is that the acts committed by him, as testified to by the complaining witness, amounted to the crime of rape, as defined by subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code, the crime of attempt to commit rape, punishable under section 664, and the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, punishable under section 220 of that Code, each of the two last-mentioned crimes being necessarily included within the crime of rape. 22 Cal. Jur., article "Rape," pars. 13 and 14; People v. Horn, 25 Cal. App. 583, 592, 144 P. 641; People v. Babcock, 160 Cal. 537, 117 P. 549. Wherefore it is claimed that the evidence fails to support the charge of a violation of section 288, which makes punishable only such acts of a lascivious nature as do not constitute other crimes provided for in part 1 of the Code.

The testimony of the little girl is of so loathsome a nature that we find it preferable to set forth no more of her sordid story than will suffice for an adequate consideration of the questions presented. The evidence educed by the people tends to show the following: Appellant is a man of mature years.

The victim of his lust, a girl 11 years of age at the time of the offense, lived with her mother in the city of Los Angeles. On January 8, 1925, appellant took the girl to Long Beach. Arriving in that city, he proposed that they "rest for awhile." He then engaged a room in a hotel, which the two occupied during the remainder of the day and all of the following night. Soon after entering the room appellant pulled down the folding bed and told the girl to lie down and "rest for awhile." Thereupon they both lay on the bed, close together, facing each other. While in this position appellant put his arms around the girl, kissed her, and rubbed his hand on her bloomers—a garment which she wore under her dress in lieu of drawers. He then pulled down her bloomers "to get inside," as she described it. After this there followed an act of sexual penetration, which, though slight—it was not enough to rupture the hymen—was penetration nevertheless.

From the foregoing it will be seen that appellant's conduct, from the time he commenced fondling the girl, consisted of a number of separate and distinct acts, performed in sequence and of such a character that they may be grouped in three distinct categories, as follows: (1) Fondling the girl in a manner calculated to arouse appellant's passions and sexual desires—i. e., embracing and kissing her while the two lay close together on the bed and rubbing his hand on her bloomers; (2) pulling down the bloomers so as "to get inside"; and (3) sexual penetration.

[2] In determining whether appellant is punishable under section 288 we shall consider these three classes of acts in their inverse order. Without doubt, the last act, sexual penetration, constituted the crime of rape. Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 1, and section 263. As rape is one of the "other crimes provided for in part two [one]" of the Code, it is manifest that on the trial of appellant for violating section 288 he could not be punished for the last of the above enumerated series of acts. But it does not necessarily follow that he could not be punished under section 288 for any one of the preceding acts. See People v. Lind (Cal. App.) 229 P. 990, where we held that one who has committed lewd and lascivious acts leading up to the consummation of the crime of sodomy may be punished for his preliminary acts under this section of the Code.

If all of the acts which preceded actual sexual penetration, i. e., all of those which are included within the first and second of our three categories, must be held necessarily to have constituted the crime of attempt to commit rape, or the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, then appellant is not punishable under section 288. But if there be any one of those antecedent acts of lewd and lascivious conduct which, when viewed in the light of all that happened, does not necessarily constitute an attempt to commit rape, or an assault with intent to commit rape, then the jury was free to convict appellant of the crime for which he was on trial. The question, then, resolves itself into this: Are the circumstances of the case such that if the jurors found that appellant committed all of the lewd and lascivious acts which preceded the final act of sexual penetration, they necessarily must also have found that each and every essential element of the crime of attempt to commit rape, or of the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, existed as to each of such antecedent acts? Before undertaking to answer this question we shall briefly consider the elements which constitute the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, and likewise those which constitute the crime of attempt to commit rape, where the victim is under the age of consent.

[3] It is the established law in this state that where the female is under the age of consent there may be an assault with intent to commit rape notwithstanding her actual consent. The reason is that in such cases the female cannot consent to the assault. The law resists for her. People v. Verdegren, 106 Cal. 211, 39 P. 607, 46 Am. St. Rep. 234; People v. Roach, 129 Cal. 33, 61 P. 574; People v. Babcock, supra. In People v. Babcock, supra, the court says:

“ * * * One who lays his hands upon such a female, with the intent and for the purpose, then and there, to accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with her, is by so doing guilty of an assault with intent to commit rape, even though he does not use or intend in any event to use any force or violence, and the female in fact offers no resistance whatever, or even expressly consents to all he does. The offense is complete when he has thus laid his hands upon her with the intention of then and there accomplishing such purpose, and it is entirely immaterial that he subsequently voluntarily desists, without accomplishing his purpose.”

[4] But though it is not necessary in such cases that force should be used or resistance made, and it is of no consequence that the female expressly consents, the existence of a specific intent in the mind of the accused then and there to have carnal connection with the girl is an essential element of the crime of assault with intent to commit rape. Indeed, the intent with which the accused touches the person of the female child is said to be the vital consideration in all such cases. As said in People v. Dowell, 136 Mich. 306, 99 N. W. 23:

“The intent is the gist of the offense, and every laying on of hands upon a female under the age of consent, even though improper, does not necessarily imply an intent to have sexual intercourse. Indecent liberties may be taken with a child without any such intent.”

In such cases the laying of hands upon the female and the intent to have intercourse with her must concur as to time. 33 Cyc. p. 1435.

[5, 6] The crime of attempt to commit rape upon a girl under the age of consent is compounded of two elements, viz., the intent to have sexual intercourse with her, and a direct act done towards its consummation but falling short of the execution of the ultimate design. The overt act need not be the last proximate act to the consummation of the contemplated rape. It is sufficient if it be an act apparently adapted to produce the result intended. See People v. Lanzit (Cal. App.) 233 P. 816. The act must, however, be something more than mere preparation. Acts of preparation—acts not proximately leading up to the consummation of the intended crime—will not suffice to establish an attempt to commit the crime. For instance, in People v. Murray, 14 Cal. 159, it was held that declarations of an intent to enter into an incestuous marriage, followed by an elopement for the purpose and sending for a magistrate to solemnize the ceremony, were mere acts of preparation, and did not constitute an attempt to commit the crime. There the court says:

“Between preparation for the attempt and the attempt itself, there is a wide difference. The preparation consists in devising or arranging the means or measures necessary for the commission of the offense; the attempt is the direct movement toward the commission after the preparations are made.” (Italics ours.)

To make the act an indictable attempt “it must be a cause, as distinguished from a condition.” Patrick v. People, 132 Ill. 534, 24 N. E. 620, citing Wharton on Criminal Law. To constitute an attempt to commit rape upon a female under the age of consent, the intention to know the girl carnally must have existed in the mind of the accused at the very time when he did the overt act or acts, for there can be no attempt to commit a crime unless the intent to commit it exists at the time when the attempt is made. “Intention formed subsequent to the attempt,” says Mr. Wharton, “will not be enough, as where a party having in his possession indecent prints (not procured for publication) takes it into his head to publish them, but does not actually publish them.” 1 Crim. Law (11th Ed.) § 215.

Reverting now to the two groups of acts which preceded the act of sexual penetration, and considering them in their inverse order in the light of the foregoing: As to the act included in the second of our three categories—the act of pulling down the girl’s bloomers “to get inside”—we shall assume, for the purpose of this decision only, that an act of that character is one from which the jury, under all the circumstances here disclosed, necessarily must have inferred that it was done by appellant with the specific intent then and there to have carnal connection with the girl.

We also shall assume, for the purpose of this decision only, that this preliminary act reached so far forward toward the accomplishment of the intended crime of rape as to amount to the commencement of its consummation. If these assumptions be indulged, the act constituted both the crime of attempt to commit rape and the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, and therefore it could not be punished under section 288.

[7, 8] No such assumptions as we have made with respect to the act included in the second category can be made with respect to those acts which we have grouped in the first category; i. e., putting arms around the child, kissing her, and rubbing a hand over her bloomers. Those acts, sufficient of themselves to constitute the lewd and lascivious conduct which section 288 denounces (People v. Rossi, 37 Cal. App. 778, 174 P. 916; People v. Dabner, 25 Cal. App. 630, 144 P. 975), were not of such an unequivocal character that it necessarily must be concluded therefrom, even when they are considered in the light of what ensued, that appellant then and there fully intended to follow them with one of sexual penetration. In cases where, as here, the specific intent with which an act was done is the all-important element of the crime, it is the peculiar province of the jury to determine, from all the circumstances of the case, the particular intent existing in the mind of the accused when he committed the act. "In such a case the intent is to be determined by and from the acts committed, and it is not for the judge, but for the jury, to say what particular intent follows from those acts." People v. Barker, 137 Cal. 557, 70 P. 617. The jury in this case undoubtedly would have been warranted in finding that when appellant was hugging the girl, kissing her, and rubbing his hand over her bloomers, he did so with the intent then and there to have carnal connection with her. But the existence of that specific intent at those particular moments is not the only possible conclusion which may reasonably be deduced from the circumstances of this case. It cannot be said with absolute certainty that when appellant put his arms about the girl, kissed her, and rubbed his hand over her bloomers he then and there intended to follow those acts with one of actual sexual penetration. The jury may well have concluded that at this stage of his dastardly conduct appellant intended only to fondle his victim as a means of gratifying his lustful passions, and that later, emboldened by his success and further inflamed with passion, he conceived the nefarious intent to penetrate her body. The jurors, who saw appellant and thus had an opportunity to judge the character of his perverted instincts, were in a position to determine the nature of the intent which actuated him to fondle the girl in the manner he did. What was said in Draper v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 655, is apposite:

"* * * Appellant may have had a morbid sexual desire; he may have fondled prosecutrix; he may have manipulated her parts with his hands; but evidently he did not intend to penetrate her female organ with his penis. * * * As stated before, he may have been afflicted with that form of sexual disease known as fetichism, where the victim, laboring under venereal excitement, simply desires to gratify his lust by contact of his genital organs with any part of the body of a woman. * * * See this question of sexual diseases discussed in 2 Witthaus & B. Med. Jurisp., pp. 493-518."

But irrespective of whether appellant was or was not a sexual pervert of the kind referred to by the Texas court, it is quite possible that the intent to penetrate the girl sexually was not definitely formed until, by fondling her person, he had so inflamed his demoniacal passions that he then for the first time became willing to throw all discretion to the winds and give to unbridled lust an unconstrained license. If this was the real state of things, and the jury may well have inferred that it was, then the antecedent acts of which we are now speaking would not constitute either an attempt to commit rape or an assault with intent to commit rape, and therefore appellant could properly be convicted for those acts under section 288 of the Penal Code.

[9, 10] The fact that appellant's preliminary acts of lascivious conduct, in violation of section 288, were so closely followed by an act of rape that it is impossible to separate the evidence relating to the two crimes does not necessarily raise an insuperable barrier to his conviction of the former crime. It is well settled that one may commit two separate and distinct crimes, even though they are so closely connected in point of time that it is impossible to separate the evidence relating to them. People v. Devlin, 143 Cal. 128, 76 P. 900; People v. Bentley, 77 Cal. 7, 18 P. 799, 11 Am. St. Rep. 225. In People v. Devlin, supra, the court says:

"After one has entered a building with intent to commit any other felony than grand or petit larceny, he has committed burglary, but he may then find that it is impossible, for various reasons, to commit the felony which it was his intention to commit when he entered, and conclude to commit larceny by stealing some article of value in the building. He thus, in rapid succession, commits two crimes."

In the Bentley Case, supra, the court, quoting from Teat v. State, 53 Miss. 456, 24 Am. Rep. 708, says:

"It is believed that no well-considered case can be found where a putting in jeopardy for one act, or a conviction for one act, 'was held to bar a prosecution for another separate and distinct one, merely because they were so closely connected in point of time that it was impossible to separate the evidence relating to them.' * * * If the offenses do not possess the same elements, although both relate to the same transaction, it would seem that both may be punished."

[11] The next point urged by appellant is that the court erred in refusing to give, at his request, the following instruction:

"You are instructed that if you find from the evidence presented, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the private parts of defendant entered those of the prosecuting witness to any degree, then you shall return a verdict of acquittal."

The refusal to give this instruction was not error. As we already have shown, there was evidence to warrant the jury in finding that, in addition to the crime of rape which occurred when the actual sexual penetration took place, there also was a preceding separate and distinct crime of lewd and lascivious conduct, punishable under section 288. It would have been improper, therefore, to instruct the jurors to acquit if they found that the crime of rape was committed.

[12] Finally, it is urged that the story of the complaining witness is improbable, and that the entire evidence in the case preponderates in appellant's favor. A review of the record satisfactorily shows that the testimony of the prosecutrix, if believed by the jury, was amply sufficient to sustain the verdict. As in prosecutions for other crimes, it is the peculiar and exclusive province of the jury in a prosecution for lewd and lascivious conduct with a child to determine what weight shall be given to the testimony of the complaining witness. People v. Lopez, 51 Cal. App. 476, 197 P. 144; People v. Hinrich, 53 Cal. App. 186, 199 P. 1058. Though the record presents a sharp conflict in the evidence, as is usual in this class of cases, there is, as we have said, substantial evidence to support the verdict. The case therefore comes within the well-established rule that—

"If the evidence which bears against the defendant, considered by itself, and without regard to conflicting evidence, is sufficient to support the verdict, the question ceases to be one of law—of which alone this court has jurisdiction—and becomes one of fact upon which the decision of the jury and the trial court is final and conclusive." People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 P. 1069.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

GLOBE INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5389.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 17, 1925.)

Master and servant ☞417(7)—Industrial Commission's finding on conflicting evidence as to cause of injury held final.

Finding of Industrial Commission on conflicting evidence that an injury received by employee in the course of his employment proximately caused, through the agency of a fainting spell, an injury several hours later, held final.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Certiorari by the Globe Indemnity Company, to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission made in favor of Leo W. King. Affirmed.

R. O. Purvis, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Certiorari to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding to one Leo W. King, the applicant below, workmen's compensation benefits.

Substantially, the facts are as follows: King was a pressman in the employ of the Oakland Tribune, and on February 1, 1925, at about 12 o'clock a. m., and during the course of his employment, he sustained an injury to his head by reason of an iron block weighing some 20 pounds falling from the press a distance of about 10 feet and striking him on the head. The blow caused lacerations of the scalp. He immediately received treatment at the Oakland Emergency Hospital, and was thereafter removed to the Oakland Central Hospital for further treatment. At about 9 o'clock following, his head wounds were dressed, and he was given a hypodermic injection of antitetanic serum to prevent lockjaw. He was then instructed to go home and rest. On reaching his home, King proceeded to the basement thereof where his sons were operating a power saw. While standing near the same, he either fainted or fell upon the machine, suffering the loss of a finger and injuring another. Application for adjustment of a claim for workmen's compensation was subsequently asserted by King. The commission in its findings and award determined that the injury occurring at respondent's residence was a direct result of the first injury, which occurred in the course of his employment, and held petitioner for the entire disability. A rehearing was applied for; the claim being made that the evidence was insufficient to justify the award. This was denied. The present application for writ of review followed.

It is admitted that King was entitled to compensation for the injuries sustained by him in the course of his employment, but not for the subsequent injuries suffered at his home, which it is claimed were caused by King attempting to operate the saw. The evidence upon the subject as to whether the applicant was operating the saw or whether while standing near it he fainted by reason of his original injury was conflicting.

King testified positively that he was merely standing by the saw, and the next thing he knew he was on the floor with a doctor caring for him. There is also medical evidence to show that the antitetanic serum might cause fainting, or that such a condition might be brought about by the injury applicant received to his head, which latter injury, it appears, did cause him subsequent trouble.

The award of the commission for injuries to the applicant's finger was based upon the theory that such injuries were proximately caused by the injury received the night previous. While conflicting, there is evidence to support the findings of the commission both as to the manner in which the injury occurred and as to its cause. The findings of the commission upon the subject, therefore, must stand.

The award is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. RODARTE. (Cr. 1264.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 20, 1925.)

Criminal law ⚡409—Uncorroborated extrajudicial admissions of birth in foreign country held insufficient to prove corpus delicti of crime of possessing concealed weapon.

Uncorroborated extrajudicial admission, made by defendant to officers at time of arrest, that he was born in Mexico, is insufficient to prove corpus delicti of offense of possession of concealed weapon by unnaturalized foreign-born person, in violation of Firearms Act, since birth in foreign country is an essential part of the corpus delicti.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Jose Rodarte was convicted of violating Firearms Act, and he appeals. Reversed.

Albert D. Trujillo, of San Bernardino (William G. Randall, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, of Los Angeles, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant was charged with a violation of the Firearms Act (Stats. 1923, p. 695 et seq.). It is made a crime by that act for an unnaturalized foreign-born person to have in his possession a concealed weapon of the type described in the statute. Defendant was found guilty as charged and now appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Possession of the weapon was not disputed, but the only evidence that defendant is of the proscribed class consisted of certain extrajudicial admissions that he was born in Mexico, made by him to the officers at the time of his arrest.

It is insisted by appellant that birth in a foreign country is an essential part of the corpus delicti, and that, since there was no corroboration of his extrajudicial admissions of foreign birth, the evidence is insufficient to prove that element of the crime. The point is well taken. The Supreme Court, in the recent case of People v. Quarez, 238 P. 363, decided since the trial of this case in the court below, held conformably with appellant's contention.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

3. Partnership ⚡298—Dissolution of partnership entitled each partner to accounting of sum to be accounted for.

Partner has no cause of action against copartner as such for recovery of share of assets until accounting is had between them.

5. Partnership ⚡330—Failure to direct accounting held error.

Where findings showed plaintiff was a partner with defendant in agency for sale of land, and answer admitted some funds were on hand by virtue of such contract, failure to direct an accounting in suit therefor held error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Suit for accounting by Roy S. Avery against C. W. Peirson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sebald L. Cheroske, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an action brought by the plaintiff to obtain an accounting. The defendant answered, and a trial was had by the trial court sitting without a jury. After the parties had introduced their evidence tending to prove that there was or was not a fiduciary relation existing between the parties, the trial court declined to order an accounting, and directed that findings be drawn by the defendant. The findings were so drawn, and judgment thereon was entered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Prior to the 20th day of February, 1919, C. A. Canfield Estate and Harbor View Land Company were the owners of lands near the city of San Pedro, Los Angeles county, and were engaged in selling off said lands in small parcels. At that time the defendant held an exclusive sales contract by virtue of which he was entitled to make the sales and receive certain sums of money as compensation. On that date he entered into a contract with the plaintiff in which he agreed to sell the plaintiff a one-half interest in his contracts for the sum of $1,500. It was further agreed that the plaintiff was to pay down $1,000, and thereafter, on April 5, 1919, he was to make a further payment of $500. At the time of making the contract the defendant was devoting his entire time in negotiating sales, and it was further agreed between the defendant and the plaintiff that the plaintiff should at once take up the work and devote his entire time in negotiating sales. In accordance with the contract both parties proceeded to act thereunder, and continued to do so for a period of approximately four weeks. On the date that the contract was made, and continuously thereafter, the defendant was maintaining an office, and was incurring some expenses, but the precise nature thereof or the amount thereof is not disclosed by the record. In his complaint the plaintiff alleged that the defendant "has received large sums of money as and by way of compensation under and by virtue of the terms of" the sales contract held from C. A. Canfield Estate and the Harbor View Land Company. In his answer the defendant did not deny that allegation, but, on the other hand, inserted "admits that by virtue of said contracts defendant has received some compensation." At the end of four weeks the plaintiff severed his connection with the business, and returned to the employment of an oil company. Thereafter from time to time he made demands on the defendant for an accounting, those demands were refused, and the plaintiff commenced this action.

[1-4] The trial court found the facts as stated above. The question presented to this court is whether or not the conclusion of law that the plaintiff was not entitled to an accounting is supported by the findings of fact. Looking back over the foregoing facts, it is quite clear that the plaintiff obtained a present title to the one-half interest which he attempted to buy; that his duties and liabilities attached at once; and that his rights attached at the same time. Every element of a partnership was present, and our attention has not been called to the absence of any factor necessary to constitute the relation of copartners between the plaintiff and defendant after the execution of the contract on February 20, 1919. Civ. Code, § 2395; Chapman v. Hughes, 104 Cal. 302, 37 P. 1048, 38 P. 109. As there was no covenant in the agreement made by the parties to the contrary, the partnership could be and was dissolved by the expressed will of the plaintiff. Civ. Code, § 2450, subd. 2. On the dissolution of the partnership each partner was entitled to an accounting, if there was any sum whatever to be accounted for. Under the admissions of the pleadings, there was in the instant case at least some funds to which the plaintiff was entitled to an accounting. Until that accounting shall have been had neither the plaintiff nor the defendant has a cause of action one against the other. 30 Cyc. 462 et seq.

[5] The record discloses that during the four weeks that the plaintiff was actively participating in the business of selling lots that business was very poor, and that few sales were made. The record discloses that at least certain expenses were continuing during that period of time. Under these circumstances it is clear that an accounting may show very little, if anything, as payable to this plaintiff. Be that as it may, it is his affair. Under the admissions contained in the pleadings and the findings as made by the trial court, the trial court should have entered an order directing that an accounting be had. 1 C. J. p. 613, § 56.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the trial court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

ALEGRETTI v. GARDNER. (Civ. 2985.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 14, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 10, 1925.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨3(4)—Instrument held simply option to purchase real estate which giver could withdraw at any time before acceptance.

Instrument whereby plaintiff granted to defendant exclusive right to buy or sell described property for period of 30 days held not a grant within Civ. Code, § 1215, but a plain, simple option to purchase real estate, unilateral in character, which might be withdrawn by giver at any time prior to its acceptance.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Finding of trial court on sufficient testimony binding on appellate court.

Finding of trial court on sufficient testimony that offer to sell real estate was withdrawn prior to its acceptance is binding on appellate court.

3. Specific performance ⇨105(3) — Cross-complaint, seeking specific performance, held demurrable on ground of laches.

In action to quiet title, begun in August, 1922, defendant's cross-complaint, seeking specific performance, based on written instrument executed in August, 1918, held demurrable on ground of laches, especially where no reasons were assigned why specific performance was not sought prior to lapse of so many years.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Mary A. Alegretti against John Gardner, wherein defendant filed cross-complaint, seeking specific performance. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.

Nutter & Hancock, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff to quiet title. Cross-complaint by defendant and appellant, seeking specific performance, based upon the following written instrument:

"Stockton, California, Aug. 8, 1918.

"I, the undersigned, hereby give and grant unto John Gardner or his assigns the exclusive right to buy or sell that certain piece of property 50x100, together with the two story brick building thereon, known as No. 24-26-28 East Main street, in the city of Stockton, county of San Joaquin, state of California, and this exclusive right is granted for a period of thirty (30) days from date hereof. In case of sale I agree to furnish an abstract of title brought down to date, guaranteeing the title to be free and clear of all incumbrances, and I agree to furnish a grant, bargain, and sale deed of conveyance to the said John Gardner or his assigns on the receipt by me of the sum of $20,000.00 payable in United States gold coin, or whatever equivalent I may desire to accept.

"Mary A. Alegretti."

Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

The court found the execution of the above instrument as set forth on the date therein mentioned and the delivery of the same to the defendant. The court also found upon conflicting evidence that before the defendant had taken any action under and by virtue of the delivery to him of said writing the plaintiff, on the 15th day of August, 1918, withdrew the privilege or option given to the said Gardner to purchase the real estate therein mentioned by executing and delivering to the defendant the following notice:

"To John Gardner, Esq.:

"You will please take notice that the option given you to buy that certain piece of property 50x100 feet, together with the two story brick building thereon, known as Nos. 24-26-28 East Main street, in the city of Stockton, county of San Joaquin, state of California, is hereby withdrawn.

"Dated August 15, 1918.

"Mary A. Alegretti."

The writing first above mentioned was recorded on or about the 16th day of August, 1918, in the office of the county recorder of the county of San Joaquin in the official records of said county. That thereafter no action was taken by the defendant in relation to the exercise of the privilege granted to purchase the premises described in said first-mentioned writing, and the plaintiff, on or about the 23d day of August, 1922, began her action to quiet title to the premises involved, and remove from the title to said premises whatever effect there might be from the recording of the writing hereinbefore mentioned. The plaintiff demurred to the defendant's cross-complaint, and, among other things, raised the question of laches. The court overruled the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendant's cross-complaint, and the plaintiff answered the cross-complaint of the defendant, setting up in her answer the laches of the defendant in seeking specific performance after the lapse of more than four years.

[1-3] Upon this appeal the defendant argues that the writing giving him the exclusive right to buy the real estate referred to within 30 days was and is, in legal effect, a grant, and cites in support of such contention section 1215, Civil Code; Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 8, 79 P. 527; and Hibernia, etc., v. Farnham, 153 Cal. 581, 96 P. 9, 126 Am. St. Rep. 129. We do not need to review the authorities cited by the appellant. It is sufficient to say that they do not support his contention. A reading of the instrument dated August 8, 1918, is all that is necessary to answer the appellant's contention. It is a plain, simple option to purchase real estate, unilateral in character, such as might be withdrawn by the giver at any time prior to its acceptance. The trial court found upon sufficient testimony that the offer was withdrawn prior to its acceptance, and that is binding upon this court. We may further state that the demurrer to the cross-complaint on the ground of laches should have been sustained. The answer of the plaintiff to the cross-complaint sets up that ground as a defense to specific performance, and constitutes a good defense under the pleadings in this case. No reasons whatever are assigned why specific performance was not sought prior to the lapse of so many years. This court, in the case of Superior Cal. Fruit Land Co. v. Grossman, 32 Cal. App. 357, 162 P. 1046, had occasion to consider this question quite fully, and it is only necessary here to refer to the collation of authorities contained in the opinion deciding that case. There being nothing of merit in appellant's appeal, it is hereby ordered that the judgment of the trial court be and the same is hereby affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. MORRIS et al.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 30, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 24, 1925.)

1. Eminent domain $\hookrightarrow$ 124—Damages under Street-Opening Act deemed to accrue at time of order setting case for trial, which date cannot be shifted along by continuances or granting new trial.

In proceeding under Street-Opening Act 1903 and subsequent amendments thereto (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), under section 10 of that act as amended in 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1038, § 5), the right of property owner for damages is deemed to have accrued on date of order setting cause for trial, and this date could not be shifted along from time to time by granting continuances or by order granting new trial, for "new trial" under Code Civ. Proc. § 656, is mere re-examination of same issue of fact tried at first trial.

2. Eminent domain $\hookrightarrow$ 124—Rule of Street-Opening Act as to date of assessment of damages to be construed so far as possible with general rule as to date of assessment thereof in condemnation proceedings.

Under the Street-Opening Act 1903, and subsequent amendments thereto (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), rule as to date of assessment of damages is to be construed so far as possible in harmony with general rule in condemnation proceedings as to date of assessment as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1249.

3. Statutes $\hookrightarrow$ 47—Statute relative to date of determination of damages not void for uncertainty.

Street-Opening Act, 1903, and amendments thereto (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 8198) section 10 as amended by St. 1909, p. 1038, § 5, providing that for purposes an assessment assessing compensation damages should be deemed to have accrued at date of order appointing referee or of order setting case for trial, held not to be void for uncertainty or to fail to furnish rule as to date on which damages accrued in a proceeding thereunder, where one defendant asked jury trial and others left determination of damages to court assisted by referee, but in such case, construing section 10 with section 8 as amended by St. 1909, p. 1037, § 3, and other provisions, phrase in section 10 "the date of order appointing referee" is subordinate to "the order setting the cause for trial," and under this construction court must determine value at date of order setting case for trial.

4. Eminent domain $\hookrightarrow$ 262(5)—Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 6(3)—Order of continuance held not to violate court rules requiring five days' notice of setting case for trial originally, but, if irregular, not prejudicial.

Where a condemnation proceeding under Street-Opening Act 1903, was set for trial on April 23d, but at that time after jury was impaneled and sworn it was found that judge was disqualified to try case and jury was discharged, judge who then took bench, in assigning case to another department and continuing it until next day, did not violate court rule 17 of superior court of Los Angeles county, providing that civil cases may be set for trial upon motion of party on five days' written notice, for under circumstances order was one of continuance and not an original order, but if such procedure was irregular it was not prejudicial.

5. Eminent domain $\hookrightarrow$ 255—Defendant who made no objection below to form of order allowing jury to view premises or method of carrying into effect, could not raise objection on appeal.

In a proceeding under Street-Opening Act 1903, where judge made order allowing jury to view premises, defendant who did not object to form of order or method of carrying it into effect at trial could not object on appeal that required forms of law were not complied with, in that no person was appointed by court charged with a duty of showing premises to jury under Code Civ. Proc. § 610.

6. Evidence $\hookrightarrow$ 502—Court did not abuse discretion in confining cross-examination of witnesses as to value to period reasonably near date in issue.

In proceeding under Street-Opening Act 1903, where issue of fact was value of property on date of order setting case for new trial on which value was to be determined under section 10 of said act, held, it was no abuse of discretion not to permit cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses as to value of property at certain times after such date, and court was justified in confining cross-examination to period reasonably near time in question.

7. Evidence ⇨568(4)—Jury could rest verdict on testimony of same witnesses as to value of land prior to severance and other witnesses' testimony as to percentage of damage.

In a proceeding under the Street-Opening Act 1903, where lowest figure of damages given by witnesses caused by severance was $1,658, held jury's award of $1,500 could not be said to be unsupported by evidence, for jury under facts could have rested its verdict on testimony of some witnesses as to value of property prior to its severance and on testimony of others as to percentage of damage as compared with original value.

8. Eminent domain ⇨241—Separate interlocutory judgment entered against defendant and her mortgagee in proceeding under Street-Opening Act not void because it contained no determination as to rights of other defendants.

In a proceeding under Street-Opening Act 1903, wherein one defendant demanded jury trial and others rested determination of compensation with court assisted by referee, held, that interlocutory judgment rendered after trial by jury was not void because it merely determined rights of defendant who requested jury trial and of her mortgagee and contained no determination as to rights of other defendants; there being nothing under section 12 of said act as amended by St. 1909, p. 1040, § 7, preventing entry of separate judgments, but on the contrary, under Code of Civil Procedure expressly adopted as part of Street-Opening Act by section 6, section 579 provides expressly for entry of several judgments.

9. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Entry of separate interlocutory judgments determining rights of defendant and mortgagee, without determining rights of other defendants, if erroneous, not prejudicial error.

In proceeding under Street-Opening Act where defendant requested jury trial, but others rested decision as to damages with referee appointed by court, court's entry of separate interlocutory judgment as to rights of defendant who requested jury trial and her mortgagee, without determining rights of those who rested case with referee, if irregular, was not prejudicial, and will not be reversed in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, such separate entries being simply matters of procedure, and for all purposes such judgment, together with judgment rendered in case of other defendants, will be considered as constituting one interlocutory judgment on entry of which Street-Opening Act, § 15 et seq., providing assessments, should be made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, against Dan Morris, Annie F. Young, and others. From an interlocutory judgment by the Superior Court of Los Angeles, defendant Annie F. Young appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Hyams and Meserve & Meserve, all of Los Angeles (Timon E. Owens, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Donald M. Keith, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles (John A. Rush, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to condemn land and take the same for public use for the opening, widening, and extending of Fifth street in the city of Los Angeles. The defendant Annie F. Young is the owner of land through which the extended street will run. Under the condemnation proceedings she is entitled to compensation for that part of her land taken for street purposes, and separately to compensation for damages to her adjoining land not taken for the public use. She appeals from the interlocutory judgment, entered pursuant to the verdict of a jury which assessed said compensation and damages, and appeals "from the order denying the motion of said defendant for a new trial made, given and entered on or about the 9th day of July, 1923." Street-Opening Act of 1903, § 13.

First we shall deal with the contention made by appellant that the court erred in determining that the compensation and damages to be awarded to her should be fixed and assessed as of the 5th day of December, 1921. The action was brought under the Street-Opening Act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 376, and subsequent amendments thereto; Deering's Gen. Laws [1923 Ed.] Act 8198). Section 10 of that act, as amended in the year 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1038, § 5), reads in part as follows:

"For the purpose of assessing the compensation and damages, the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the order appointing referees or of the order setting the cause for trial, as the case may be, and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and the basis of damages to property not actually taken, but injuriously affected, in all cases where such damages are allowed by the provisions of this act."

The Code of Civil Procedure, in the title on eminent domain, at section 1249 of that Code, establishes a general rule for condemnation proceedings in this state, with respect to the date from which compensation shall be assessed, as follows:

"For the purpose of assessing compensation and damages the right thereof shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the issuance of summons and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and the basis of damages to property not actually taken but injuriously affected, in all cases where such damages are allowed as provided in section 1248; provided, that in any case in which the issue is not tried within one year after the date of the commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by the defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial."

The complaint in this action was filed on June 29, 1921. A summons was issued at some time not shown by the record. This appears from a default entry indorsed on the complaint under date December 14, 1921, which shows that prior thereto certain defendants were "regularly served with process." It follows, by necessary inference, that the summons issued prior to December 5, 1921.

Appellant contends that the date as of which she was entitled to have the value of her property fixed for the purpose of assessing her compensation and damages was a time much later than December 5, 1921. Here it becomes necessary to set out some further history of the action.

September 29, 1921, answer of Annie F. Young and Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California (mortgagee of Mrs. Young) was filed. November 28, 1921, notice served on appellant and the other defendants and filed that on December 5, 1921, plaintiff would move to have case set down for trial. December 5, 1921, said motion came on for hearing. Defendant Young and said mortgagee demanded a jury trial. No other defendants demanded a trial by court or jury. The court ordered that the action as to Young and said mortgagee be set for trial with a jury on March 31, 1922, in department 15 of said court, and that the action as to the other defendants should be heard and tried by referees. December 19, 1921, order signed and filed appointing referees.

April 11, 1922, referees' report returned to the court. March 31, 1922, trial as to appellant and mortgagee continued to May 8, 1922; and after further continuances was actually tried by jury on July 6, 1922, and the jury's verdict duly filed and entered.

October 6, 1922, motions for new trial presented on behalf of the city and on behalf of Young and said mortgagee. New trial granted. Case transferred to department 10, which is the department of the presiding judge of said court.

October 9, 1922, under stipulation of the parties, case was regularly set down for trial for December 11, 1922, and assigned to department 14 for trial with a jury. In that department several continuances were regularly made until April 23, 1923. On that day, Judge Charles Monroe presiding, a jury was regularly impaneled and sworn to try the case. At that point it was suggested and admitted that the judge then presiding was, by reason of some property interest, disqualified to try the case. Thereupon Judge Monroe discharged the jury. Immediately when that had been done Judge Charles Crail, then presiding judge of the superior court (department 10 thereof), "took the bench in said Department 14" and, over the objection of defendant Young and said mortgagee, continued the action for trial to the next day, April 24th, and assigned the case to department 11 of said court, then presided over by Judge J. P. Wood. Said defendants thereupon objected to the trial being thus continued and demanded that the action, under the rules of the superior court, be transferred to the department of the presiding judge and be regularly reset for trial. Said objections were overruled and the case transferred to department 11 as aforesaid.

April 24, 1923, cause called for trial in department 11 before Judge Wood, who ordered that a new jury be impaneled. This order was made over the objection of appellant and said mortgagee. Thereupon a jury was impaneled and sworn to try the case, and the trial proceeded. Evidence was taken and such other proceedings were had that the jury returned the verdict pursuant to which the interlocutory judgment has been entered, from which judgment Mrs. Young now prosecutes this appeal.

[1] It is the contention of appellant that the court erred in holding that the phrase, "the date of the order * * * setting the cause for trial," in section 10 of the Street-Opening Act of 1903, applied only to the first order (that is, the order of December 5, 1921), setting the cause for trial; and in holding that it so applied, not only for the purposes of the first trial, but also for the purposes of the second trial. The first trial (the trial of July 6, 1922) was had pursuant to the order of December 5, 1921, made by the presiding judge, setting the case down to be tried on March 31, 1922; said order being supplemented by continuances in department 15 until the actual date of said first trial. It is admitted by counsel that at that first trial the issue as to value was tried and determined as of December 5, 1921. There seems to be no doubt that, as applied to the trial then occurring, the date was so selected according to the statute. As above noted, there were some continuances from and after the date fixed by the original order, but it does not appear to have been contended that those orders of continuance entirely superseded the original "order setting the cause for trial"; they assumed its validity, and on that basis directed a postponement of the trial. The purpose of the legislation contained in section 10 of the statute was that prior to trial of the action a time be fixed, with relation to which the compensation to be awarded should be established according to the actual value of the property at the date so appointed. The issue of fact was thus made and settled for determination upon the evidence thereafter to be taken. We find in the statute nothing to indicate that the date, with relation to which compensation shall be measured and damages assessed in such cases, shall be shifted along from time to time by means of continuances of the trial, or even by means of an order granting a new trial of the action. "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referee." Code Civ. Proc., § 656. By the very terms of the definition the re-examination thus had by means of a new trial calls for a determination of the same issue of fact which had been tried before. There is, of course, an exception when the court allows some change in the pleadings, whereby some alteration is made in the issues of fact presented for determination at the second trial. In substance, however, the several trials must be of the same case. In the instant case we are of opinion that the issue remained unchanged, notwithstanding that the effect of the order granting the new trial was to vacate and set aside the verdict which theretofore had been rendered.

[2] The conclusion indicated in the preceding paragraph is strengthened by a consideration of the general rule, which has long been established in condemnation proceedings in California, providing for the assessment of compensation and damages as of the date of issuance of summons in the action. While a different rule has been set up in section 10 of the Street-Opening Act of 1903, this rule should be construed, as nearly as may be, in harmony with the general rule. The Supreme Court followed this principle of decision in Marin Municipal Water District v. Marin Water & Power Co., 178 Cal. 308, at pages 314, 315, 173 P. 469.

[3] Appellant makes the further suggestion that said section 10 of the Street-Opening Act of 1903 is void by reason of uncertainty; that therefore the compensation should have been awarded under section 1249, Code of Civil Procedure; and that because the case was not tried within one year after the commencement of the action, and because the delay was not caused by the defendant, her right to compensation and damages must be deemed to have accrued at the date of the second trial. It will be remembered that according to said section 10 the right to compensation and damages "shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the order appointing referees or of the order setting the cause for trial, as the case may be." The statute (section 8 as amended by St. 1909, p. 1037, § 3) provides that if, upon the hearing of the motion to set the case for trial, a trial by jury or by the court without a jury is not demanded by the defendants or any of them (or by the plaintiff), the court must appoint referees to ascertain the compensation to be paid to such defendants so waiving trial by jury or by the court without a jury. In a case (and this is such a case) where one defendant has demanded a trial by jury and the other defendants have left the court free to ascertain their compensation with the aid of referees, there may be some difference in time between the date of appointment of the referees and the date of the order setting the cause down to be tried by jury. Appellant contends that under such circumstances section 10 fails to furnish any rule for ascertaining which date shall be the date as of which the right to damages must be ascertained or be deemed to have accrued. But we think that the language of section 10 is capable of a construction which will harmonize its terms. In a case where the order appointing referees applies to all of the defendants, or in a case where all of the defendants have demanded a trial by the court, or all have demanded a trial by jury, there would of course be no doubt at all concerning the meaning of section 10 as applied to that situation. The only possible doubt will arise when there are two orders, one appointing referees and another setting the cause for trial, and when those two orders are not made on the same day. The statute (section 8) contemplates, however, that the two orders shall be made at the same time or very closely thereto; for it says that "if upon the hearing of such motion" any of the defendants waive a trial, the court must appoint the referees. The motion itself, however, is the motion to set the action for trial. The notice of motion to be made on a certain day to set the action for trial establishes a time at which it is proposed that the case shall be set for trial by the court without a jury—or with a jury, where that method is demanded—and shall also appoint referees to ascertain and report the compensation proper to be paid to such of the parties as have waived a trial by jury or by the court. The statute provides that those referees shall at once proceed to view the lands, etc. Reading together these several provisions of the statute, we think it a fair and reasonable construction of section 10 to hold that the phrase "the date of the order appointing referees" is subordinate to the phrase "the order setting the cause for trial," in those instances where the situation requires both methods of procedure in the same action. Under this construction, it may be that the referees would be required, in ascertaining the values that are to be fixed by them, to determine those values as of the date of "the order setting the cause for trial." On the record before us it appears that on December 5, 1921, when the case against defendant Young and her mortgagee was set for trial by jury, the court at the same time did order that the action as to the other defendants should be heard and tried by referees. The order of December 19, 1921, was merely an order selecting and appointing those referees—thereby carrying into effect the previous order. Under such circumstances, December 5, 1921, would be the appropriate date, as of which the referees should determine the right to compensation and damages of the parties whose claims were submitted to the referees. We assume that it was so done. The record herein shows nothing to the contrary.

We conclude, therefore, that the court did not err in ruling that the values and damages should be fixed and assessed as of the 5th day of December, 1921, and did not err in limiting the evidence to the issue thus established for determination by the jury.

[4] Appellant contends that the orders of April 23, 1923, pursuant to which the action was continued to April 24th and assigned for trial in department 11, were irregular and erroneous, in this, that the orders thus made by the presiding judge were made contrary to the provisions of rule XVII of the superior court of Los Angeles county. Rule III defines the duties of the presiding judge and, among other things, provides that he shall supervise the condition of the trial calendars of the court and shall readjust the assignment of causes at issue at or before the time of trial thereof in such manner as best to dispose of the business. Rule XVII reads as follows:

"Civil actions at issue may be set for trial in the department of the presiding judge upon motion of a party, on 5 days' written notice of such motion to the adverse party, or on motion based on stipulation of the parties. Such motion must be noticed for, and will be heard at 10 o'clock a. m., of any legal day except Saturday, and will not be granted unless it first appear that the calendar fee has been paid, and that the required notice has been given; provided that the order may be made by consent expressed as required by rule XVIII."

We are of the opinion that the action of the presiding judge in making the transfer and order of continuance was substantially in compliance with these rules. No reason appears why, with the parties all before him in the department where the case had been called for trial, it should have been deemed necessary to pursue the far more inconvenient method of transferring the case to department 10 to be reset for trial. Under the circumstances, the order was one of continuance, and not in the nature of an original order setting the case for trial. Moreover, in view of our decision herein that the compensation and damages were properly measured according to valuations of the property ascertained as of December 5, 1921, the irregularity of the procedure now under consideration (if it was irregular or in any way erroneous) does not appear to have resulted in any material disadvantage to appellant.

[5] After the jury had been impaneled and sworn to try the case, the plaintiff requested that the jury be allowed to "view the premises" involved in this action. The defendant Young objected to this request and proposed order, on various grounds then and there stated by counsel. The court overruled the objections, "and the court thereupon ordered that the jury, before the taking of any evidence, should be allowed to and should view the premises involved herein; that the court did not at said or any time make any order as to who should accompany said jury, did not place said jury in the custody of the bailiff of the court, or any other party, and did not designate any person whatsoever as the party to show the jury the premises to be viewed by them, particularly the property of Annie F. Young, herein sought to be condemned, and her property to be severed by virtue of such condemnation." The transcript describes in much detail the proceedings relating to this transaction. In brief, it appears that the jury were taken to view the premises by the court, "together with the officials of the court, that all of the property which the jury were taken to see, they were taken to see at the direction and under the supervision of, and in the presence of the court. The property lines were pointed out there in the presence of the court and the officials and of both counsel, by Mr. Meserve and Mr. Eberhard, but by no one else."

In relation to the view of the premises taken as above stated, appellant contends that the court erred, and that the required forms of law were not observed, in this, that no person was appointed by the court, charged with the duty of showing the premises to the jury, in conformity with the provisions of section 610, Code of Civil Procedure. It should be noted first that, while appellant made sundry objections to the granting of any order for a view of the premises by the jury, she did not then, or during the viewing of the premises, or even when the trial was resumed in the courtroom, make any objection to the form of the order or the method of carrying that order into effect. We therefore agree with counsel for respondent that an objection of this nature, not made at a time when there was opportunity to correct the alleged error, should not be considered as a ground for reversal on appeal. People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 113, 193 P. 92; People v. Pompa, 192 Cal. 412, 422, 221 P. 198.

[6] Appellant contends that the court erred in sustaining objections to certain questions propounded by her counsel on cross-examination of two of plaintiff's witnesses. Each of these witnesses had stated his opinion of the values of the property involved herein on the 5th day of December, 1921. On cross-examination the witness Culver was not permitted to state what, in his opinion, was the value of the entire property of appellant on July 1, 1922, or what was its value on October 10, 1922. He did state, without objection, that the value increased after December 5, 1921, down to and including the time when his testimony was given. He further testified, without objection, that the market value of that property as a whole on April 1, 1922, had not increased more than five per cent. over its value on December 5, 1921. The rulings on cross-examination of the witness Canfield present in substance the same question of law that is presented by those relating to the testimony of Culver, and need not be separately considered.

Appellant claims that she had a right to cross-examine each witness as to his opinion of values down to the date of the trial; and that the alleged error was especially prejudicial for the reason that any value the jury might have ascertained from a view of the premises would be the value of the premises on the 24th day of April, 1923, the date of the view.

Assuming that the view of the premises by the jury was in its nature a taking of evidence, the issue of fact nevertheless remained unchanged. It related to the value of the property on December 5, 1921, and not at any later time. Since the witnesses for respondent on their direct examination had not testified to any valuations of later date, the court was justified in confining the cross-examination to a period of time reasonably near to the date in question. We think that there was no abuse of discretion in the rulings which enforced that limitation. The stated purpose of counsel for appellant, as declared by him to the court, was to show, not only the values at different dates running back to a time before December 5, 1921, but down to the date of the trial. The court was not bound to follow a course which would be likely to confuse the issue and unnecessarily extend the trial.

[7] There is some argument in which apparently appellant contends that the evidence does not sustain the verdict—although that assignment of error is not definitely stated in the brief. Our examination of the record has not led us into any doubt that the evidence is sufficient, except in one particular—and that doubt has been removed. The jury awarded $1,500 as damages caused by the severance of one parcel of appellant's land from the condemned portion. The lowest amount given by any witness in actual figures relating to the damage to that parcel was $1,658. In view of this fact, appellant contends that the evidence does not sustain this element of the verdict, and that the view of the premises by the jury, although in the nature of evidence, is not sufficient to create a conflict in the evidence so as to justify such a verdict. But even without any knowledge obtained by the jury in its view of the premises, the testimony of the witnesses as a whole justifies the jury in fixing said severance damage at $1,500. We quote from respondent's brief, which we understand is in accord with the record:

"McGarry testified that the full value of this parcel, as a part of the whole, was $400 per front foot, which would be $1,808 for the 4.52 feet. Crippen testified that the damage to this parcel was 50 per cent. of its value. This would be $904, based upon the McGarry valuation."

A number of other comparisons are made which are to similar effect. We are satisfied that the jury had a right, if so convinced, to rest its verdict upon the testimony of some of the witnesses as to the value of the parcel prior to said severance, and the testimony of other witnesses concerning the percentage of damage as compared with the original value. Further, the aggregate amount of compensation and damages awarded exceeds, by a large amount, the entire value of the property as valued by some of the witnesses.

[8] Finally, appellant contends that the interlocutory judgment is void on its face because it is limited to a determination of the rights of appellant and her mortgagee, and does not contain any determination based upon confirmation of the report of the referees before whom the action was ordered to be tried for the purpose of assessing the compensation and damages of the other defendants. The argument on this point rests upon section 12 of the Street-Opening Act of 1903 as amended by St. 1909, p. 1040, § 7, which reads as follows:

"Upon the confirmation of the report of the referees, or receipt of the verdict of the jury, or the filing of the findings of the court, the court shall make and enter an interlocutory judgment in accordance with such report, verdict or findings, adjudging that upon payment to the respective parties, or into court for their benefit, of the several amounts found due them as compensation, and of the costs allowed to them, the property involved in the action shall be condemned to the use of the plaintiff, and dedicated to the use specified in the complaint. The court shall allow to the referees, as costs to be paid by the plaintiff, a reasonable compensation for their services, the amount of which compensation shall be fixed by the court upon the hearing of the report, and their necessary expenses."

We think that the rendering and entry of judgment as the same was entered was within the power of the court and was not void. Section 6 of said Street-Opening Act provides that the action to condemn the property necessary to be taken for the stated purposes "shall in all respects be subject to and governed by such provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure now existing or that may be hereafter adopted, as may be applicable thereto, except in the particulars otherwise provided for in this act." We find nothing in section 12 or elsewhere in the statute which prevents the Code provisions from applying to the matter of entry of separate judgments under circumstances like those appearing in this record. Section 579 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows:

"In an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper."

[9] Assuming, as we must, that before an assessment can be made against the property within the assessment district for the purpose of assessing thereon and collecting the sums necessary to pay for the improvement, an interlocutory judgment or judgments must first be entered covering all of the property that is to be taken, it may be further assumed that in due course a separate interlocutory judgment has been entered against the defendants whose compensation and damages were to be awarded under the report of the referees. For all necessary purposes of the proceeding, these judgments together will constitute the interlocutory judgment, upon entry of which the statute provides that the assessment shall be made (Street-Opening Act of 1903, § 15 et seq.). Appellant can suffer no loss or damage by reason of the fact that the court completes the condemnation proceedings by means of two entries of judgments instead of one. And this is so, notwithstanding that the common practice is to enter only one interlocutory judgment. This is solely a matter of procedure, and in this instance results from the fact that some of the defendants were content to have their damages determined by referees, while other defendants exercised their right to have a trial by jury. Assuming that the method of procedure was irregular, there was not any serious error therein. The case is thus brought directly within the terms of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of California, wherein it is declared, among other things, that no judgment shall be set aside for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. It results that, even if it should be held that the entry of judgment against appellant and her mortgagee alone, without including therein a judgment based upon the report of the referees with respect to the rights of other defendants, constituted an irregularity or error, nevertheless that condition of the record would furnish no ground for a reversal.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

YOUNG v. CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 4990.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 30, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 24, 1925.)

1. Appeal and error ⚡460(1)—Taking of appeal without bond is sufficient to stay execution of judgment, except where special bond required by statute.

Since amendments of 1921 (St. 1921, p. 95) made Code Civ. Proc. §§ 940-949, relative to matter of taking appeal, section 949 has been construed to mean that perfecting of an appeal without a bond is sufficient to stay execution of a judgment except when special bond is required by sections 942-945.

2. Eminent domain ⚡258—Interlocutory judgment in proceedings under Street-Opening Act not a judgment under act requiring bond on appeal to stay judgment.

An interlocutory judgment awarding damages for compensation in a proceeding under Street-Opening Act 1903, is not a judgment to which Code Civ. Proc. § 945, which requires bond to stay judgment which directs sale and delivery of possession of real property, applies.

3. Eminent domain ⚡258—Assessments may be made under Street-Opening Act immediately after entry of interlocutory judgment in condemnation action, notwithstanding appeal.

Under Street-Opening Act 1903, held, in view of sections 13, 15, 37 thereof, that it was intended that assessment proceedings may be begun immediately after entry of interlocutory judgment in condemnation action, even though appeal therefrom was pending, for in view of sections 25, 32, appellant would not be deprived of fruits of appeal on contingency of judgment being set aside and increased award made; right to prosecute appeal so far as increased compensation is concerned being preserved by Code Civ. Proc. § 1254, which is made applicable to Street-Opening Act by section 6 thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Proceeding by Annie F. Young against the City Council of the City of Los Angeles and Robert M. Allen and others, members of said City Council, to review an assessment made for purpose of widening a street. From judgment affirming order of the City Council confirming such assessment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles (Timon E. Owens, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Donald M. Keith, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles (John A. Rush, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This is a proceeding on writ of review, and comes before this court on appeal by petitioner from a judgment affirming an order of the city council which confirmed an assessment made for the opening, widening, and extending of Fifth street in the city of Los Angeles.

The street-opening proceedings were prosecuted under the Street-Opening Act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376). In connection therewith an action was brought against Dan Morris, Annie F. Young, and others to condemn certain real property required for said street purposes. An "interlocutory judgment" was entered against Mrs. Young in that action. She appealed from that judgment. A decision has been rendered this day by this court, affirming said interlocutory judgment. City of Los Angeles v. Morris et al., 241 P. 409. That decision contains a history of the progress of the condemnation suit to and including the entry of said interlocutory judgment.

From the petition for writ of review, taken together with the return thereon, it appears that in the condemnation suit the compensation and damages of Mrs. Young and her mortgagee were awarded pursuant to the verdict of a jury, whereas the compensation and damages of all the other defendants were determined in accordance with a report of referees appointed under the provisions of the statute. The interlocutory judgment against Mrs. Young and her mortgagee, which was entered on the 1st day of May, 1923, did not include any adjudication of the rights established by confirmation of the report of the referees. A separate interlocutory judgment as to the defendants included in the report of the referees was entered on June 6, 1923. Thereafter, on July 31, 1923, the city council directed the city engineer to prepare a diagram or map of the assessment district, as provided for by the Street-Opening Act of 1903. This diagram and map having been made and delivered to the board of public works, the board of public works proceeded to make its assessment against the real property included in the assessment district. The assessment having been completed and certified in due form and delivered to the clerk of the city council, and notice having been given by the clerk in due form as provided by the statute, various objections and protests in writing were made by property owners in the assessment district, including Mrs. Young. The objections of Mrs. Young, as stated in her protest, need not be repeated here. It is sufficient to say that the several grounds of objection to the authority of the city council to proceed in the matter of said assessment included all of the grounds of objection which are relied upon by her in the proceeding for a writ of review and on this appeal. The appeal of Mrs. Young from the interlocutory judgment entered against her had been taken by her within 30 days from such entry, and has so remained, pending and undecided, until the present time.

Appellant relies upon two propositions: First, that there was no power in the superior court to render two "interlocutory judgments" in an action brought under the Street-Opening Act of 1903; second, that the city council does not have the power or right "to levy assessments" under said act, when there is an appeal pending from the interlocutory judgment entered in a condemnation action brought pursuant to the provisions of that act.

The first of these contentions has been decided adversely to appellant, in the decision rendered on the appeal in the other case. City of Los Angeles v. Morris et al., supra.

[1, 2] The sections of the Code of Civil Procedure which deal with the manner of taking an appeal, and with the stay of proceedings (sections 940 to 949, Code Civ. Proc.), remain unchanged since the year 1921. Since the amendments made during that year (St. 1921, p. 95), section 949 has been construed to mean (so far as the general rules of practice are concerned) that the perfecting of an appeal, without a bond, is sufficient to stay execution of a judgment except when a special bond is required under sections 942, 943, 944, or 945. People v. Jackson, 190 Cal. 257, 262, 212 P. 4. Respondent claims that appellant gave no stay bond on appeal in City v. Morris, supra, and that the case is one where, to stay enforcement of the judgment, a bond was required under the provisions of section 945, Code of Civil Procedure, which applies to a judgment which directs "the sale or delivery of possession of real property." The record here, while it does not state that a bond was given, does not state the contrary. Let it be assumed that there was none. Nevertheless, we are of the opinion that the interlocutory judgment in question was not a judgment to which the provisions of said section 945 apply. In City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 132 Cal. 340, 64 P. 477, it was so held, with respect to the final judgment following the interlocutory judgment. It follows that the appeal stayed all proceedings on the judgment, unless the provisions of the Street-Opening Act of 1903 are such that they create an exception to the rule, or unless in the absence of such provision there is a like exception contained in the title on Eminent Domain (section 1237 et seq.) in the Code of Civil Procedure.

Here it must be noted that the orders of the city council, against which appellant's petition is directed, are not orders made under any execution or command of the court requiring the council to do anything under and by virtue of the interlocutory judgment. The entry of that judgment, even if there had been no appeal, had no effect upon the council, except that such entry created the condition which authorized the council to proceed. "Upon the entry of the interlocutory judgment, the city council shall," etc. But the act also provides (section 14) that the council may abandon the proceedings at any time prior to payment of the compensation awarded the defendants.

For the purpose of further testing the merits of the case, we shall assume, however, that the orders of the council, including its hearing of protests against the assessments, and decision thereon, and confirmation of the assessments, are proceedings in the nature of a proceeding to enforce the interlocutory judgment. And since they include determinations of fact, upon evidence received, we further assume that the matters to be determined are of a judicial nature, and so are subject to attack in a certiorari proceeding.

[3] The terms of the Street-Opening Act of 1903, § 15, on their face indicate a legislative intention that the assessment proceedings shall begin immediately upon the entry of the interlocutory judgment in the condemnation action. And yet it appears, by the terms of section 13 of the same act, that 30 days are allowed, from the entry of that judgment, for taking an appeal therefrom. It is, we think, an appropriate inference from these provisions, reading them together, that the taking of the appeal is not intended to have the force of a stay of the assessment proceedings. Section 37 of the act declares that the provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to promote the objects thereof.

But appellant contends that this interpretation of the statute is unreasonable because, if the assessment against the property subject to assessment be completed and enforced, she will be deprived of the fruits of her appeal if the interlocutory judgment be reversed and if she shall afterwards recover judgment awarding increased compensation and damages. Section 32 of the act provides as follows:

"In case of a deficiency in the fund for such improvement, the city council, in its discretion, may provide for such deficiency by an appropriation out of the general fund of the treasury, or by ordering a supplementary assessment to be made by the street superintendent upon the property in said assessment district in the same manner and form, and subject to the same procedure as the original assessment, and in the last named case, in order to avoid delay, the city council may advance such deficiency out of the city treasury and reimburse the treasury from the collections under such supplementary assessment. In case of a surplus in the fund for such improvement, the city council may order such surplus refunded pro rata to the parties who paid the assessments."

The provisions of the act are such that a deficiency in the fund cannot be created through failure of the assessment collections to provide the full amount awarded to the defendants in the interlocutory judgment. The contingency of such failure is provided against by section 25 of said act. It is there provided that in case of a delinquent sale for nonpayment of the assessment against any property assessed, each parcel separately assessed must be offered for sale separately and sold to the person who will take the least quantity of land and then and there pay the amount of the assessment, etc. In the absence of such purchaser, it is provided that the property shall be struck off to the municipality as purchaser, and the city council shall appropriate out of the general fund of the treasury the amount required for such purchase, and shall order the city treasurer to place the same in the special fund for such improvement. Since there is apparently no other way by which a deficiency in the fund could be created, we infer that section 32 was intended to provide for this very contingency of an increased award, in a case where the interlocutory judgment has been set aside and on second trial of the action a larger award has been obtained.

But appellant further contends that this interpretation of the statute is unreasonable because, if by enforcement of the assessment while the appeal is pending she shall be forced to pay the assessment, and particularly if she shall find it necessary to claim the right given her by the statute to offset the amount allowed to her in the present interlocutory judgment as a credit on the assessment, by so doing she will lose her right to further prosecute her appeal. This contention is based upon those decisions which hold that one may not accept the benefit of a judgment and at the same time maintain an appeal therefrom. But we think that there is an important limitation to the enforcement of this rule against a defendant whose property is being condemned for a public use. Section 1254, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that in such an action, at any time after entry of judgment or pending an appeal therefrom, where the amount awarded has been paid into court for the defendant, he may receive said money, upon filing a receipt therefor, "and an abandonment of all defenses to the action or proceeding, except as to the amount of damages that he may be entitled to in the event that a new trial shall be granted." By this saving clause, the right to prosecute the appeal, so far as increased compensation is concerned, is fully preserved. Mt. Shasta Power Corporation v. Dennis, 66 Cal. App. 186, 191, 225 P. 877. We are not aware of anything which prevents the same clause from applying, with like effect, to an action brought under said Street-Opening Act of 1903. Section 6 of said act provides directly that such an action shall be governed by the Code of Civil Procedure, where applicable thereto, "except in the particulars otherwise provided in this act."

In the case at bar, it does not appear that Mrs. Young's defense to the condemnation, action, or her appeal from the judgment therein, related to any other issues than those pertinent to her claim for compensation. Her protest to the council and her petition for the writ of review indicate that her appeal is solely grounded upon claims of error which prevented her from obtaining adequate compensation and damages. It has not been contended herein that said appeal extends beyond that subject. We therefore conclude that the completion of the assessments as ordered by the council, and even their enforcement in due course while the appeal is pending, would not deprive appellant of the full beneficial results of a successful appeal, supposing that eventually, in the condemnation action, she shall obtain an increased award of compensation for her property, or increased damages. We therefore think that there is no valid objection to our conclusion that by said Street-Opening Act it is definitely intended that the council shall have power to cause the assessments to be made immediately when the interlocutory judgment has been entered, notwithstanding that there may be an appeal from such judgment.

The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

SEUFERT v. COOK et al. (Civ. 2968.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Oct. 13, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 10, 1925.)

1. Waters and water courses — 115—“Surface waters” and “flood waters” distinguished.

“Surface waters,” comprising rainwater moving across the country and not coming from any definite source, are clearly distinguished from “flood waters,” or waters spreading out from overflowing streams having definite channels, and the changing of the waters ordinarily flowing within the banks of well-defined channels.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Surface Water; Second Series, Flood Water.]

2. Levees and flood control — 9—Pleading — 18—Levees may be built against flood waters though waters thrown on other lands; complaint not stating whether waters were flood or surface waters ambiguous and uncertain.

Reclamation district established by St. 1913, p. 130, to carry out part of plan adopted by St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 117, had right to build levee to protect lands within district from flood waters, though they were thereby thrown on lands outside district, and hence complaint not stating whether waters were flood or surface waters was ambiguous and uncertain.

3. Levees and flood control — 19—Complaint for injuries from flooding held not to state cause of action.

In action against reclamation district, established by St. 1913, p. 130, pursuant to Act December 24, 1911 (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 117), and state reclamation board, for damages from construction of levee blocking ordinary course of waters gathering in certain basin, complaint held not to state cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by John Seufert against Peter Cook and others, as members of Reclamation Board of State of California, Reclamation District No. 1500, and F. W. Kiesel and others, Trustees of Reclamation District No. 1500. Judgment for defendants on their demurrer to complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and A. H. Hewitt, of Yuba City, for appellant.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, A. C. Huston and H. L. Huston, both of Woodland, and Stephen W. Downey, of Sacramento, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. By this action plaintiff seeks to recover from the defendants damages in the sum of $171,850 alleged to have been caused to his lands and the lands of 32 other persons, assignors of the plaintiff, by the negligent acts of the defendants. The trial court sustained the demurrer of the defendants to the plaintiff's amended complaint, and from the judgment thereafter entered upon the sustaining of such demurrer the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint sets forth 33 separate causes of action, but the gravamen of each cause is set forth in identical words, save and except as to the amount of damages alleged in the different causes of action. The questions presented for determination necessitate a consideration only of the allegations set forth in the following language:

“From time immemorial and up to and on or about the 12th day of February, 1919, in the winter or rainy season of every year large bodies of water accumulated along and near the westerly portion of Sutter county far and westerly from the said lands of plaintiff in what was generally known as the Sutter Basin and the Sutter Tules, whereby and through which said water ultimately flowed off into the Sacramento river without injuring, damaging or in any way affecting plaintiff's lands or any crop growing thereon; however, between the 10th day of August, 1913, and the 12th day of February, 1919, defendants and every of them, acting jointly and in unison, began and proceeded to carry out a plan of reclamation and flood control wherein and whereby it was proposed to reclaim the lands in said Sutter Basin over and upon which said water had from time immemorial in the winter season of every year flowed as aforesaid by the construction and maintenance of a by-pass to the east of said Sutter Basin and to the west of plaintiff's said lands and through said by-pass to carry off the said waters which had theretofore flowed down through said Sutter Basin as aforesaid.

“The said plan for reclamation and flood control provided that said by-pass should be of sufficient width and also that there should be constructed and maintained, on both the easterly and westerly sides thereof, a levee of sufficient height, dimensions, continuity and structure so as to permit all said waters to be by and through said by-pass carried on down the same in a general southerly direction without flowing upon or flooding any of the lands of plaintiff or any lands similarly situated with respect to said by-pass.

“On or about the 12th day of February, 1919, and after the construction of said westerly levee of said by-pass but before the construction and completion of said easterly levee of said by-pass in accordance with the plan therefor or at all, said defendants, acting jointly and in unison as aforesaid, willfully, negligently and wrongfully caused and permitted said waters to be turned away from said Sutter Basin or Sutter Tules and into said by-pass and because of the then unfinished, incomplete, defective and in some places, practical absence, of said east levee of said by-pass, the waters thus caused and permitted to flow into said by-pass flowed and poured over and through said unfinished, incomplete and defective east levee aforesaid and therefrom down, over and upon plaintiff's said lands, and said waters did then and there inundate and submerge plaintiff's said lands and did destroy valuable crops of grain and alfalfa, also valuable trees and vines belonging to plaintiff and then growing thereon to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $5,300; and thereby, in addition to said damage done to said crops, trees and vines, said waters did injure and damage plaintiff's said lands in the further sum of $500."

For convenience we have quoted the language in which the first cause of action is alleged, which is identical with the allegations contained in the remaining 32 causes of action.

The demurrers to the complaint are both general and special and raise all the questions which we will consider herein.

The legal history of this case really begins with the act of the Legislature approved December 24, 1911 (Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 117), adopting the report of the California Débris Commission theretofore transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States by the Secretary of War. By that act of the Legislature a reclamation board consisting of three members was created having power to approve plans of reclamation for the construction of levees, embankments, canals, etc., along the Sacramento river, for the reclamation of overflow lands, and the control of flood waters. In furtherance of the execution of the plans contemplated by the report above referred to, the Legislature of this state in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 130) created the defendant reclamation district No. 1500. The history and purpose of this district are concisely set forth in Reclamation District v. Riley, 192 Cal. 147, 218 P. 762, from which we take the following:

"Reclamation district No. 1500 was created pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled 'An act creating a reclamation district to be called and known as "Reclamation District No. 1500"' (Stats. 1913, p. 130). This statute declares that 'It shall be the duty of said reclamation district No. 1500 to construct a levee, forming the south side of Tisdale by-pass, and a portion of the westerly side of the Sutter Basin by-pass. * * *'. These by-passes were a part of a comprehensive plan known as the report of the California Débris Commission, adopted by legislative enactment for the flood control of the Sacramento river in its entirety and the reclamation of lands which had been formerly inundated by the flood waters of the river. (Stats. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117.) As a governmental agency to carry out the plan of flood control and reclamation there was created the Sacramento-San Joaquin drainage district, which embodied within its confines reclamation district No. 1500 and other reclamation districts not necessary to be enumerated here. (Stats. 1913, p. 252.) The management and control of the drainage district was vested in the state reclamation board. (Stats. 1913, p. 252, § 5, p. 266.) The statutory plan as adopted contemplated that the flood waters of the Sacramento river would be led through certain weirs and by-passes into one main by-pass, which would ultimately, through the medium of other and intermediate by-passes, empty into San Francisco Bay. In order to facilitate the expedient carrying out of the plan it was provided that the entire work should be divided into separate projects by the state reclamation board, which should then be constructed as separate units. (Stats. 1913, p. 252, § 13, p. 269.) Each project was to be designated by a number and a name, and the project of which the levees in controversy are a part is known as the 'Sutter-Butte By-pass Project No. 6.'"

The act of 1913 also provided that the defendant district No. 1500 should erect certain described portions of what is therein designated as the east levee of the Sutter by-pass, it being contemplated that when the work was all finished, the flood waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries, which, as alleged in the complaint, had from time immemorial spread out over the Sutter basin comprising most of the lands included within district No. 1500, would be conveyed on down to what is known as the Yolo by-pass, and thence to the Suisun Bay, within certain defined limits. It appears that the lands of the plaintiffs and his assignors lie above the elevation of what is known as contour 40, and that the area comprised within the limits of reclamation district No. 1500 is of a sufficiently lower elevation to accommodate the flow of the flood waters finding their way over the same without damage or injury to the lands of the plaintiff and his assignors.

The Legislature of this state, by an act approved May 26, 1913 (St. 1913, p. 252), also created what is known as the Sacramento-San Joaquin drainage district, placing the control thereof in the reclamation board of the state of California. The lands belonging to the plaintiff, and also all the lands lying within the boundaries of reclamation district No. 1500, are included within the exterior boundaries as set forth in the act creating the Sacramento-San Joaquin drainage district. This latter act empowers the state reclamation board to approve all plans of reclamation before the same are executed and also authorizes said board to prevent the erection of any levees, embankments, etc., until the plan for the erection of the same should have been approved by the reclamation board.

Pursuant to these acts of the Legislature, the defendant district No. 1500 has proceeded to erect a levee along the Tisdale by-pass, and also along the easterly boundary line of reclamation district No. 1500, which constitutes the westerly boundary of the Sutter by-pass. The easterly levee of the by-pass authorized to be constructed by the act creating defendant district No. 1500 had not, at the time of the injury complained of, been constructed, or, at least, not sufficiently so to prevent the flood waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries from spreading out over adjacent lands.

According to the allegations of the complaint, in February, 1919, the waters which theretofore had found their way over the Sutter basin and across the lands included within the limits of reclamation district No. 1500, were deflected and thrown back and over and upon the lands belonging to the plaintiff and his assignors, by reason of the erection of the levee referred to, as being constructed along the easterly boundary of district No. 1500, that levee having been constructed prior to the construction of the levee along the easterly boundary of the Sutter by-pass contemplated by the act referred to, and being a part of the work necessary for the conveying of the flood waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries within definite boundaries.

As set forth in the various cases decided by the Supreme Court of this state having to do with litigation arising out of the adoption and execution of plans for the control of the flood waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries, three objects are sought to be obtained: (1) The improvement of navigation of the Sacramento river; (2) the reclamation of the lands lying along said rivers; and (3) the confining of the flood waters within definite boundaries by the construction of weirs, levees, and such other works as might, from time to time, be found expedient or necessary. The history of the reclamation work to which we are referring, as set forth in the various cases having to do therewith, also shows that the execution of the work has been hampered and delayed by the lack of funds and also the obstacles thrown in the way of the execution and use of the funds provided, or attempted to be provided, for defraying the expenses of the contemplated improvements. Just how long the completion of the plans approved by the Legislature and provided by the act of the Legislature to be put into execution have been delayed does not appear, but the several cases relating thereto indicate that the period comprises a number of years. It would seem that these obstacles and the litigation concerning the district caused a delay of a sufficient period of time which otherwise would have sufficed for the building of the easterly levee of the Sutter by-pass, as contemplated by the act of the Legislature of 1913. We speak of these because the records show the causes of the delay, and therefore that such delay cannot be held as chargeable to the officers of the district having to do with the execution of the contemplated plans.

This brings us down to a consideration of the allegations contained in the plaintiff's complaint. Among other things set forth therein, we find the following:

"On or about the 12th day of February, 1919, and after the construction of said westerly levee of said by-pass but before the construction and completion of said easterly levee of said by-pass in accordance with the plan therefor or at all, said defendants, acting jointly and in unison as aforesaid, willfully, negligently and wrongfully caused and permitted said waters to be turned away from said Sutter Basin or Sutter Tules and into said by-pass and because of the then unfinished, incomplete, defective and in some places, practical absence, of said east levee of said by-pass, flowed and poured over and through said unfinished, incomplete and defective east levee aforesaid and therefrom down, over and upon plaintiff's said lands," etc.

[1] It is sought by the allegations of the complaint of which the foregoing is a portion to charge the officers of said reclamation board and of reclamation district No. 1500 with the damages caused by the overflowing of plaintiff's lands on account of the erection of the levee along the westerly boundary of the proposed by-pass before the completion of the levee along the easterly boundary thereof. The gist of the allegation is really that the flood waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries should have been allowed to follow its immemorial trend over the lands comprised within reclamation district No. 1500 until the levee along the easterly line of the proposed by-pass had been fully completed, or, to put it in other words, that protection should not have been afforded to the lands of the district before protection was also afforded to lands lying without the district. In support of this contention our attention is called to page 19, second edition, of Cooley on Torts, setting forth three definitions of negligence or acts for which one may become liable:

"(1) By actually doing to the prejudice of another something he has no legal right to do; (2) by doing something he may rightfully do, but wrongfully or negligently doing it by such means, or at such time, or in such manner, that another is injured; (3) by neglecting to do something which he ought to do, whereby another suffers injury."

This definition was adopted and approved by the Supreme Court in Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 P. 50. In that case the trustees of reclamation district No. 785 were held liable for having negligently cut down a certain levee for the purpose of affording passageway for a dredger into said district, that necessary precautions were not taken and certain lands belonging to the plaintiff were inundated and crops destroyed. The allegations of the complaint in that case were to the effect that the defendants cut a canal through the natural banks of the Sacramento river and failed to take proper precautions to prevent the waters therefrom from flooding the plaintiff's lands. A number of cases are cited in the opinion having to do with the negligence of officers in the execution of work which they may legally perform, and in the doing of which they will not be liable if properly performed, but for which they will be liable if negligently performed. With that case and the numerous other cases cited by counsel supporting the same rules, we take no exception, but from the dissimilarity of the facts involved we think inapplicable to the questions tendered for determination in this case. The cases also touching upon these questions draw a clear distinction between what are called surface waters, i. e., rain-water moving across the country, and not coming from any definite source, flood waters, or waters spreading out from overflowing streams having definite channels, and the changing of the waters ordinarily flowing within the banks of well-defined channels. Thus, in Proper v. Sutter Drainage Dist., 53 Cal. App. 576, 200 P. 664, the syllabus reads:

"The trustees of a drainage district are personally liable for the failure to use ordinary care to prevent the flooding of private property by the canals of the district."

This case is cited to us as an authority establishing the sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint. An examination of the facts set forth in the Proper Case shows a striking dissimilarity from those set forth in the complaint under consideration. The acts charged in the Proper Case are alleged as follows:

"Said defendants and all of them, in their management, control and operation of said main and lateral drainage canals, collected therein large bodies of water for the purpose of draining the territory traversed by said main canal * * * and said defendants in their said conduct and management of said canals did collect and convey down through said main canal where the same crosses the said lands of plaintiff and into said lateral canal, a large volume of water far in excess of the carrying capacity of said canals, and did overflow the banks of both thereof and did thereby, by the conveyance of such water down such canals, overflow the banks of said canals and did precipitate water upon and flood the said lands of plaintiff," etc.

The facts set forth in the opinion also show that the waters collected by the defendants were largely composed of surface waters collected by the canal of the defendant as aforesaid. Under these circumstances, the trustees of the district were held liable. The Proper Case follows the rule laid down in the case of Sanguinetti v. Pock, 136 Cal. 466, 69 P. 98, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169, where the distinction is drawn between the right to protect against surface waters and flood waters. In the case of Pac. Seaside Home v. Newbert P. Dist., 190 Cal. 544, 213 P. 967, relied upon by the appellant, the facts show that the defendant attempted to construct a channel for the Santa Ana river, and so defectively and negligently constructed the same that the channel was insufficient to carry the waters of said stream, etc. There is nothing in that case touching upon the question of the right of any one to protect his lands from overflow by flood waters. The Santa Ana river, it would appear, had its definite channels and the attempt was made to provide a new one, which was alleged to be improperly constructed, etc. This case and others cited by appellant are all unquestionably good law when applied to the facts under consideration, and as controlled by what has become the leading case in this state on the subject of the police powers of the state acting through its agencies to control the flood waters thereof. We refer to Gray v. Reclamation District No. 1500, 174 Cal. 622, 163 P. 1024.

[2, 3] Beginning with the case of Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536, followed up by Lamb v. Reclamation Dist. 108, 73 Cal. 125, 14 P. 625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 775, and Sanguinetti v. Pock, supra, the right to levee against flood waters has become firmly established in this state.

The legal right to build levees to ward off the common enemy, known as flood waters, was fully established by the cases decided prior to the rendition of the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Gray v. Reclamation Dist. 1500, supra, but they are all set forth in this latter case, which has become the leading treatise upon the subject of surface and flood waters in the state of California, and what may be legally done in relation to the control thereof, the protection of land subject to overflow by flood waters by the building of levees, and when liability does, or does not, ensue from the erection of such works. We might multiply words, but upon the subject of the flood waters escaping from the Sacramento river and its tributaries, we think that nothing of substance can be added to, or taken away from, what is said in the opinion of the Supreme Court, when deciding the Gray Case. We therefore simply refer to that case as unquestionable authority for the right of trustees of reclamation district No. 1500 to erect the levees protecting the lands lying within reclamation district No. 1500 from the overflow waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries, and also the police powers of the state to provide for the erection of all the levees contemplated by the act of the Legislature creating reclamation district No. 1500.

With the foregoing matters kept in view, we will begin consideration of the alleged cause of action set forth by the plaintiff. There is first a want of any statement as to the character of the waters that from time immemorial accumulated along and near the westerly boundary of Sutter county. Whether these waters were surface waters or flood waters is not stated. Against this lack of definite statement the defendants interposed a demurrer for ambiguity and uncertainty, which demurrer, we think, is well taken. The complaint then sets forth that the defendants "between the 10th day of August, 1913, and the 12th day of February, 1919, * * * began and proceeded to carry out a plan of reclamation and flood control wherein and whereby it was proposed to reclaim the lands in said Sutter basin over and upon which said water had from time immemorial in the winter season of every year flowed as aforesaid." If the waters so flowing over the Sutter basin were flood waters, what the plaintiff has alleged that the defendants proposed and were proposing to do is exactly what the Legislature authorized them to do, and which the law declares that they may do. District No. 1500, as shown by the authorities which we have cited, had a perfect right to build a levee along the northerly and easterly boundary of the district to protect the lands lying within the district from flood waters coming across the country, even though these flood waters were by such action caused to flow upon the lands lying without the district. To further allege that the trustees of the district were negligently doing what they had a lawful right to do, without showing facts that they were performing a lawful act in a negligent manner, likewise fails to state a cause of action; nor can the members of the state reclamation board be held liable for having approved a plan provided for by the Legislature and authorizing the trustees of reclamation district No. 1500 to execute a plan and build a levee to protect said reclamation district from the flood waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries without showing that said defendants participated in and authorized these acts to be performed in a negligent manner. That the erection of the levees on both sides of the contemplated by-pass is a work much to be desired and which will prove highly beneficial to all parties and landowners in the Sutter basin, and will afford protection to the lands of the plaintiff and his assignors from the flood waters of the Sacramento river and its tributaries, has no bearing whatever upon the right of reclamation district No. 1500 to protect itself from the same flood waters. Whatever may be the law in other states, the right to protect one's property against the common enemy is firmly established in this state.

Defendants have urged a number of other special grounds of demurrer, but, as what we have said is decisive of the case, we think is unnecessary to set them forth in this opinion.

We think the plaintiff's complaint does not state a cause of action, and the judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

BECKLEY v. ARCHER et al. (Civ. 2965.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 16, 1925.)

1. Fraud —20—Reliance on representations necessary to fraud.

In order to make a cause under Civ. Code, § 1572, subds. 1 and 2, for fraud and deceit by seller of cows in making alleged misrepresentations, it is not only necessary to prove that representations were made and were false, but that buyer solely relied thereon and was led to make purchase solely by reason thereof.

2. Fraud —22(1)—Seller's statements, as to condition of udders of cows held not actionable.

Where seller of dairy cows misrepresented that udders of all cows were in normal condition, held that, it being matter of common knowledge that veterinarian is not required to discover defects in udders of milk cows, and, buyers having convenient opportunity for inspecting cows before purchasing, it was their duty to do so rather than rely on seller's statements, and fraud could not be predicated thereon.

3. Fraud —11(1)—Seller's statement cows were with calves held expression of opinion not actionable.

Where seller represented that all dairy cows sold were with calves and would calve within six weeks, evidence held to show that such statement was an expression of opinion honestly made, with no intent or purpose to deceive buyers, and hence was not actionable.

4. Fraud —20—Seller's statement cows would calve within six weeks not actionable, where buyers made inspection.

Statement by seller of dairy cows that cows were with calves and would calve within six weeks held not actionable, where buyers, who had long experience in handling dairy cows, could by exercise of their own judgment upon inspecting cows have satisfied themselves whether cows would calve within six weeks, thus disproving any reliance by them on seller's statement.

5. Fraud —64(3)—Representations by sellers of cows held for jury.

Conflict in evidence as to whether or not seller of dairy cows represented to buyers that cows were not afflicted with disease of abortion held to make it question for jury to resolve.

6. Fraud ⚡11(1)—Seller's statement cows were free from disease of abortion held mere expression of opinion.

Where fraud on part of seller of dairy cows in representing that they were free from disease of abortion was alleged, held that, in view of fact that disease can be discovered only by microscopical examination or examination involving scientific test, buyers who had read about such disease must have known that seller, who was not a veterinarian, and did not pretend that examination of cows had been made, was merely expressing his opinion in making such statement.

7. Fraud ⚡20—False representations must actually have deceived one parting with something of value.

To constitute fraud, false representations must actually have had effect of deceiving and thus led party to whom they were made into entering in an agreement, by terms of which he parts with something of value.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fraud.]

8. Fraud ⚡20—Seller's representations not actionable, where buyer relied on own judgment.

Where buyer in contract of sale of property disregards representations of seller as to character, condition, or quality of such property, and prosecutes independent investigation and relies thereon in making purchase, he cannot predicate rescission of contract or maintain action for damages on representations made by seller, even though false.

9. Fraud ⚡20—Buyer purchasing in reliance on own investigation cannot claim damages for false statements by seller.

If buyer by his own investigation learns real facts concerning property, and makes purchase, relying solely on what he has thus learned, he cannot claim damages based on false statements by seller regarding quality of property which did not induce buyer to make purchase.

10. Fraud ⚡20—Buyer disregarding seller's representations cannot allege fraud, though independent investigation ineffectual.

The essential elements of action under Civ. Code, § 1571, for fraud and deceit, being deceit practiced by defendant on plaintiff producing damage complained of, if buyer wholly disbelieves representations made by seller, and does not act or rely on them, he cannot claim to have been defrauded in making such purchase, even though he ineffectually prosecuted an independent investigation as to condition of property involved.

11. Fraud ⚡9—Seller's statement as to adaptability of property for certain uses not fraud.

Mere statement by seller of property as to its adaptability to certain uses does not constitute fraud, unless false and made with intent to defraud party of his property.

12. Trial ⚡296(1)—No prejudice held to have resulted from objectionable instruction, in view of other instructions giving correct rule of law.

Even though instruction in question is subject to criticism, and other instructions containing correct statement of law were inconsistent, no prejudicial error resulted where repugnancy between such instructions was so slight that jury could not have been misled as to true rule.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by J. L. Beckley against J. B. Archer and others, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hudson Grant, A. G. Bailey, and A. C. Huston, all of Woodland, for appellants.

Forrest A. Plant, of Davis, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover on a promissory note in the sum of $3,000 executed by the defendants in favor of one H. H. Schmitt as in part payment of the purchase price of a certain number of head of cattle. Said note was by said Schmitt, before the filing of the complaint herein, assigned to the plaintiff. It was stipulated at the trial "that the note was duly made and executed by appellants and delivered to said Schmitt; that no part of the principal or interest had been paid, but that a credit of $175 should be allowed upon the note principal as of the date of its execution; that in the transaction from which said note arose said Schmitt was the agent of the respondent herein, and the note was delivered to him (Schmitt) as the agent of the respondent."

The defendants, by their answer, admit the due execution of the note sued on, but set up as in avoidance of the obligations thereof a special defense founded upon fraud, alleging that they were induced to purchase the cattle, which consisted of 49 head of "dairy cows," upon the false representation by the said Schmitt that the said cows were in a perfectly healthy condition and in every way adapted to the purposes of dairy cows. Defendants also filed a cross-complaint for damages in the sum of $10,390 alleged to have been by them suffered by reason of said alleged fraud. To the cross-complaint the plaintiff interposed an answer, denying the allegations charging fraudulent representations by Schmitt as to the character and condition of the cows.

Upon the issues made by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto the cause was tried by a jury, with verdict for the plaintiff. Judgment was entered accordingly. A motion by defendants for a new trial having been disallowed, the defendants have brought the case here upon an appeal from the judgment. The points pressed upon us for a reversal are that the verdict is without enough support, and that certain instructions embraced within the trial court's charge to the jury involve misstatements of the law, and, consequently, seriously militated against the rights of the defendants in the trial of the action.

The defendants, at the time of the transaction eventuating in the purchase by them of the dairy cows above referred to, were, on or about January 8, 1922, and for a long period of time prior thereto, engaged in conducting a dairy business in Yolo county. On the date just mentioned, they entered into an agreement with one H. H. Schmitt, whereby they purchased and said Schmitt sold to them the said 49 head of cows at the agreed price of $110 per head. These cows, as the cross-complaint alleges, and the undisputed evidence shows, were purchased by the defendants for use as dairy cows.

It appears from the evidence that Schmitt, acting for the plaintiff in the matter, procured the cows from a man named Adams, who had a short time previously shipped the animals with other cows from the state of Texas and placed them on his ranch near Lathrop, San Joaquin county. While the matter of the sale of the cows by Adams to Schmitt was pending and before the trade was completed, the latter had 61 head of the cows segregated from a band of 88 belonging to Adams, and had them driven into a field in which they were kept by themselves to the end that they might the better be inspected and subjected to an examination which would determine their condition as to physical soundness and their suitability for dairy use. Thereafter Schmitt had the cows inspected and examined by a veterinary, Dr. Lichtenwalter, and an experienced dairyman by the name of Bracken. The examination by the veterinarian was confined principally to the tuberculin test, conducted by the method usual in such cases. Upon this examination, and the opinion of the veterinary and Bracken that 50 head of said cows were in a healthy condition, being free from tubercular symptoms or other diseases to which cattle are peculiarly subject, Schmitt took the cows at the rate of $100 per head, exchanging mules therefor at the rate of $85 per head. Immediately after the consummation of this bargain, Schmitt drove the cattle to the ranch of Bracken, above spoken of, also situated a short distance from the town of Lathrop. All these transactions took place early or in the middle of the month of December, 1921. About 15 or 18 days after he had procured the cows, Schmitt, having learned that the defendants desired to purchase some dairy cows, entered into negotiations with the latter for the sale to them of said cows. After some discussion of the proposition between the parties, the defendants, accompanied by one Lewis Sheridan, went to the Bracken ranch to look at or inspect the cattle, with the result that they bought 49 head of the cows at the rate of $110 a head, they having themselves selected them from the herd procured by Schmitt from Adams.

At the trial, and in support of their defense and the charge set up in their cross-complaint that Schmitt falsely and with intent to defraud them represented the cows to be in a perfectly healthy physical condition and adapted to dairy purposes, the defendants testified that, while they were looking the cattle over before a sale thereof to them was perfected, they asked Schmitt particularly as to whether the cows were afflicted with a disease known as "abortion"—a condition, as we understand it, in female cattle which becomes of a chronic character, and which, when existent in such cattle, arrests gestation and so causes the premature delivery of calves, with the almost invariable result that the calves are either dead when delivered or die within a short time thereafter, thereby deteriorating the milk-producing quality of the cows; that they also asked Schmitt whether the cows were udder deficient, whether they were with calves, and, in short, whether they were in all respects perfectly fit for dairy use; that Schmitt replied in the most positive terms that the cattle were not suffering from the disease known as "abortion," and were wholly free from tuberculosis; that he had had the cows thoroughly examined by Dr. Lichtenwalter, and that the doctor had pronounced them in a perfect condition of health, bearing none of the symptoms of any disease peculiar to cattle; that the cows would produce calves, and that some of them were already with calves. The defendants further testified that the cows proved entirely worthless for use as dairy cows; that only 8 of the number were with calves when taken to their dairy ranch, but the calves came prematurely, and all but 2 of the 8 died within a few hours after their delivery; that some of the cows losing their calves would thereafter give a very small quantity of milk, while others likewise afflicted would give no milk at all; that they treated the cows so that, if capable of doing so at all, they would give milk, but that the treatment was wholly futile or ineffectual. In short, they stated that the entire herd or "bunch" of cows they purchased from Schmitt, save and except 3 or 4, were wholly unfit for dairy purposes, and were not worth, for beef cattle, to exceed $35 or $40; that, in fact, there were 34 head which they had been unable to sell at all for beef or any other purpose. The defendants testified that, while on the occasion mentioned they looked the cattle over before the purchase was made, and that (so one of them testified), the cows, from such inspection as they then subjected them to, appeared to be worth the price they paid for them, they nevertheless, in making the purchase, relied entirely upon and were solely induced by the representations of Schmitt that the animals were in every respect in a sound physical condition and adapted to dairy purposes. One of the defendants further stated that, although he had heard and read of the fact that milch cows were often found to be afflicted with the disease known as "abortion," he was not an expert on cattle diseases, and therefore even a critical investigation by him of the cattle would not have enabled him to determine whether any of the cows were so afflicted.

Schmitt testified that, before completing the trade for the cows, he had the animals examined by Dr. Lichtenwalter particularly for the purpose of determining whether they were free from tuberculosis or tubercular germs. This examination took place on the Bracken ranch; 61 head of the cattle having been selected by Schmitt from a herd of 88 cows and driven to said ranch, where there were barns equipped with stanchions and other facilities for conveniently conducting such an examination. The doctor, proceeded Schmitt, subjected the cows to a tuberculin test—that is, he injected into the cattle a serum commonly used for the purpose of making such a test—that, at the end of about 96 hours after the injection of the serum—the period of time necessary to intervene to determine the result of the test—he, with the doctor and Bracken, again inspected the cows, and found that there were, among the herd of 61, but two "reactors"; that is to say, that 59 of the cows proved to be wholly without symptoms of tuberculosis, while two appeared to carry germs of the disease. Schmitt further testified that those cows—4 or 5—whose udders bore the appearance of not being normal, were examined by the doctor and found to be in good condition. The reason, he said, that the udders of all the cows were not subjected to a physical examination was that it could easily be seen from a general survey of the animals not so examined that their udders were in a perfectly normal condition. Schmitt, who had for many years been engaged in the cattle business, also said that, at the time they were sold to the defendants, the cows, or a majority of them, were with calves; that there was no evidence of the disease of abortion in the cows, and that some "6 or 8" of the cows gave birth to calves before the animals were taken from the Bracken ranch by the defendants, and that all said calves, with the exception of 2, lived and were in a healthy state. Positively Schmitt testified that during the negotiations resulting in the sale of the cows to the defendants not a word was said, either by the latter or himself about the disease of abortion, or as to whether the cows or any of them were or were not afflicted therewith. Dr. Lichtenwalter corroborated Schmitt with respect to the examination he gave the cows, saying that his examination was conducted with the view of ascertaining whether any of the cows were afflicted with tuberculosis; that he found all but two of the 61 head selected by Schmitt to be entirely free from that disease or the symptoms thereof, that the udders of all the cows were in normal condition, and that he observed in none of the herd any indications of the disease technically termed "abortion." Bracken, an experienced dairyman, who was present when the tuberculin test was made by the veterinarian, and who was also present when the sale of the cows was made to defendants, testified that the animals appeared on both occasions to be in a healthy condition; that the udders of none were in any way deficient; that he did not, at the time the defendants purchased the cows, hear any one speak of the disease of abortion; that, so far as he knew, the disease of abortion was not brought up or referred to either by defendants or Schmitt or himself.

The foregoing embraces a statement in substance of the testimony presented by both sides.

[1] The issues presented to the jury, specifically stated, were these: Whether the representations as to the physical condition of the cows and their fitness for dairy use were made by Schmitt, and, if so, were they false and made with the purpose and intent of deceiving and defrauding defendants, and were defendants, in purchasing the cows, solely influenced or induced to make the purchase by the representations so made. The cause of action set out in the cross-complaint was, therefore, founded on fraud and deceit (section 1572, subs. 1 and 2, Civ Code), and it was not only necessary to support the cause of action so stated for the defendants to prove that the representations alleged were made and were false, but further, that in purchasing the cows they solely relied upon and were likewise induced to do so by the representations so made or some vital one of such representations. And even if it had been shown to be true that the cows after their purchase by defendants were found to be physically unfit for use for dairy cows for any of the reasons alleged in the cross-complaint, a failure to make a case under said pleading would follow unless it were also shown that the representations alleged, or some of them, were made, that they were false, and that defendants were lead to make the purchase solely by reason thereof.

[2] Now, as to the evidentiary phase of the case, it will readily be seen that upon the issue of fraud, as alleged in the complaint, there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Certainly there exists, or appears to exist, such a conflict upon the question whether Schmitt did or did not represent to the defendants that the cows were free from the disease known as abortion. As to the alleged assurance by Schmitt that the udders of all the cows were in a healthy or normal condition and that in that respect the cows were fit for dairy purposes, it is clear that if that defect really existed it is one so patent and obvious that it would readily have been detected upon a visual examination of the cattle. The specific complaint in that particular is based upon the claim that some of the teats attached to the udders of several of the cows were, as we understand the testimony on that subject, so shriveled or atrophied as to render the cows thus afflicted unprofitable as milch cows—that is to say, that those cows were, by reason of their defective udders, incapable of producing the quantity of milk usual with first-class dairy cows. As a matter of common knowledge, it is known that it requires no veterinarian to discover such a defect in the udders of milch cows. An inspection of the cows by any person of common intelligence, and particularly by a person engaged, as have been the defendants, in the dairy business for a long period of years, would readily reveal to him such condition in a milch cow. The udder of a milch cow would, quite naturally, be among the first of the physical characteristics of such an animal which a person intending to purchase it for dairy purposes would give careful attention to, or such an examination as would enable him at once to determine whether the animal was deficient in that particular as a milk producer. The defendants, according to their own testimony, saw several of the cows in a stall, and were “amongst and about” the remainder of the herd as they were grazing in a field, and Schmitt testified that a person could step up to and put his hand on any of the cows while they were grazing, meaning, of course, that they were perfectly gentle, and that a thorough inspection of them at “close range” could be had. Thus it is clear that the defendants had convenient opportunity for inspecting the cows with a view of ascertaining the condition of their udders, and even if Schmitt did make the statement that the udders of all the cows were in a healthy or perfectly normal condition it was regarding a matter upon which the defendants could as well have informed themselves, they having full opportunity to do so. Indeed, under the circumstances, it was their duty, rather than to rely upon what Schmitt stated in regard to the udders, to make an examination for themselves and then exercise their own judgment in the matter. Lee v. McClelland, 120 Cal. 147, 52 P. 300. “If, in a contract of sale, * * *” says Professor Pomeroy, in his treatise on Equity Jurisprudence (3d Ed.) § 894, “representations are made by the vendor concerning some incidents, qualities, or attributes of the subject-matter which are open and visible, so that the falsity of the statement is patent to any ordinary observer, and it is made to appear that the purchaser, at or shortly before concluding the contract, had seen the thing itself which constitutes the subject-matter, then a knowledge of the facts is chargeable upon such party; he is assumed to have made the agreement knowingly, and cannot allege that he was misled by the false representations.” See, also, Hackleman v. Lyman, 50 Cal. App. 323, 327, 195 P. 263.

[3, 4] The above rule, it seems to us, plainly fits the facts of this case, in so far as are concerned the alleged defective udders. The alleged representation by Schmitt that all the cows were with calves, “and would calve within six weeks,” is not entirely supported by the testimony of the defendants themselves. The defendant Byron Archer testified that there were several calves among the herd; that, when he asked Schmitt “why there were not more calves with this bunch,” the latter replied that “a good many of them died from drinking rich Jersey milk.” In his testimony, however, said Archer explained that the representation by Schmitt that “all the cows were with calves” was in reply to his (said Archer's) question as to those cows which had not at the time borne calves. Schmitt testified that Dr. Lichtenwalter examined the cows to see whether they were with calves before Schmitt purchased from Adams, and that both the doctor and himself satisfied themselves that they “were picking calvey cows, cows that were going to calve, and ones, of course, that already had calves.” This testimony shows that Schmitt's statement to defendants as to the condition of the cows in that particular amounted to nothing more than a mere opinion. Whether this opinion was based upon his own inspection of the cows or upon the opinion of the veterinarian as the result of the latter's examination of the animals is not clear from the evidence, nor is it important, for there is nothing in his testimony or that of the defendants which shows, or which may reasonably be said to tend to show, that his opinion was expressed with a design to deceive the defendants as to the matter. To the contrary, the fact that a large number of the cows had already delivered calves tends strongly to show that his expression of the opinion that those cows which had not then already been delivered were with calves was honestly made and with no intent or purpose to deceive the defendants. It is elementary that expressions of opinion honestly made are not actionable. Phelps v. Grady, 168 Cal. 73, 77, 141 P. 926, and cases therein cited. But it is quite manifest that defendants themselves, by the exercise of their own judgment upon an inspection of the cows, could as well have satisfied themselves with regard to whether the cows, or those which had not already calved, were or were not within six weeks, or approximately six weeks, of parturition. With their long experience in the handling of milch cows, it is hardly probable that, having themselves inspected the cows, they relied on Schmitt's statement rather than upon their own judgment regarding that matter and the jury, it may be assumed, so viewed that phase of the case.

[5, 6] We have shown that both Schmitt and Bracken testified that no question was asked by any of the defendants as to whether the cows were afflicted with the disease of abortion; that, in fact, that disease was never mentioned or referred to by any person present when defendants were taking a view of the cows; that therefore there was a conflict in the evidence as to the alleged representation by Schmitt with respect to that question which was for the jury to resolve; but it may further be remarked in that connection that the disease of abortion as applied to cows is not in all cases in a contagious form, as a statement in the brief of defendants implies. It is declared by very high authority (Special Report, 1923, on Diseases of Cattle, Bureau of Animal Industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, p. 165), that the said disease exists and manifests itself in two different forms, the one contagious and the other noncontagious, and it is important in this case to note that the same authority states that, except where the actual fact of abortion has occurred, the existence of the disease in either form can only be discovered by a microscopical examination of the cow, or by some other means of examination involving such a scientific test as will disclose the existence of such a condition. From this it is clear that Byron Archer, who stated that he had himself "read about" said disease, must have known, or at least it must have occurred to him, that any representation by Schmitt, who was not a veterinarian, and who, as the evidence shows, made no pretense that an examination had been made, either by him or any veterinarian, with a view of ascertaining whether any of the cows were so afflicted, could have amounted to nothing further than the mere opinion of a layman having no more and perhaps less acquaintance with the diseases of cattle than had the defendant Byron Archer, or, for that matter, any other layman. The jury could apparently warrantably have so concluded, and probably did so conclude.

Concluding now on the branch of the case presently in hand, it may be suggested that if it were necessary to prosecute an inquiry to discover the particular considerations which led the jury to accept upon the issue of fraud the testimony presented by the plaintiff as against that presented by the defendants, one of singular significance is to be found in the fact that, although they notified Schmitt of the premature delivery of calves by some of the cows shortly after they took possession thereof, the defendants made no other movement looking to a rescission of the agreement of sale or the surrender and cancellation of the note in suit on the ground of failure of consideration therefor (Union Invest. Co. v. F. M. Landon Co., 32 Cal. App. 305, 162 P. 903), or for damages for any damage incurred by defendants for a breach of the agreement upon the part of the vendor in that the cattle sold were not what they were represented to be in quality or condition, but, to the contrary, continued (uncomplainingly, so far as the record shows) to retain possession of the cows (even making an effort to sell them), until the institution of this action some 10 months after they had purchased the cows, and 7 or 8 months after they had obtained what they conceived to be concrete evidence that some of them were afflicted with the disease known as abortion.

Having now sufficiently considered the point that the verdict is lacking in sufficient support from the evidence, we will proceed with the consideration of the contention that certain instructions allowed by the court do not correctly state the law of the case as made by the pleadings and proofs. There are two instructions thus assailed and they are the following:

"That false representations, to constitute fraud, must actually deceive. If it is not believed or if the party disregards it and makes inquiries for himself, there is no fraud, and that if you believe from the evidence in this case that the defendants did not believe the representations of plaintiff's agent and purchased the property in question after an independent investigation and inquiry and upon the strength thereof rather than upon the strength of said representations, then your judgment should be for plaintiff.

"That statements by the vendor of property as to its adaptability to certain uses do not constitute fraud, and you are instructed that if you believe that plaintiff's agent stated to defendants that the cows in question were good dairy cows, and if you find that at such time such statement was made defendants knew that plaintiff's agent had no information as a basis for such statement, then such statement was not a misrepresentation in law."

[7-10] The instruction first above presented embraces a correct abstract statement of the law. It is unquestionably true that, to constitute fraud, false representations must actually have had the effect of deceiving and thus leading the party to whom they are made into entering into an agreement by the terms of which he parts with something of value. And no proposition could be less debatable than that where the vendee, in a contract of sale of property, does not believe or disregards the representations of the vendor as to the character, condition, or quality of such property, but as to those matters prosecutes an independent investigation for himself, and, in purchasing the property, relies entirely upon his own inquiries and investigation rather than upon the representations made by the vendor, the vendee, after discovering that the property is not of the character or quality or in the condition which his own judgment, based upon his own investigation, established it to be, cannot predicate a rescission of the contract or maintain an action for damages upon the representations so made by the vendor, even though they be shown to be false. Counsel for appellants, however, argue that the instruction is vulnerable because, as they contend, it fails to embrace the statement that the inquiry independently prosecuted by the vendee himself has been effective—that is, that thus he actually learned the real facts. It is true, of course, that if by his own investigation he has learned the real facts concerning the property, and then makes the purchase relying solely on what he himself has thus learned, he is bound by his own judgment in the matter, and cannot claim damages based upon deception or false statements by the vendor regarding the quality or condition of the property which in no manner or degree operated to induce him to make the purchase. But the rule even goes further, for if the buyer wholly disbelieved and disregarded the representations made by the vendor as to the character or quality or condition of the property, and did not rely or act upon, or was in no measure induced by said representations to purchase such property, then, in such case, the vendee cannot claim to have been deceived or defrauded in making such purchase, even though it was true that he did ineffectually prosecute an independent investigation as to the condition, quality, or attributes of the property involved. This is so because the essential essence or gravamen of a cause of action based upon section 1571 of the Civil Code is in the deceit practiced by the defendant upon the plaintiff, and which produced the damage complained of. In a case of this character there can be no damage where there has been no deception, or, what in law is the same thing, where the alleged deception is in false representations which had no effect upon the mind of the party sought to be deceived in changing his position regarding the property as to which the false representations were made.

[11, 12] The criticism of the other or second instruction is directed particularly to that part thereof in italics, viz.: "That statements by the vendor of property as to its adaptability to certain uses do not constitute fraud." That part of the instruction, taken alone, while misleading in a case such as we have here, is, as an abstract statement, not far afield in the statement of a correct proposition, since it is manifestly true that the mere statement by the vendor of property as to its adaptability to certain uses would not constitute fraud unless such statement was false and made with the intent and design to defraud a party out of his property or to induce him, to his detriment, to enter into an improvident contract. What the court probably intended to say was (and this is reasonably to be gathered from the succeeding language of the instruction) that the statement by the vendor of property as to its adaptability to certain uses does not constitute fraud if it appear that defendants knew at the time such statement was made that plaintiff's agent had no information as a basis for such statement. As so viewed, the instruction does not misstate the rule. It is to be conceded, though, that the instruction is not wholly free from criticism, and that, if it stood alone upon the subject to which it relates, it might be troublesome in the consideration and disposition of this appeal; but elsewhere in its charge the court submitted to the jury, in two separate instructions, a correct statement of the rule applicable in this case. The rule so stated was embraced in the two following instructions, given by the court on the request of defendants:

"You are instructed that if you find from the evidence that the cows showed and offered to the defendants were then and there stated by plaintiff or his agent to be good dairy cows and suitable for dairy purposes, when in truth and in fact they were not dairy cows and were unsuitable for dairy purposes, and that this representation was made to induce defendants to purchase said cows, and was believed and relied upon by defendants, that one fact alone will entitle the defendants to damages, and the measure of damages will be as herein defined."

The second given instruction, also proposed by the defendants, in effect repeats the statement of the rule as follows:

"If you find from the evidence that the cows delivered were unsuitable for dairy purposes you will then find the amount of profits, if any, which the defendants have lost between the day of sale to the day of trial, by reason of their conducting their dairy business with the inferior cows so delivered to them by the plaintiff as aforesaid."

We cannot persuade ourselves that the jury could have been misled as to the law of the case, as it is clearly declared in the two foregoing instructions, by the criticized instruction, particularly in view of the fact that the latter instruction is, as we have shown, capable of being so construed as to harmonize with the rule as it was stated in the instructions last above quoted herein. But even if it be granted that the assailed instruction is or appears to be inconsistent with the instructions containing a correct statement of the rule, a careful and reasonable analysis of said instruction will force the conclusion that the repugnancy is so slight that the jury could not have been misled or confused as to the true rule by which it was their duty to be governed in solving the proposition which it was the evident design of the court thereby to submit to them. In applying the rule that a judgment will be reversed "where two instructions are contradictory in essential particulars," it is also "to be borne in mind," said Justice McLaughlin (when a member of this court), in Hayden v. Consolidated Min., etc., Co., 3 Cal. App. 136, 139, 84 P. 422, 423, "that, although some of the instructions may in slight respects be repugnant to each other, if it appear that the jury could not have been misled thereby, a new trial will not be granted"—citing a number of cases. Again, in that case, the learned justice further said:

"And it must further be remembered that 'the meaning of the court below cannot be fairly arrived at by a partial view of what the jury was told was the law by which they should be governed. All that was said to them in relation to the matter should be considered.' People v. Kennedy, 55 Cal. 202; Ellis v. Tone, 58 Cal. 297; Monaghan v. Rolling Mill Co., 81 Cal. 193 [22 P. 590]; Feliz v. Feliz, 105 Cal. 6 [38 P. 521]. In construing the charge of the court, it must be viewed in the light of common understanding, and the practical administration of justice should not be defeated by a too rigid adherence to close and technical analysis of the whole or any part thereof"—citing many cases.

Our conclusion is, as the foregoing discussion indicates, that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

2. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 101½ — Sale of property of deceased lessee under probate proceedings held not to come within provisions of lease terminating lessee's interest on transfer by execution receivership, bankruptcy, or other operation of law.

A sale of property of decedent lessee under probate proceedings is not in view of rule of ejusdem generis, such a transfer by operation of law as to come within lease providing for termination of lessee's interest on transfer of such interest under execution, receivership, bankruptcy, "or other operation of law, or otherwise," since probate transfer arises through death of lessee, whereas transfers specified in lease arise from inability to pay debts.

3. Contracts $\Leftrightarrow$ 318—Deeds $\Leftrightarrow$ 155—Burden on party claiming forfeiture under written instrument to show that such was intention of instrument; forfeiture not enforced unless terms are plain.

Burden is on party claiming forfeiture of rights under written instrument to show that such was the unmistakable intention of instrument, and forfeiture of estates and restraints upon alienation should not be enforced except when terms of conditions are so plain as to be beyond province of construction.

4. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 101½—Words "or other operation of law," in lease terminating lessee's interest by reason of receivership, execution, or bankruptcy, held to include mortgage foreclosure sales; "ejusdem generis."

Under rule of ejusdem generis, when specific words employed in instrument are exhaustive of class to which they belong, some meaning must be found for general words if possible, since effect must be given to all parts of a writing, so that, where lease provided for termination of lessee's interest on transfer of such interest under execution, receivership, bankruptcy, words "or other operation of law" not including transfers under probate proceedings, may be construed to include sales by order of court, or other officers in decrees for foreclosure of mortgages which under the lease and rules of forfeitures are not to be construed as execution sales.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by the Stratford Company against the Continental Mortgage Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, but, on court's refusal to award it full measure of relief, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; Myers, C. J., dissenting.

Frank C. Hill and George S. Hupp, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newby & Palmer, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, J. In its inception this action was one in unlawful detainer for nonpayment of rent. The complexion of the litigation, however, was materially changed by the filing, pursuant to an order of the trial court, of an amendment to the complaint to conform to the proof. We shall lay aside a contention of respondents that the court was without power to permit the filing of the amendment, and shall proceed to a discussion of the merits of the question which appellant seeks to present. The judgment was in form in favor of plaintiff, but, as the court refused to award it the full measure of relief for which it contended, that party appeals.

Appellant, a landlord, insists that it was entitled to a judgment declaring a forfeiture of a lease out of which the rights and duties of the respective parties spring, and it is that relief which was denied by the trial court. The lease contained a paragraph forbidding assignments of the instrument without the consent of the lessor. A part of the paragraph follows, with our italics:

"It is expressly made a condition of this lease that, in the event that any person, other than the lessee named herein, shall secure possession of the interest of the lessee hereunder, under execution, or by reason of any receivership or proceeding in bankruptcy, or other operation of law, or otherwise, * * * all interest of the lessee hereunder, shall, at the option of the lessor, forthwith cease and terminate, and the lessor may forthwith or at any time thereafter, * * * re-enter and take possession of said premises. * * *

The contention of appellant that it was entitled to judgment that the lease had been forfeited is based upon this language of the instrument and particularly upon the italicized portion of it. The claim that there was a forfeiture is founded upon these further facts: During the term created by the lease, the lessee died. Letters of administration in the matter of his estate were taken out by his wife, and she entered upon her duties as administratrix. In the due course of the administration of the estate, and upon due order of the court sitting in probate, the administratrix sold the leasehold interest of the lessee under the lease and made assignment of the instrument to the purchaser. The latter went into possession under the assignment. The sole question presented by appellant for determination, doubly stated, is this: Did the assignment come within the language of the lease which is above set forth? Did the sale and the consequent assignment of the leasehold interest invade the legal meaning of the words "or other operation of law, or otherwise"?

[1, 2] Respondents insist that the question raised must be answered in the negative, for the reason that, in the light of the facts inherent in the nature of the transfer of the leasehold interest, the words last quoted are harmless to their rights as assignees under the rule of construction familiarly associated with the expression ejusdem generis. There is no difficulty in ascertaining the general import of this rule. Its meaning is so well understood as to require no exposition here. The real question, as is usually the case, is to determine whether the rule its

the facts now presented—whether a sale and delivery of property of a decedent under a probate proceeding and as a step in the settlement of his estate is a transfer by operation of law "of the same kind" with a transfer "under execution, or by reason of any receivership or proceeding in bankruptcy." It is to be observed, in aid of the contention of respondents, that the specific transfers by operation of law which are mentioned in the lease are those possibly to arise because of the inability of the lessee to meet his financial obligations, those which, under the law, except in the case of a voluntary bankruptcy, are, in addition, harsh, forced, and not in any manner under the direction of himself or of any personal representative. The following reflections appear to justify this classification as one to be employed in determining whether the transfer under the probate proceeding was one "of the same kind" with those specifically mentioned in the lease. Such a transfer is not one which in its essence arises from an inability to pay debts, but through death. It is not forced, in the sense in which that term is applied to the three methods or kinds of transfer in terms named in the instrument. A transfer in probate is initiated, engineered, and controlled, subject to the orders of the court, by a personal representative of the deceased, a representative who is so near to him that, under the law governing cases of intestacy, he must primarily be the spouse, or be selected from among the relatives, of the deceased, and it is therefore in a sense friendly and voluntary. It is particularly worthy of note that, as we have already remarked, a transfer under probate proceedings arises from death and not from an inability of a living person to pay his debts. With this thought in view, the lease is to be construed, if we adopt appellant's contention, exactly as if it provided that the term created by the instrument was to end, at the option of the lessor, upon the death of the lessee. This is a method of forfeiture which, it appears to us, is different from those contemplated by the reference in the lease to sales under execution, in bankruptcy proceedings, or through receiverships. We are convinced, as argued by respondents, that the lease was not so drawn as to prevent the term created by it "from passing into the hands of an administrator and being disposed of by him in the usual course of the administration of the estate, without the consent of the lessor."

[3] In considering the question urged by appellant, we have paid due regard to the rules of law that, where there is a claim made that a forfeiture of rights under a written instrument has occurred, the burden is upon the party making the point "to show that such was the unmistakable intention of the instrument" (Quatman v. McCray, 128

Cal. 285, 60 P. 855); and that the courts tenaciously cling "to the rule that forfeitures of estates and restraints upon alienations should not be enforced except when the terms of the conditions are so plain as to be beyond the province of construction" (Randol v. Scott, 110 Cal. 590, 42 P. 976). See, also, Jameson v. Chanslor-Canfield Oil Co., 176 Cal. 1, 167 P. 369, citing Civ. Code, § 1442.

[4] Before leaving the question here involved, it is proper to mention a point not presented by counsel, as it seems necessary, or at least convenient, to a final disposition of the appeal. It is settled by many cases, only one of which we shall cite (Strange v. Board of Commissioners, 173 Ind. 640, 91 N. E. 242), that, under the rule ejusdem generis, when the specific words employed in the instrument sought to be construed are exhaustive of the class to which they belong, some meaning must be found for the general words if possible, because of the well-known rule that effect must be given to all parts of a writing if that result can be accomplished. It is said in the case cited that the rule "that general words following a particular enumeration will not include things of a superior class, has no application where the rule would leave the general words without meaning or effect." We are thus inspired to inquire whether there are sales or transfers by operation of law other than those under execution, under receiverships, or in bankruptcy, which are in the same class with those specifically named, and, if there be any, to state what they are. In that class, it seems to us, as we have above described it, are sales by order of court, by commissioners or other officers, in decrees for the foreclosure of mortgages. It is true that for some purposes a foreclosure sale is to be treated as an execution sale (Moore v. Ross, 139 Ind. 200, 38 N. E. 817), but we have no difficulty in determining that, for the purposes of the instrument before us, and under the rules of law concerning forfeitures which we have above stated, it is not so to be considered. See, also, Norton v. Reardon, 67 Kan. 302, 72 P. 861, 100 Am. St. Rep. 459. A sale under decree of foreclosure would therefore come within the general language of the lease which we now construe. Perhaps other methods of judicial sale might be named which would fall under the same classification, but it is not necessary further to pursue an inquiry into the subject. As a meaning has been found for the general language of the lease, within the class into which the specifically named modes of transfer naturally fall, it is neither necessary nor proper to include probate sales within the general designation.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF OAKLAND v. SCHENCK et al.
(S. F. 11165.)(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1925.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1925.)

1. Eminent domain ⇨241—Failure of condemnation judgment to state that railroad land was condemned for street purposes in common with use by railroad held not prejudicial.

In proceedings by city, under Street Opening Act of 1903, to condemn strip of land across railroad right of way, failure to incorporate in condemnation judgment stipulation that land was condemned for street purposes, in common with use thereof for railroad purposes, was not prejudicial to railroads, as judgment carried no greater estate than mere easement in property for purpose of opening and extending street.

2. Eminent domain ⇨69—Railroad right of way private property, which can only be taken under power of eminent domain, for just compensation.

A railroad right of way is so far private property as to be entitled to protection of Const. art. 1, § 14, so that it can only be taken under power of eminent domain, for which just compensation must be paid.

3. Eminent domain ⇨122—Compensation should be awarded in condemnation proceeding, however small it may be.

Though interest appropriated in condemnation proceeding may be small and amount of compensation difficult of proper measurement, some award should be made, however small the amount may be.

4. Eminent domain ⇨120—Rule as to compensation to be allowed railroad for opening street across right of way different than in case of property of individual.

Because nature of interest in land acquired by city in opening street across railroad right of way, and, as one of incidents of public use to which railroad dedicates property used as right of way, is right of public to construct street crossings when reasonably necessary, rule as to amount of compensation is different than in case of taking property of individual for like uses.

5. Eminent domain ⇨120—Railroads' compensation for opening of street across their right of way nominal, where use for railroad purposes not unduly interfered with.

In condemning right of way for street across railroad right of way, extent to which railroads' right to use of land for tracks will be diminished by opening of street should be ascertained, and if use for legitimate railroad purposes is not unduly interfered with, railroads' compensation should be nominal; inquiry being directed solely to question of diminution, if any, in value of railroad right of way.

6. Eminent domain ⇨319—Railroads retain rights in soil of right of way over which city requires easement for opening of street.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1239, subs. 1, 2, and Political Code, § 2631, where city, in proceeding under Street Opening Act of 1903, sought only easement across railroad right of way to open street, railroads as owners in fee, may retain their rights in soil for all purposes consistent with full enjoyment of easement for street purposes acquired by city.

7. Eminent domain ⇨120—City acquiring merely easement across railroad right of way not required to pay for fee.

Where city, in proceeding under Street Opening Act of 1903, sought only an easement across railroad right of way for purpose of opening a street, city was not bound to acquire and pay for fee; extent of value to which such railroads' right to use such land was unduly diminished being only question to be considered.

8. Eminent domain ⇨200—Burden on railroads over whose right of way city acquired easement to show that value thereof was unduly diminished.

In proceedings under Street Opening Act of 1903, to acquire easement across railroad right of way for opening of street, burden is on railroads to show that value of their right to use of land was unduly diminished thereby.

9. Eminent domain ⇨120—Railroads held not entitled to damages for structural changes necessitated because of opening of street across right of way.

Where city, by condemnation proceedings, acquired easement across railroad right of way for purpose of opening street, held, that railroads were not entitled to damages for structural changes required resulting therefrom, as such expenses must be regarded as incidental to police power of state.

10. Railroads ⇨95(1)—Duty of railroad to construct and maintain in good condition its crossings over highways.

Generally it is duty of every railroad company to construct and maintain in good condition its crossings over highways, so far as can be done without interfering with operation of railway.

11. Railroads ⇨61—May acquire fee in land by direct purchase.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, railroad may acquire fee in land by direct purchase, though it may obtain only an easement for railroad purposes if it resort to proceedings in eminent domain.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the City of Oakland against Mary S. Schenck, the Southern Pacific Company, and the Central Pacific Railway Company, under the Street Opening Act of 1903, to condemn certain land. From a portion of a judgment awarding them nominal damages of $1 as compensation, the two last-named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

D. J. Foulds and H. W. Hobbs, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Leon E. Gray, City Atty., and Bestor Robinson, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in condemnation. The defendant railroad companies were the owners in fee of a strip of land in the city of Oakland 115.272 feet in width and approximately 757 feet in length. The northeasterly 55.272 feet of this strip is in use as a right of way for appellants' electric suburban railroad, while the southwesterly 60 feet of the strip is not presently devoted to railroad uses. The city brought this action, under the Street Opening Act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376), to condemn a strip of land 60 feet wide across the lands of appellants and of defendant Schenck for the purpose of opening and extending Eighty-Ninth avenue. The court, sitting without a jury, found the value of the part of appellants' land not devoted to railroad purposes to be $300, and that no damages would be suffered by reason of the severance. The appellants take no exception to this finding. With respect to the part of the land in use for a railroad right of way, the court found the value of the interest to be taken was $1, and that no damages would be suffered by appellants by reason of the taking. It is by this finding, and by the portion of the judgment awarding the nominal sum of $1 as compensation, that appellants feel aggrieved, and for that reason they prosecute this appeal.

[1] Appellants' contentions are that the trial court erred, first, in awarding only $1 as the value of the easement taken by the city for street purposes across the strip of land owned in fee by the defendants, and used as a railroad right of way; and, second, in holding that the railroad companies were not entitled to damages for the structural changes required in their tracks and appliances resulting from the opening of the street. A less important contention is that the judgment in condemnation should have provided in terms, in accordance with a stipulation entered into during the trial, that the land was condemned for street purposes in common with the use thereof for railroad purposes. It would have been better practice to have carried such a reservation of use into the judgment; but we do not see how the appellants have been prejudiced by what was done in this case. The plaintiff below, by the complaint in condemnation, sought only an "easement in, on and over said pieces or parcels of land for street purposes." The findings fully cover the purposes of the action and the subject of joint user by the city and the railroad companies. The judgment declares that the use of the property (parcel 2) "as and for a public street, is consistent with the continuance of the use of said property for the present use as and for a railroad right of way and that both public uses can exist together." When these proceedings were instituted the railroad companies had an exclusive right to use the land in question for tracks upon which to move their cars. The city does not propose to interfere in any degree with the enjoyment of that right otherwise than by the opening of the street across the tracks for a public use. The judgment carries no greater estate than a mere easement in the property for the uses stated. McCarty v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Cal. 211, 222, 82 P. 615.

[2-5] In support of their contention that the trial court erred in allowing only $1 for the taking of an easement for street purposes over the railroad right of way, appellants argue, first, that the taking of a right of way for use as another right of way is the taking of land, or an interest in land, which shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation made to the owner or paid into court for him. Calif. Const. art. I, § 14. It may not be questioned that a railroad's right of way is so far private property as to be entitled to the protection of the Constitution, so that it can only be taken under the power of eminent domain; and a condition precedent to the exercise of that power is that the statute conferring it make provision for reasonably compensating the owner. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Penn. R. R. Co., 195 U. S. 540, 570, 25 S. Ct. 133, 49 L. Ed. 312, 1 Ann. Cas. 517. The interest appropriated by the party condemning may be small, and the amount of compensation difficult of proper measurement, but some award should be made, however small the amount may be. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Commissioners, 63 Ohio St. 23, 57 N. E. 1009. But, because of the nature of the interest in the land which is acquired by a city, where a street is opened across a railroad right of way, the rule as to the amount of compensation to be allowed the railroad company is different from the rule which prevails in the case of the taking of the property of an individual for like uses. The reason for this difference is that one of the incidents of the public use to which a railroad company dedicates its property used as a right of way is the right of the public to construct street crossings wherever and whenever reasonably necessary.

In condemning a right of way for a street across a railroad right of way, the inquiry must be directed to ascertaining the extent to which the value of the company's right to use the land for railroad tracks will be diminished by the opening of the street across it. If the opening of the street across the railroad tracks in this case does not unduly interfere with the companies' use for legitimate railroad purposes, then their compensation should be nominal. Whether there was such an interference, what was its extent, and what was the value of that lost by the appellants as the direct result of such interference, were questions of fact to be determined in the light of the legal principles by which the court was to be governed in fixing the amount of compensation to the owners of the railroad right of way. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 242, 17 S. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979. If, prior to the institution of the condemnation proceedings, the railroad companies had constructed upon the land embraced within the crossing buildings to be used in their business, it would have been necessary, in ascertaining the just compensation to be awarded, to take into consideration the value of such improvements. There were no buildings in the present case. The inquiry is directed solely to the question of the diminution, if any, in value of the railroad right of way.

[6-8] The Legislature has declared what estates and rights in land may be taken in this state for public use. Section 1239 of the Code of Civil Procedure, after designating (subd. 1) the cases in which a fee simple may be taken, prescribes (subd. 2) that, with certain exceptions, only an easement may be taken. One of the exceptions is that—

“When the taking is by a municipal corporation, and is for the purpose of constructing, equipping, using, maintaining * * * any * * * road * * * a fee simple may be taken if the legislative body of such municipal corporation shall, by resolution, determine the taking thereof to be necessary.”

In this case only an easement is sought. Section 2631 of the Political Code declares that, by taking land for a highway, the public acquires only the right of way, and the incidents necessary to enjoying and maintaining the same, subject to the regulations in the Codes provided. In the present case it was stipulated that the portion of the right of way of the appellants sought to be condemned was required for street purposes only, for use by the public in common with the use by the railroad companies; that the uses are consistent; and that the railroad operated by the defendants can exist with the street across it. Appellants, as owners of the fee in the right of way over which the street is opened, will retain their rights in the soil for all purposes which are consistent with the full enjoyment of the easement for street purposes acquired by the city. Wright v. Austin, 143 Cal. 236, 239, 76 P. 1023, 65 L. R. A. 949, 101 Am. St. Rep. 97; Gurnsey v. Northern Calif. Power Co., 160 Cal. 699, 705, 117 P. 906, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185. As the right to open a street across the railroad tracks was all that the city sought to obtain by the proceedings in condemnation, it was not bound to acquire and pay for the fee in the land over which the street is opened. The extent to which the value of the companies' right to use the land for railroad tracks was unduly diminished by opening the public street across it was the only question to be determined by the jury. Chicago, Bur- lington & Quincy R. R. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 251, 17 S. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979. The burden of showing such diminution of value of the right of way was on the appellants. The evidence, on the whole, on that subject is not as satisfactory as it might be. Its weight and the inferences to be drawn therefrom were matters confided to the discretion of the trial judge, and we are not disposed to hold that it fails to support the findings and judgment of the court below.

[9, 10] Appellants' second major contention is that the trial court erred in holding that the railroad companies were not entitled to damages for structural changes required in their tracks and appliances resulting from the opening of the street. The contention presents a question which, like the first discussed, is no longer open to argument. Appellants cannot recover for such costs. The expenses that will be incurred by the railroad companies in making structural changes, such as filling the portion of the tracks between the rails, and two feet outside, with planks, and other crossing changes, in order that the railroad may be safely operated, necessarily result from the maintenance of a public highway, under legislative sanction, and must be deemed to have been taken into account by the railroad companies when they accepted the privileges and franchises granted by the state. Such expenses must be regarded as incidental to the police power of the state.

“What was obtained, and all that was obtained, by the condemnation proceedings for the public was the right to open a street across land within the crossing that was used, and was always likely to be used, for railroad tracks. While the city was bound to make compensation for that which was actually taken, it cannot be required to compensate the defendant for obeying lawful regulations enacted for the safety of the lives and property of the people.” Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. v. Chicago, supra, p. 255 (17 S. Ct. 592).

See, also, Cincinnati, I. & W. Ry. v. Connersville, 218 U. S. 336, 343, 31 S. Ct. 93, 54 L. Ed. 1060, 20 Ann. Cas. 1206; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, 232 U. S. 430, 438, 34 S. Ct. 400, 58 L. Ed. 671. The acquisition by eminent domain of an easement for street purposes by a municipality is one thing. The power of the public to require, by subsequent proceedings, that its highways be made safe is another. As a general rule it is the duty of every railroad company to construct and maintain in good condition its crossings over highways, so far as the same can be done without interfering with the operation of the railway. The weight of authority is to the effect that the rule applies to crossings laid out after the construction of the railway as well as to those in existence at the time of its construction. Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) § 1570; (2d Ed.) § 1102. Appellants admit that no change or relocation of their tracks or any other structural changes will become necessary, nor, so far as can now be seen, will there be any difference whatever with respect to physical conditions at the point where Eighty-Ninth avenue crosses the railroad right of way until the street is actually opened and in use. When that time shall arrive the question of structural changes and the improvement of the highway will become an issue. The duty resting on the railroad companies to make the necessary changes and improvements does not arise because of the opening of the street, but because of the obligation imposed through the exercise by the city of the power to order the crossing improved whenever it becomes necessary for the protection of life and property.

We are aware that there has not been a uniformity of opinion in the decisions of the courts of the other states on the questions presented by this appeal. The conflicts appear, however, to be more shadowy than real, when it becomes apparent that they are mainly due to differences in the statutes of the various states. We are not disposed to be led into a critical analysis of the many decisions cited by opposing counsel, but, as the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R. v. Chicago, supra, determines so much of the controversy presented by this appeal, and as the question is one of first impression in this state, we feel it were well to refer to that case somewhat at length. The city of Chicago sought to open and widen a street by condemning certain parcels of land owned by individuals, and also certain parts of the right of way of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. In their verdict the jury fixed $1 as just compensation to the railroad company in respect to those parts of its right of way to be used for the purposes of the proposed street. On appeal the railroad company claimed that it was entitled, by reason of the opening of the street, to recover as compensation a sum equal to the difference between the value of the fee of the land sought to be crossed, without any restrictions on its right to use the land for any lawful purpose, and the value of the land burdened with a perpetual right in the public to use it for the purpose of a street, subject to the right of the railroad company to use it only for railroad tracks or any purpose for which it could be used without interfering with its use by the public. The Supreme Court of Illinois held (149 Ill. 457, 37 N. E. 78), that when the city, under the authority of law, extended the street across the railroad tracks or right of way, it did not prevent their use by the railroad company, and that the measure of compensation should be the amount of decrease in the value for railroad purposes caused by the use for purposes of a street, such use being exercised jointly with the use by the company. In other words, it held that the company should be compensated merely for the diminution in its right to use its tracks caused by the existence and use of the street. The judgment of the lower court was affirmed. On writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States the decision of the Illinois Supreme Court was held to be—"A correct interpretation of the local statute, and as indicating not only the interest acquired by the public through proceedings instituted for the extension of a street across the tracks and right of way of the railroad company, but also the extent to which the company was deprived, by the proceedings for condemnation, of any right in respect of the land. Such being the law of the state, it would necessarily follow that the jury, in ascertaining the amount of compensation, could not properly take as a basis of calculation the market value of the land as land. The land as such was not taken, the railroad company was not prevented from using it, and its use for all the purposes for which it was held by the railroad company was interfered with only so far as its exclusive enjoyment for purposes of railroad tracks was diminished in value by subjecting the land within the crossing to public use as a street."

Another contention advanced by the plaintiff in error in the Chicago Case was that, in arriving at the amount of damages, the trial court failed to take into consideration the fact that a railroad easement is not necessarily in perpetuity, and that in the event of the abandonment of its line the company would find itself deprived of its property without any compensation having been paid therefor. The United States Supreme Court held (page 249 [17 S. Ct. 581]), that the jury could not properly have taken into consideration the possibility that at some future time the company would put itself in the situation where, if no street crossed its right of way, it might sell its land for what it was worth as land freed from any public easement, for the reason that "such a possibility was too remote and contingent to have been taken into account." Another contention of the railroad company was that the land sought to be condemned was subject to sale by the railroad company for any lawful use; that, after being condemned for purposes of a public street, it could not be sold, as land held for private use could be sold in the market; consequently, its salable value, treating it as land simply, was practically destroyed by the opening of a public street across it. In answer, the court said (pages 250, 251 [17 S. Ct. 581]), that the railroad company must be deemed to have laid its tracks within the limits of the city subject to the condition, necessarily implied, that new streets might be opened and extended from time to time across its tracks as the public convenience required, and under such restrictions as might be prescribed by statute. The city did not propose to interfere in any degree with the enjoyment of the right of the company to use the land in question for tracks upon which to move its cars, otherwise than by opening a street across the tracks for public use. Consequently, it was not bound to obtain and pay for the land over which the street was opened, the only question of compensation to be determined being to what extent the use of the land for railroad tracks was unduly diminished by opening a public street across it.

[11] Appellants admit that if the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R. v. Chicago, supra, is applicable under the statutes and Constitution of this state, it sustains the contention of the city of Oakland and supports the judgment of the lower court. They contend, however, that the decision should be restricted in its effect to being merely an affirmation of the interpretation given the laws of Illinois by the Supreme Court of that state. In Illinois, a railroad company can acquire land, whether by voluntary purchase or otherwise, for railroad purposes as defined in its charter. It does not hold land, as does the ordinary power, with the right of using it for any purpose to which it may be adapted. 149 Ill. 457, 461, 37 N. E. 78. In this state there is no such restriction on the right of a railroad company. It may acquire the fee in land by direct purchase, although it may obtain only an easement for railroad purposes, if it resort to proceedings in eminent domain. Code Civ. Proc. § 1238; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 146 Cal. 290, 292, 79 P. 961, 70 L. R. A. 221, 106 Am. St. Rep. 36, 2 Ann. Cas. 962. But, whatever may be the nature of the interest of the railroad company in the land, in this state, the nature of the easement acquired by a municipality, in condemning a right of way for street purposes across the railroad tracks, as in the present case, is the same as in the state of Illinois. An easement only is taken in each case. Consequently, we find no difficulty in applying the reasoning of the Chicago Case to the situation presented here. Other courts have gone exhaustively into the subject and have reached the same conclusion. A most interesting discussion of the issues presented by this appeal and the cases bearing on the questions will be found in two notes to Grafton v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 16 N. D. 313, 113 N. W. 598, in 15 Ann. Cas. 10-13, and in 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1-15.

Appellants cite two decisions of the courts of this state which, they argue, lay down a rule of compensation differing from that we have followed in the present case: City of Los Angeles v. Zeller, 176 Cal. 194, 167 P. 849; Los Angeles v. Allen, 32 Cal. App. 553, 163 P. 697. In each of these cases, however, the court was careful to point out the well-recognized distinction between the absolute taking of a long, longitudinal strip of land used as a right of way by a railroad, and the situation presented by the opening of new streets, from time to time, across the tracks of the railroad company, as the public convenience requires, and under such restrictions as may be prescribed by statute. "The right to take longitudinally is very different from the mere right to cross, for in the one case the rights of the railway company are materially impaired, while in the other the taking is such that both uses can stand together." Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) § 1566; (2d Ed.) § 1098.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CITY OF LONG BEACH v. PAULI et al.
(L. A. 7975.)

Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1925.)

1. Eminent domain ☞47(5)—Power to open street across railroad held vested in municipality.

Under the Charter of City of Long Beach, art. 4, §§ 2, 12, 13, the power to open street under the provisions of Street Opening Act of 1903, across defendants' railroad, held vested in municipality, and provisions of Public Utilities Act are inapplicable.

2. Eminent domain ☞128(3)—Railroad held not entitled to compensation for structural changes by reason of opening of street across right of way.

Railroad company is not entitled to compensation for structural changes, made necessary by taking of an easement for opening and extension of street across its right of way, in proceeding under Street Opening Act of 1903.

3. Appeal and error ☞110—Order denying new trial not appealable.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended in 1915, orders denying new trial are not appealable, and an appeal from such an order will be dismissed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by the City of Long Beach against R. Pauli and others, under the Street Opening Act of 1903, to condemn certain land. From an insufficient judgment in their favor, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and C. W. Cornell, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bruce Mason, Geo. W. Trammell, Jr., Fred F. White, Chief Deputy City Atty., John K.

Hull, Geo. L. Hoodenpyl, and Burr A. Brown, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

Jess E. Stephens and Robert J. Stahl, both of Los Angeles, amici curiae.

WASTE, J. The city of Long Beach brought an action, under the provisions of the Street Opening Act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376), to open and extend Orizaba avenue across several parcels of land, one of them being the private right of way of the Pacific Electric Railway Company, on which there are constructed and in use five main line and spur tracks. The Pacific Electric Railway Company and the trust companies holding its mortgages, after alleging the value of the parcel of land sought to be condemned and the amount of damage caused by the severance, set up in their answer a claim to the cost of structural changes which would be made necessary by the opening and extension of the street across the railway right of way. An agreement was reached at the trial as to the amount of damages to be awarded for the easement for street purposes, but the defendants were not permitted to show the damages the railway company would sustain by reason of the necessary structural changes. The findings and interlocutory judgment of the court were that the defendants were entitled only to the amount agreed upon for land values, and nothing was allowed for structural changes. The railway company and its mortgage holders, after motion for a new trial made and denied, have appealed.

[1] In their amended answer, the appealing defendants interposed a plea to the jurisdiction of the superior court, on the ground that the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action is vested in the State Railroad Commission, under the provisions of the Public Utilities Act (St. 1915, p. 115), and that the action could not be prosecuted until after the permission of the commission to open the street had been obtained. The objection was withdrawn by them at the inception of the trial in the court below; but, at the time of the oral argument, the suggestion was made by some of the members of the court that, if the question of jurisdiction were actually involved, the withdrawal of the plea was aside the issue, for the reason that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of the parties. We are satisfied, however, that, under the provisions of the charter of the city of Long Beach, the power to open the street across the defendants' railroad and to acquire such interest in the land as was necessary for that purpose was vested in the municipality, and the provisions of the Public Utilities Act have no application to this case. Charter of the City of Long Beach, art. IV, §§ 2, 12, and 13 (Stats. 1921, p. 2057); City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., 173 Cal. 323, 326, 159 P. 1169; see, also, Civic Center Association v. Railroad Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 166 P. 351. The objection to the jurisdiction of the superior court was not well taken.

[2] The real issue of this appeal is presented by the contention of the appellants that the trial court erred in its refusal to allow any damages in the way of compensation for the structural changes which would be made necessary by the opening and extension of the street. This question was considered in connection with the appeal in City of Oakland, a Municipal Corporation, v. Mary S. Schenck, Defendant, and Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railway Co., Defendants and Appellants (S. F. No. 11165) 241 P. 545, argued and submitted with the appeal in this case. In the decision in that case, this day handed down, we hold that in this state a railroad company is not entitled to compensation for structural changes made necessary by the taking of an easement for the opening and extension of a street across its tracks and right of way.

[3] By the amendment of 1915 to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, appeals from orders denying a new trial were abolished. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 173, § 34. The appeal from the order in this case is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

BANCROFT WHITNEY CO. v. PAYNE,
County Auditor. (L. A. 8954.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1925.)

Courts ⇨ 42(5)—Ordinance of city council and resolution of board of supervisors held to have established municipal court for city.

Ordinance of city council of Los Angeles and resolution of the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, in view of St. 1925, p. 648, Const. art. 11, § 8½, article 6, § 1, as amended in 1924, and Los Angeles City Charter, §§ 35, 429, held to have established municipal court for city of Los Angeles.

In Bank.

Application for writ of mandate by the Bancroft Whitney Company against H. A. Payne, County Auditor of the County of Los Angeles. Writ granted.

Myron Westover, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Newby & Palmer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Jess E. Stephens and Chas. B. MacCoy, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent herein in his capacity as county auditor of the county of Los Angeles, commanding him to audit and approve the petitioner's claim and demand for a certain sum of money claimed to be due and payable to said petitioner as the purchase price of certain property sold and delivered to the county of Los Angeles pursuant to an order of the board of supervisors thereof, directing the purchasing agent of said county to procure and furnish certain sets of Deering's Codes of California for the use of the municipal court established by an ordinance of the city council of the city of Los Angeles, approved August 26, 1925, published September 2, 1925, and which became effective on October 2, 1925, and by virtue of which it was provided that said municipal court should begin to function on December 1, 1925. It is for the purchase of said property pursuant to said order for such purpose that the petitioner herein demands payment, and for which it seeks the issuance of the writ prayed for herein. It is stipulated by the parties hereto that the facts set forth in the petitioner's said application are true.

The sole question presented for our consideration in this proceeding is as to whether or not the city of Los Angeles has, by proper and legal procedure, established a municipal court in that city which can begin to function as such court on December 1, 1925. Section 8½ of article 11 of the state Constitution provides in part as follows:

It shall be competent for cities in their charters to provide:

"1. For the * * * establishment, constitution, regulation, government and jurisdiction of municipal courts and judges thereof, with such civil, criminal and magisterial jurisdiction as by law may be conferred upon inferior courts and judges thereof."

Section 1 of article 6 of said Constitution, as amended in 1924, provides in part as follows:

"The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, District Courts of Appeal, superior courts, such municipal courts as may be established in any city or city and county, and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county or city and county. [Amendment adopted November 4, 1924.]"

Section 13 of the same article reads as follows:

"The Legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior courts which may be established in pursuance of section 1 of this article, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the judges thereof."

The act of the Legislature of 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 648), provides in part as follows:

"Section 1. A municipal court is hereby authorized to be established for each chartered city or city and county of the state having a population of more than forty thousand inhabitants as ascertained by the census taken under the authority of the Congress of the United States last preceding the establishment of such court, whenever such city or city and county by its charter provides for the establishment of such court, or whenever a majority of the qualified electors of any such city or city and county voting upon the question of the establishment of such municipal court, vote in favor thereof.

"Section 2. Whenever the charter of a city or city and county, either as originally adopted or by amendment thereto, provides for the establishment of a municipal court, such court shall begin to function at the time fixed in the charter, or if no time is therein fixed then at such time as shall be fixed by an ordinance of the legislative body of such city or city and county."

Section 429 of the charter of the city of Los Angeles (Stats. 1925, p. 1151) contains a provision reading as follows:

"The city of Los Angeles may establish a municipal court when, and in such manner as may be, authorized by the Constitution or laws of the state of California."

On the 24th day of July, 1925, the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles duly adopted an ordinance, by the terms of which the boundaries of Los Angeles township were so changed that said township was, upon the taking effect of said ordinance, to be wholly within the boundaries of the city of Los Angeles. On the 26th day of August, 1925, the city council of the city of Los Angeles duly adopted an ordinance creating, constituting, and establishing a municipal court in the city of Los Angeles, which ordinance reads in part as follows:

"Section 1. That a municipal court in and for the city of Los Angeles is hereby created, constituted and established, under authority of, and in conformity with, the Constitution and laws of the state of California and the charter of said city.

"Sec. 2. That said municipal court shall begin to function on the 1st day of December, 1925, and shall have and exercise such jurisdiction and powers as are now, or hereafter may be, provided by law.

"Sec. 3. That until otherwise provided by law, the number of judges of said municipal court shall be twenty-four; and the qualifications of such judges, and the manner in which, the time at which, and the term for which, they shall be elected or appointed shall be as is now or hereafter may be, provided by law."

"Sec. 5. That the justices of the peace of the city of Los Angeles, and the justices of the peace of the townships of Los Angeles, and the clerks and other attachés of the courts of such justices of the peace shall become and act as the judges, clerks and attachés respectively of said municipal court from and after the time said municipal court shall begin to function in accordance with the provision of section 11 of article 6 of the Constitution of the state of California, as amended November 4, 1924."

By the terms of section 35 of article 3 of the Charter of the city of Los Angeles (Stats. 1925, p. 1044), the city council of the city of Los Angeles possess the following powers, viz.:

"Except as otherwise in this charter specifically provided, the council shall have full power to pass ordinances upon any subject of municipal control, or to carry into effect any of the powers of the city."

The foregoing provisions of the Constitution, and of the act of the Legislature giving effect to the same, and of the Los Angeles charter, and of the ordinance of the city council of said city, and of the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, providing the successive steps in the creation and establishment of municipal courts, have, in our opinion, the combined effect of creating, providing for, and establishing a municipal court in and for the city of Los Angeles which should begin to function as such upon December 1, 1925, with such officers as were duly qualified on that date to be and act as the judge and other officers thereof. This being so, we are further of the opinion that the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles had power under the charter of said county and under the provisions of general law to purchase and provide the proper appliances and equipment for the functioning of said court, among which might be included the requisite number of the published Codes of this state for the use of the judges and officers thereof. This latter proposition has not been questioned in this proceeding.

It is therefore ordered that a writ of mandate issue as prayed for herein.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 1500 v. RECLAMATION BOARD OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Sac. 3738.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1925.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1925.)

1. Levees and flood control ☞16—Reclamation board not entitled to set up amendment of plan after expenditures made by reclamation district as ground of refusing to pay for such expenditures.

Where reclamation district in constructing levees incurred expenditures for "bank protection" in conformity to existing plan approved by the reclamation board, held that such board could not, in purchasing levees as governing body of drainage district, deny compensation for such expenditures because subsequent amendments of plan eliminated such work.

2. Levees and flood control ☞16—Resolution of reclamation board held not limitation on its power in later contracting to purchase levees for drainage district.

Provision in resolution of reclamation board, approving plans of reclamation district in constructing levees, that expenses were to be borne by such district, held not to prevent board when contracting to purchase levees for drainage district, from including in purchase price expenditures for particular work, if it constituted "actual reasonable cost of construction."

3. Levees and flood control ☞16—Conclusion of reclamation board, expressed in contract purchasing levees for drainage district, as to actual reasonable cost of construction, held final, in absence of bad faith or abuse of discretion.

Reclamation board as governing body of drainage district in purchasing levees constructed by a reclamation district under St. 1913, p. 130, has a large measure of discretion in determining what expenditures come within meaning of phrase "actual reasonable cost of construction," and board's conclusion in agreeing to take over levees and pay stipulated sum as actual reasonable cost cannot be disturbed by the courts, in absence of want of good faith or abuse of discretion.

4. Levees and flood control ☞16—Whether interest incurred by reclamation district was part of actual reasonable cost of construction held question of fact for reclamation board purchasing levees for drainage district.

In view of Pol. Code, § 3395 et seq. held that question whether sums expended by reclamation district as interest on warrants issued by it in constructing levees were properly a part of actual reasonable cost of construction was question of fact for determination of reclamation board, contracting, as governing body of drainage district, to purchase such levees.

5. Interest ☞13—Provisions as to payment of interest for forbearance in payment of debts inapplicable to state agencies regulated by statutes.

Civ. Code, § 1915 et seq. relating to payments of interest for detention or forbearance in payment of liquidated sums of money has no application to state agencies or political subdivisions, liabilities of which are regulated by statutes.

6. Drains ☞19—Reclamation board without authority to authorize payment of interest on obligations of drainage districts unless warrants bearing interest have been issued.

The reclamation board, purchasing levees constructed by reclamation district as governing body of drainage district, has no authority to provide for or permit payment of interest on obligations of drainage district until such time as warrants bearing interest as provided therein have been actually issued in payment of such obligations.

Application for writ of mandate by Reclamation District No. 1500, to be directed to the Reclamation Board of the State of California and another, to compel respondents to allow and pay certain moneys due petitioner, for construction of certain levees. Writ granted.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Stephen W. Downey, of Sacramento, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This application is for a writ of mandate, whereby the petitioner seeks to have the respondents commanded to allow and provide for the payment of certain sums of money alleged to be due from the respondent Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district to the petitioner, arising out of the construction of certain levees constituting a portion of the Sutter-Butte by-pass system of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District, and the purchase by the latter thereof from said petitioner. The original application contained four counts. By the first of these the applicant sought to have the respondents directed to allow and order paid the sum of $1,876,556.66, being a balance alleged to remain due and payable upon a certain contract made and entered into between the said applicant and the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district upon the purchase price of said levees as provided for therein; said contract being known and designated as contract A. By the second count the applicant sought a like writ requiring the respondent to allow and order paid the sum of $858,665.42, alleged to be due and payable upon a certain contract made and entered into between said applicant and said drainage district, known and designated as contract B. By the third count the applicant sought to have the respondents directed to allow and order paid the sum of $312,962.19; the same being the amount of interest alleged to be due as of the date of October 10, 1924, upon the said balance of the purchase price of said levees as set forth in the first count of said application. By the fourth count the applicant sought to have the respondents directed to allow and order paid the sum of $95,470.40, alleged to be due and payable as interest upon the principal sum of $1,000,000, which was paid to said applicant according to the averments of the first count. These several counts in the applicant's original and amended petition, with the responses made thereto, will be treated in the order of their presentation.

The facts out of which these several claims are alleged to have arisen are quite fully set forth in the decision of this court in the case of Reclamation District No. 1500 v. Riley, etc., 192 Cal. 147, 218 P. 762, and hence will require but brief reference and review in this opinion. By its said decision in Reclamation District No. 1500 v. Riley, etc., supra, this court held that the contract made and entered into between reclamation district No. 1500 and Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district for the purchase of the levees of the former, which contract is known and designated in the first count of the original application herein as contract A, was a valid and existing agreement between the parties thereto, and accordingly ordered a writ of mandate to issue commanding the immediate payment of the sum of $1,000,000 then due and payable by the terms of said contract by the issuance of warrants against assessment No. 6 of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district for said sum. According to the averments of the application herein, the mandate of this court in the above proceeding was obeyed, and the warrants called for therein were issued on October 3, 1923. By the terms of said contract A it was provided that the purchase price of said levees should be the principal sum of $2,876,556.66, "which the reclamation board fixed and determined as the actual reasonable cost of said levees * * * without computing interest thereon, the amount of interest to be hereafter considered and fixed by the said drainage district." By the terms of the first count of the original application herein the balance remaining due upon the principal sum of said purchase price was averred to be the sum of $1,876,556.66.

In their response to the said first count of their original application, the respondents, while admitting the making of said contract A, averred that by a mutual mistake of the parties thereto the principal sum of the purchase price of said levees was stated to be the sum of $2,876,556.66, whereas it should have been stated to be $2,844,315.57, a difference of $18,725.34. The respondents further averred that, in arriving at the total principal sum which should represent the "actual reasonable cost" of the construction of said levees, the reclamation board, acting for said drainage district, included therein certain items which formed no proper part of the cost of construction thereof, and that as to these items the said reclamation board exceeded its statutory power in the inclusion of the same in the total principal sum agreed to be paid as the purchase price of said levees. The respondents made certain other averments which, in addition to those above referred to, presented disputed issues of fact, in consequence whereof this court upon the first hearing upon said application had on November 24, 1924, referred the proceeding to Hon. Peter J. Shields, judge of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Sacramento, to take testimony and report the same and his findings thereon to this court. By said order, which was made and entered by consent, it was further provided that, since the answer of the respondents admitted that there was at least an additional $1,000,000 due and owing to the petitioner upon said contract A, it was therefore ordered that said sum be applied thereon by warrant to be issued therefor, and, when issued, to be credited upon the demand set forth in the first count of said application. It was further provided in said order that a supplemental petition should be filed by the petitioner setting forth the substance of said order, and that said order was made and was to be complied with without prejudice to the rights and claims of either of the parties to this proceeding as set forth in their respective pleadings, or to the right of the court to fully hear and determine all of the matters and issues presented therein. In compliance with said order, the said sum of $1,000,000 was duly applied upon the purchase price of said levees as provided for in said contract A; and also in pursuance thereof a hearing was duly had before said referee. Pending said hearing and prior to the conclusion thereof and filing of the report and findings of said referee, the parties hereto, on March 3, 1925, appeared in open court, and the petitioner therein conceding that, owing to a mutual mistake the purchase price of said levees as named in said contract A should be the sum of $2,844,315.57 instead of the sum of $2,876,556.66 as stated therein, and that there should be a reduction from said latter amount to the extent of $32,241.09; and, it further appearing from the evidence already taken before said referee "that the total amount of the items contested by respondent upon contract A do not exceed the sum of $441,957.65, being $383,408.77 for bank protection, and $58,548.88 for financing the Ajax Dredging Company contract, a total of $441,957.65, and that, in addition to the allowance of $1,000,000, allowed by this court by its order dated November 24, 1924, and paid by warrant, it was suggested on the part of the petitioner there might be allowed an additional sum of $402,357.92, being the amount named in contract A, less $32,241.09 deducted on account of mutual mistake, less $2,000,000 heretofore paid by warrants and less $441,957.65, being contested by respondent upon said contract A," and that an order in accordance with the foregoing conceded facts might be made; and, there being no objection on the part of the respondents to said order, it was thereupon made in conformity therewith, and the said respondents were thereby ordered to allow and issue warrants for the payment of the sums thus conceded to be due and payable upon said contract A without prejudice to the rights and claims of either of the parties hereto as to any balance remaining due or payable upon said contract A or of the court to hear and determine the same.

Thereafter and on May 6, 1925, the petitioner herein, pursuant to the order of this court directing the filing of a supplemental petition herein, filed its amended and supplemental petition wherein it set forth the substance of the two orders of this court above referred to and the fact that the same had been complied with, and further alleging that, as a result of the making of said orders and of the compliance therewith, there remained but two contested items under the first count in its said petition to be disposed of by this court, to wit, the sum of $380,408.77 alleged by said petition to be properly embraced within the terms and amount provided in said contract A as part of the purchase price of said levees, expended by the petitioner for "bank protection," and the further sum of $58,548.88, also recoverable under said contract A as expended by petitioner "for financing the Ajax Dredging Company contract," and for the allowance and payment of which two said sums the petitioner still contended a writ of mandate should issue. To this amended and supplemental petition the respondent presented and filed an answer admitting those portions thereof which purported to set forth the substance of the prior orders of this court and the compliance therewith, but denying liability upon the remaining two items alleged to be covered by said contract A. The report and findings of the referee upon the hearing had before him were presented and filed on April 28, 1925.

As to the two remaining items above referred to as embraced within the terms and amounts due and allowable under said contract A, the report and findings of the referee were, in substance, as follows: The terms "bank protection" embraced such work done in the course of construction of the sloping banks of the levees within reclamation district No. 1500 as consisted in the planting of such willows and other vegetation along the bases and sides of said levees as would conduce by their rootage and growth to solidify and thus protect the same from the disintegrating action of the waves and currents of the passing or impinging waters, and also of the building of pile and timber bulkheads to break the effect of wave action and of cobble revetment of the levee slopes at places for the same purpose. As to the cost and details of such work, the report of the referee shows that it was provided in the amended plans and estimates of Sutter-Butte by-pass project assessment No. 6 that such protection against the waves and currents of the stream should be provided along that portion of the levees contemplated by such plans and estimates and lying within reclamation district No. 1500, and that the estimated cost thereof for the east levee of said reclamation district which constituted the west levee of Sutter by-pass was the sum of $198,900, and of such work upon the easterly end of the north levee of said district, which constituted the south levee of Tisdale by-pass, was the sum of $8,670, making a total estimated cost of such work of bank protection upon the east and north levees of said reclamation district No. 1500 the sum of $207,570. When reclamation district No. 1500 came to plan, estimate, and perform this work of bank protection upon its said levees in course of construction, its estimate of the cost of such work upon its said east levee was $223,775 and its said plans therefor were duly reported to and approved by the state reclamation board. No amount was at that time estimated or approved for bank protection upon said north levee. By a subsequent amendment of the plans of Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6, made after the foregoing work of bank protection had been completed by reclamation district No. 1500, but before the purchase of its said levees by virtue of contract A, the foregoing items referring to bank protection were omitted from said plans and estimates. The referee, however, finds that the bank protection work which was actually done by reclamation district No. 1500 was desirable for the protection of said levees in order to prevent their destruction by the beating of water against them, and was done in accordance with the highest engineering skill and advice, and that the total amount expended by said reclamation district therefor was the sum of $383,408.77, which gross sum embraced an item of cost for bank protection of a portion of the south levee of Tisdale by-pass, amounting to $129,448 in excess of the amount originally provided for this particular work in the original plans and estimates of Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6. The gross sum above given also included the sum of $115,457.30 expended by reclamation district No. 1500 for work done in Tisdale by-pass channel which was never included in either the original or amended plans and estimates of Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6, but which was also done to protect the Tisdale by-pass levee from destruction and was done with the highest engineering skill and advice.

All of the foregoing work of bank protection was reported to and was under consideration by the reclamation board when in the year 1919 it was considering the purchase from reclamation district No. 1500 of its levee system, which purchase was in the course of consummation through the execution of contract A; and, as a result of such consideration by the auditors and engineers of said reclamation board, a resolution was duly adopted by said board approving the plans and work of reclamation district No. 1500 with regard to bank protection, and the sum allowed therefor was then fixed at a total of $383,408.77, and was included within the terms of said contract A as a part of the reasonable cost of the construction of said levees, and as the principal sum actually expended by said reclamation district No. 1500 for such work in warrants issued therefor without calculating interest upon such warrants. The respondents challenge the right of the petitioner to have these items for bank protection allowed and ordered paid upon grounds hereinafter to be stated and commented upon.

As to the amount claimed by the petitioner upon the item embraced in contract A, designated as Ajax Dredging Company Contract, the referee's report explains said item, in substance, as follows: In the year 1918 reclamation district No. 1500 entered into a contract with Ajax Dredging Company for the construction of a certain portion of its levees in accordance with the plans or reclamation approved by the reclamation board. By the terms of said contract the district was to pay the contractor the cost of the agreed work plus 12½ per cent. and was to make such payments monthly as the work proceeded; and the contract further provided that, if such payments were made in warrants issued to the contractor, the district was to make some arrangement by which said contractor should receive cash on account of these monthly payments. The district had at said time no cash with which to pay warrants, and it therefore seemed to be necessary to the progress of said work that the district should, as it did, make arrangements for the discounting of its said warrants at the rate of 11.11 per cent. This resulted in an expenditure on account of the said percentage of profit to the contractor above cost of $58,679.60, and of a further expenditure on account of said discounts of the sum of $58,548.88, both of which said amounts were actually expended by said reclamation district No. 1500 during the course of the fulfillment of its said contract with the Ajax Dredging Company for the construction of said levees. Both of these foregoing amounts were included within the terms of contract A, after the bases therefor had been fully examined into by the officers and agents of the reclamation board. The respondents challenge the validity of the allowance only of the discounts in said contract A, and that only upon the ground that discounts of this character constituted no part of the cost of construction of the levees, and hence that the reclamation board had no power to allow or contract to pay the same.

[1, 2] Dealing first with the objections which the respondents urge against the validity of the claims of the petitioner for the items embraced within the total sum provided in contract A to be allowed for bank protection, we find that said objections differ as to each of the said items included within said total sum. As to the item of $138,509.47, which represents work done by reclamation district No. 1500 upon its levees at a time when the doing of such work was included within the details of the original plan of the reclamation board upon the basis of which the assessment of Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 was to be predicated, it is urged by respondents that the subsequent amendment of said plan by the reclamation board must be given the effect of eliminating this class of work from inclusion in the cost of construction of levees to be paid for out of the funds to be raised by said assessment. We are not disposed to look with favor upon this contention as to this particular item, for the reason that it is conceded that at the time said reclamation district No. 1500 actually made this expenditure in the course of the construction of its said levees it was conforming to the then existing plan approved by said reclamation board, and hence that the latter board ought not to be allowed by any changes in its original plan to work an injury to the petitioner which had proceeded in good faith to do a particular and necessary kind of constructive work upon its levees in conformity with the then existing plan and purpose of said reclamation board. The objection which the respondents urge to the validity of the item of $129,448, part of the sum total allowed for bank protection, is that the work for which said sum was agreed to be paid in contract A was never wholly included within the original plan of the reclamation board for the work to be done upon the south levee of the Tisdale by-pass, but only a small portion thereof, and hence as to such excess it cannot be legally allowed. As to the item of $115,451.30 constituting the balance of said total sum allocated in said contract A to bank protection, the objection of the respondents is that the particular work upon the Tisdale by-pass channel for which said charge is made was done under the express stipulation embodied in the order of the reclamation board dated September 16, 1919, approving the plans of said reclamation district No. 1500 for the doing of said work, wherein it was provided that "all of the expenses of said work were to be borne by the district." It is to be noted, however, in respect to this particular objection to this item, that the resolution of said reclamation board above referred to antedated contract A nearly three years, and that the same was therefore passed and adopted at a time when no contract existed for the purchase of said levees by the drainage district from reclamation district No. 1500, and when the latter was proceeding to do its construction work as an independent entity, operating in co-ordination with the general plans and purposes of the drainage district, and its governing body, the reclamation board, but bearing for the time being the whole expense and burden of levee and channel construction. Viewed in this light, the provision in the resolution of the reclamation board in the year 1919 cannot be held to be a limitation upon its power by later contract with the petitioner to agree to include in the purchase price of said levees the amount thus early expended by the latter for channel construction and covered by the aforesaid item of expense, provided always that said particular work comes fairly within the meaning of the phrase "actual reasonable cost of construction."

[3] We are thus brought to a consideration of the controlling question underlying the allowance or disallowance of these several items embraced within the sum total agreed to be allowed and paid for bank protection, and also agreed to be allowed on account of the Ajax Dredging Company contract, by the terms and agreements embraced in contract A. It is the question of the power of the reclamation board as the governing body of Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district to enter into contract A and to bind said drainage district to each and all of the terms of said contract. In its decision of the case of Reclamation District No. 1500 v. Riley, etc., 192 Cal. 147, 218 P. 762, this court had occasion to deal with the powers of said reclamation board with respect to the work of reclamation, flood control, and levee construction within Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 in general, and also with reference to contract A in particular. It was our conclusion, expressed therein, after a careful review of the history and legislation affecting the vast problem of reclamation and flood control in that region, that the reclamation board, which was and is the governing body of Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, was empowered by the Legislature to employ three methods for carrying the twofold purpose for which said drainage district has been constituted into effect. The first of these was by direct action of the reclamation board in making contracts for the doing of the work of building levees, creating by-pass channels, and generally subserving the objects of reclamation and flood control; second, by providing for the organization and functioning of subsidiary reclamation districts within particular areas of the general district, with power to operate in the construction of portions of the work to be done within such areas under the general plan and supervision of the reclamation board, and receive compensation therefor by the presentation and allowance of claims for the cost of such construction by the reclamation board; third, by permitting such reclamation districts operating in specific areas to proceed with such work as though they were measurably independent entities, subject, however, to the general regulations of the statutes governing the methods of doing such work, and, when such work was so done or in the course of being done, the result thereof in the form of levees, channels, rights of way, etc., might, by said reclamation district so undertaking the same, be transferred to the general drainage district under contracts which should provide for taking over such construction work and all rights and values acquired in the course of prosecuting the same upon payment by the general drainage district of the "actual reasonable cost of construction." In that connection this court said:

"It was evidently not the intention of the Legislature to vest in the reclamation board the sole power of carrying out the plan in detail, for it provided that any reclamation district, levee district, drainage district, or municipal corporation should have the right to acquire rights of way, or other easements, and to construct levees, cuts, canals, or gates, subject, of course, to the approval of the plans by the reclamation board, which works might be conveyed to the drainage district upon compensation being made of the actual reasonable cost. In other words, it was contemplated that the different owners and agencies interested in flood control and reclamation of the lands should work in conjunction with the drainage district; the drainage district supplementing the work of the other agencies whenever necessary or desirable for the carrying out of the general plan. Stats. 1913, § 18, p. 275." In re Sutter-Butte By-Pass Assessment No. 6, etc., 191 Cal. 650, 658, 218 P. 27, 30.

It was under the third of these methods that reclamation district No. 1500 proceeded to function by virtue of an act of the Legislature creating such reclamation district and defining its powers. Stats. 1913, p. 130. Having done so, and having by so doing reached the point in the course of completion of its construction work when it could enter into a contract with the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district through its governing body, the reclamation board, for the taking over of the results of its operation, it became the duty of the reclamation board to investigate and determine as to what had been the actual reasonable cost of such construction work in order to arrive at the basis of compensation which should form the purchase price of the values thus to be taken over. Conceding, as is done in this case, that the work thus far done by the reclamation district had in all respects been legally, properly, and skillfully performed, the duty of determining the "actual reasonable cost" thereof involved of necessity many details in the course of such construction, and which would enter more or less intimately or necessarily into the outlay for such construction work; and, this being so, the performance of its duty by the reclamation board in the foregoing respect would necessarily involve a large measure of discretion in order to determine just what items of expenditure in the long and involved course of such constructive work were or were not within the range of meaning to be given to the clause in the statute, "actual reasonable cost of construction." The exigencies of each particular case and class of constructive work would have to be considered; as, for example, whether "bank protection" was required to be done in this or that reclamation district in order to protect and preserve the levees from the action of the stream; or, to take another example which might well arise out of the fact that reclamation districts undertaking to do construction work within their area and under the statute have at the outset no funds on hand for the prosecution of work which insistently must be begun and completed and which must in one form or another be paid for as the work proceeds in order that it may proceed at all, the expedients to which the particular district undertaking such work in advance of the collection of the moneys by assessment or otherwise, which was ultimately to provide the means of payment therefor, might be driven, such as the discount of its warrants, are matters which from the peculiar nature of the case the reclamation board must consider in applying to the situation the provision as to "actual reasonable cost of construction."

It was surely not the intent of the lawmakers, in attempting to deal with the complicated problem of reclamation and flood control within the region affected by the overflow of our great central rivers, and in committing to specially formed reclamation districts within such region the work of construction of levees, by-passes, channels, etc., to so limit their powers in performing such work, and also the powers of the reclamation board in taking over the work which such districts had struggled to skillfully and properly perform, to hamper these respective public agencies as to either the performance of the work or as to the reasonable and adequate payment of the cost thereof when so far performed as to be ready to be turned over to the general drainage district under such agreements as are to be found embodied in contract A. In order to prevent such consequences, we are of the opinion that it was the intent of the Legislature to repose in the reclamation board the power and discretion of determining what particular items of expenditure in the course of construction came fairly within the meaning of the phrase "actual reasonable cost of construction," and that the determination of said board upon that subject is final, in the absence of any showing of want of good faith or of abuse of such discretion; and hence that The conclusion of said board thereon when expressed in their agreement to take over said work and to pay a stipulated sum as the actual reasonable cost thereof is not to be disturbed by us herein. Carmichael v. Riley, 56 Cal. App. 409, 413, 205 P. 478, and cases cited. In respect to the suggestion made by respondents that certain portions of the work of "bank protection" were not within the terms or scope of the original or amended plan of the drainage district upon the basis of which its assessment of the lands within the entire district for the provision of funds for the ultimate payment of all construction work was predicated, we do not regard this fact as having any particular significance, since whatever the original plans of the drainage district may have been, they were in the nature of things tentative and in a large degree formative, and hence subject to change as the work of reclamation and flood control developed, and were not intended to present any hard and fast rule which should operate to hamper the powers of the reclamation board in either changing from time to time its original plans for flood control or in finally determining to take over work which individual districts had undertaken to do, and in so doing to determine what particular items of expenditure in the course of doing such work should be included in the "actual reasonable cost of construction." We therefore arrive at the conclusion that, as to the remaining items included within the terms of contract A and going to make up the total sum provided therein to be allowed and paid by warrants duly issued by the reclamation board, the petitioner is entitled to its writ.

[4] The second count in the petitioner's application for a writ of mandate herein involves the question as to the effect to be given to another contract between the parties to this proceeding, known and designated as contract B. Under the express terms of contract A, above considered, after providing for the allowance and payment of the sum named therein as the principal sum due and payable as the actual reasonable cost of the said levees and rights of way transferred thereby, it was further provided "that the above-mentioned amounts or payments do not include in any way interest charges that may have accrued upon any payment or expenditures made for the cost of construction of these levees and rights of way by said reclamation district at any time and that said drainage district reserves unto itself the right to consider and act upon any claim which may in the future be presented by said reclamation district for such interest and other charges, and said reclamation district reserves unto itself all its claim and demand for such interest and other charges, and enters into this contract without prejudice to said claim and demand for such interest and other charges to be hereafter presented." Thereafter, and on November 9, 1922, that certain agreement known and designated as contract B was entered into between the parties hereto, wherein, after referring to the foregoing resolution in contract A, and after reciting that the reclamation board had computed the amount of interest referred to in said former agreement, and had found the same to amount to $858,665.42, it was agreed that the drainage district should pay said sum as interest upon the principal amount expended for said levees and rights of way as of the date of May 22, 1922. It is for the enforcement of this agreement that the petitioner has included the second count in its said application, and it therein alleges that the petitioner, in seeking the issuance of said writ, does not claim interest as such on any investment or by way of profit, but seeks reimbursement only for such payments and outlays as were actually and compulsorily made by it under the law requiring it to pay interest on its warrants issued for and during the construction of its said levees, and that the sum set forth and agreed to be paid in said contract B is wholly made up of such necessary outlay. The answer of the respondents to the second count of said application put in issue the allegations of the petitioner in the foregoing regard, and hence upon the first hearing before this court this disputed matter was also referred to the referee for his report and findings thereon. According to the report and findings of said referee, "the amount stipulated to be paid in contract B, to wit, $858,665.42 is the interest paid out by reclamation district No. 1500 upon its warrants issued in payment of the items and each of the items included in contract A from the date of the issuance of said warrants to and including May 22, 1922."

It thus appears that the recitals of contract B as to the correctness of the amount agreed to be paid thereby and as to what said amount represents, and the report and findings of the referee, are in accord and must therefore be taken to be true. It is, however, the contention of the respondents that the question as to whether interest upon warrants issued by the reclamation district in the course of its construction work can be allowed as a part of the "actual reasonable cost of construction" is not a question of fact which the reclamation board had jurisdiction to determine and allow, but is a question of law for this court to determine, and that as a matter of law interest is not allowable as a part of cost of construction, and hence that contract B, in so far as it undertook to allow and provide for the payment of the same, is void. The respondents cite certain cases from other jurisdictions holding that in ordinary cases of contracts for construction of various structures interest has not been allowed as part of the cost of such construction. We have no quarrel with the conclusion arrived at in these cases, but we are of the opinion that these cases have no application to the unique situation presented in the instant proceeding. Under the several acts of the Legislature providing for the formation of a number of reclamation districts for the furtherance of the work of levee construction under the general plan of reclamation and flood control in accordance with which the reclamation board and the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district came into being, these several reclamation districts were organized for the purpose of promoting intensively the much needed work of flood control in that region. Under these statutes governing their organization and activities they were empowered to proceed at once with this construction work, but were provided with no immediate funds with which to so proceed; their only resource being that of levying assessments upon the lands within their respective districts pursuant to the provisions of chapter 1 of article 1 of title 8 of part 3 of the Political Code. Confronted with the actual and present necessity of engaging in the work of levee construction and of pushing said work to completion as rapidly as the exigencies of the situation would permit, and confronted also with the practical compulsion of financing said work as the same proceeded, there was no other recourse open to these districts than that of either using such credit as they might have in the way of borrowing money to pay for such work as it went on or of issuing interest-bearing warrants therefor against the fund to be secured at some future time through the levy and collection of assessments within their respective districts to be benefited by the prosecution and completion of the work of levee construction and of flood control. In such a situation we are of the opinion that the question as to whether the sums actually expended by these reclamation districts in dealing with an urgent situation through the issuance and eventual liquidation of interest-bearing warrants in payment for the work of levee construction were to be properly classed as costs of such construction was a question of fact for the determination of the reclamation board in concluding to take over such levees and other properties acquired in the course of such construction work. Having so determined and having fixed the amount of such expenditures in the way of interest at the sum named in contract B, and there being in view of the report and findings of the referee, no further question as to the correctness of said amount, it is our conclusion that a writ should issue requiring the respondents to allow and to issue a proper warrant for the payment of the same.

[5, 6] This brings us to a consideration of the three remaining counts in petitioner's application, and as to these a different situation arises. By the third count therein the petitioner seeks to have a writ of mandate issued to compel the allowance and payment of the sum of $312,982.19, being the amount of interest which the petitioner claims to be due and payable upon the balance of the purchase price of said levees as set forth in said contract A, and which accrued thereon between May 22, 1922, the date of said contract A, and the 10th day of October, 1924, and also for such further sum as has accrued thereon since said last-named date. By the fourth count in its said application the petitioner seeks to have a like writ issued to compel the allowance and payment of the sum of $95,470.40, claimed to have accrued as interest upon the sum of the $1,000,000 which was paid to the petitioner by warrants issued and registered on October 3, 1923, in accordance with the terms and agreements of said contract A which was made and entered into on May 22, 1922, and by which it was provided that said sum of $1,000,000 should be immediately allowed and paid by the issuance of such warrants therefor. By the fifth count to its said application, added by its amended and supplemental application, the petitioner seeks to have a like writ issued to compel the allowance and payment of the sum of $180,319.73, claimed to be due and payable as interest upon the sum of $858,665.42 agreed to be allowed and paid by the terms and agreements of contract B, said interest being computed thereon from May 22, 1922, to May 22, 1925, together with such further sum as may be found to be due and payable thereon after said last-named date and up to the time of the issuance of said writ. It is to be observed that these three last counts in the petitioner's original and amended applications relate to several sums of money which are claimed as accrued interest upon certain principal sums of money which the respondents agreed to allow and issue warrants for the payment of, by, and in contracts A and B, but for portions of which the issuance of interest-bearing warrants was for some time delayed, and for other portions of which no warrants have as yet been issued. The petitioner urges, at considerable length, and with much apparent show of fairness, that the petitioner is entitled to receive these several allowances of interest upon said principal sums heretofore in said two contracts agreed upon, for the reason that the principal sums upon which it is claimed such interest is due are ultimately to be payable out of the assessment (or the bonds issued in lieu thereof) which has been levied upon the property owners of the entire drainage district of which the land lying within petitioner's reclamation district is a part, and that, since such assessment, or bonds, is presently drawing interest which the landowners within petitioner's district will eventually have to pay.

they should presently be allowed interest upon the several principal sums which the said drainage district has already agreed to pay petitioner on their account, otherwise the interest which these landowners will eventually have to pay upon their assessment or upon the bonds issued or to be issued in lieu thereof will have eaten up the principal sums now and for some time past due and payable to the petitioner on their account. To these equitable considerations the respondents make an equally long and learned reply in the endeavor to show that these matters will eventually work out the equities which the petitioner now invokes. It seems to our minds, however, that these arguments pro and con are largely speculative, and that the proposition thus presented is one which it is not our province at this time to attempt to solve, and that there is a more direct answer to the petitioner's present contention. It is this, the petitioner insists upon the application of the rule laid down in sections 1915 et seq. of the Civil Code, relating to the payment of interest for the detention or forbearance in the payment of liquidated sums of money. This rule, while doubtless applicable to ordinary debtors, has no application to state agencies or political subdivisions, the liabilities of which are entirely regulated by the statutes providings for their creation and the limitations of their powers. This question is practically set at rest by the decision of this court in the case of Engebretson v. City of San Diego, 185 Cal. 475, 197 P. 651, wherein the doctrine as laid down in Ruling Case Law (15 R. C. L. § 14, p. 17) in the following language was approved:

"It is well settled, both on principle and authority, that a state cannot be held to the payment of interest on its debts unless bound by an act of the Legislature or by a lawful contract of its executive officers made within the scope of their duly constituted authority. This principle applies to bonds, claims, judgments, and warrants. The theory upon which the rule is based is that, whenever interest is allowed either by statute or by common law, except in cases where there has been a contract to pay interest, it is allowed for delay or default of the debtor. But delay or default cannot be attributed to the government. It is presumed to be always ready to pay what it owes. The apparently favored position of the government in this respect has been declared to be demanded by public policy."

The court further pointed out that in the case of Savings, etc., Soc. v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 356, 363, 63 P. 665, it was held that sections 1915 et seq. of the Civil Code do not apply to the state or any of its subdivisions, citing abundant additional authority in support of such conclusion. In the more recent case of McNutt v. Los Angeles, 187 Cal. 245, 259, 201 P. 592, the same principle is recognized by the court in stating that:

"As against the state or a municipality thereof, interest cannot be recovered except under special statutory authorization."

We have examined the various statutes and the amendments thereto which have been adopted since the original act of 1911 providing for the creation, powers, and functions of the reclamation board, and we nowhere find any provision therein providing for or permitting the payment of interest upon the obligations of the drainage district of which it is the governing body until such time as warrants bearing interest as provided therein have been actually issued in payment of such obligations. In so far as such warrants have already been issued for the payment of the obligations of said drainage district, recognized and agreed to be paid by virtue of contracts A and B above referred to, the petitioner is receiving or is entitled to receive interest thereon, but, in so far as warrants have not as yet been issued by the respondents for the payment of such sums as are referred to in its application herein, and which form the basis of the third, fourth, and fifth counts in its original and amended applications herein, it is entitled to no present relief in the instant proceeding.

Let a writ issue in accordance with the conclusions arrived at in the foregoing decision.

STATE LAND SETTLEMENT BOARD v. HENDERSON et al. (S. F. 11579.)

(Supreme Court of California, Nov. 30, 1925.)

1. Taxation ⚡213—Land acquired under State Land Settlement Act held land belonging to the state and exempt from taxation; "belong to"; "owned by."

All lands opened for settlement on terms prescribed by the State Land Settlement Act, amended by St. 1923, p. 930, and St. 1925, p. 358, and lands purchased by state land settlement board for purpose of carrying out objects of act belong to the state within Const. art. 13, § 1, and Pol. Code § 3607, and are exempt from taxation; "belong to" being equivalent to "owned by."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Belong—Belonging.]

2. Taxation ⚡213—Rule as to strict construction of provisions exempting property from taxation held inapplicable in determining whether state land taxable.

Rule that provisions exempting property from taxation are to be strictly construed has no application to question whether property acquired under State Land Settlement Act amended by St. 1923, p. 930, and St. 1925, p. 358, are exempt from taxation under Const. art. 13, § 1, as belonging to state.

3. Taxation — 213—Reversionary interest of state in public lands not taxable, because interest of private person therein taxable.

Though a private interest in or use of public lands is not exempt from taxation because interest of state is nontaxable, it does not follow that, because interest of private person in public lands is taxable, reversionary interest of state thereto is also taxable.

In Bank.

Petition for writ of mandate by the State Land Settlement Board, to be directed to F. R. Henderson and others, as members of and constituting the Board of Supervisors of the County of Merced, and another, commanding cancellation of certain assessment of taxes. Writ granted.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank English, Deputy Atty. Gen., for petitioner.

C. H. McCray and F. W. Henderson, both of Merced, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This action arises on a petition for a writ of mandate by the state land settlement board against the board of supervisors and the district attorney of the county of Merced, asking for a writ of mandate commanding said board of supervisors to have entered upon the minutes of its board an order directing the auditor of the county of Merced to cancel certain assessments of taxes levied against the state land settlement board for the fiscal year of 1924-1925, and likewise directing said respondents as members of and constituting said board of supervisors to direct the auditor of said county of Merced to cancel any other assessments which may have been levied by the assessor of said county upon any other property situate in said county of Merced and belonging to the state of California and held for and on its behalf by said state land settlement board as particularly described in said petition and to likewise command said board of supervisors to direct the auditor and recorder of said county of Merced to cancel any and all assessments of any of the property which may have been sold to the state because of the nonpayment by said state land settlement board of any taxes erroneously or illegally levied against said property and said state land settlement board; further that said writ of mandate do also command the district attorney of said county of Merced to give his written consent to the cancellation and correction (Pol. Code, § 3881) herein prayed for and for appropriate relief and costs of suit.

But one question is presented by this proceeding to wit whether the lands and property acquired and held by the state land settlement board on behalf of the state and which are needful or necessary to effect the purposes of said act (Stats. 1917, c. 755, p. 1566, amended Stats. 1923, c. 411, p. 930; Stats. 1925, c. 206, p. 358), are subject to taxation (Const. art. 13, § 1; Pol. Code, § 3607).

The first section of the act is declaratory of the legislative belief in the wholesomeness of the legislation it was undertaking. It is thus stated:

"The Legislature believes that land settlement is a problem of great importance to the welfare of all the people of the state of California and for that reason through this particular act endeavors to improve the general economic and social conditions of agricultural settlers within the state and of the people of the state in general."

By section 2, as amended in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 930, § 1), the object and scope of the act is thus stated:

"The object of this act is to provide employment and rural homes for soldiers, sailors, marines and others who have served with the armed forces of the United States in the European war, or other wars of the United States, including former American citizens who served in allied armies against the Central Powers and have been repatriated, and who have been honorably discharged, to promote closer agricultural settlement, to assist deserving and qualified persons to acquire small improved farms, to demonstrate the value of adequate capital and organized direction in subdividing and preparing agricultural land for settlement, and to provide homes for farm laborers. To carry out the objects herein stated there is hereby created a state land settlement board to consist of five members appointed by the governor to hold office for a term of four years and until their successors have been appointed and shall have qualified. * * *

By section 3, as amended in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 358, § 1), it is provided that the board shall constitute a body corporate, with the right on behalf of the state to hold property, receive and request donations, to sue and be sued, and all other rights provided by the Constitution and laws of the state of California, as belonging to bodies corporate, together with all rights and authority necessary for the proper carrying out of the provisions of the act.

Section 4, as amended in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 932, § 2), provides that the board may acquire on behalf of the state, by purchase, gift, or the exercise of the power of eminent domain, all land, water rights, and other property needed for the purposes of the act, and may take title in trust, and shall, without delay, improve, subdivide, and sell such land, water rights, and other property, with appurtenances and rights, to approved bona fide settlers. The powers with which the board is invested by the act are very broad and are too numerous to restate at large. We will therefore make reference to but a few of them. The board is given authority to set aside for town-site purposes suitable areas purchased under the provisions of the act and to subdivide and sell or lease said lands acquired by it for cash, or on terms, in lots of such size and with such restrictions as to resale as it shall deem best. It may dedicate to public use such areas as it may deem desirable for roads, schoolhouses, churches, or other public purposes. It is given authority to contract with owners of tracts of land large enough, in the opinion of the board, to provide homes for at least 100 settlers, such tracts to have a water supply sufficient to irrigate the same. Under such contracts the board may provide that it shall prepare plans for subdivision, improvement, and sale of the tract contracted for, and, in cases where the board is able to make arrangements satisfactory to it, it may undertake for the owners of the land the settlement and sale of the same under such terms and conditions as it may deem fit, provided said terms and conditions are, in a general way, similar to those as in said act provided. The board is given authority to call upon the University of California for assistance in making soil surveys and other investigations necessary to determine the feasibility of the soil for settlement and in fixing the sale price of land according to productiveness.

Said board is empowered to establish within California or outside the state "offices for meeting settlers and selling the land"; also to "arrange for land seekers' excursions within or without the state." In addition to the many enumerated powers conferred, or attempted to be conferred, upon the board, it is given:

"All additional power and authority the board may deem necessary to enable the board to co-ordinate existing colonizing activities so far as they relate to irrigable areas and to bring to new farming communities the benefit of an organized life. The board shall make such charges in connection with its work under such contracts as will be sufficient to meet all expenses, such charges to be paid out of the funds obtained from the sale of the land."

Section 5 provides for the procedure to be taken when, in the judgment of the board, private land should be purchased for settlement in furtherance of the purposes of the act. Before the purchase of any private land may be made, an inspector, approved by the board, must be appointed to inspect the land proposed to be purchased and report to the board as to the productiveness and the value of the same and its adaptability to intensive, closer settlement, including an appraisalment of the value of water rights and improvements thereon, and, if the board is satisfied as to the reasonableness of the seller's price, it shall submit its report and recommendations to the Governor, and, upon his approval, the board shall be authorized to make the purchase, provided that before the purchase is made the Attorney General shall approve the title of such land and any water right appurtenant thereto and the state water commission shall certify in writing as to the sufficiency of any water rights to be conveyed.

By section 10 it is provided:

That all sales and allotments of land made by the board to settlers under said act "shall be made under such terms and conditions as shall give to the board full control of any subdivisions thereof until all moneys advanced by the state for the purchase, improvement, or equipment of such subdivisions are fully repaid, together with interest thereon as herein provided."

Immediately upon taking possession of any land purchased by the board, and after deducting any areas to be set aside for town-sites or public purposes, the board shall subdivide said lands into areas suitable for farms and farm laborers' allotments, lay out, where necessary, roads, ditches, and drains for giving access to and insuring the proper cultivation of the several farms and allotments. Prior to disposing of any of said land to settlers, or at any time after such land has been disposed of, but not after the end of the fifth year from the commencement of the term of the settler's purchase contract, the board may prepare all or any part of such land for irrigation and cultivation; seed, plant, or fence such land, and cause dwelling houses and out buildings to be erected on any farm allotment, or make any other improvement necessary to render the allotment habitable and productive in advance of or after settlement, the cost to the board of such dwellings, buildings, and improvements not to exceed $1,500 on any one farm allotment; cause cottages to be erected on any farm laborer's allotment and provide a domestic water supply, the combined cost to the board of the cottage and water supply not to exceed $800 on any one farm laborer's allotment; make loans to approved settlers on the security of permanent improvements, stock and farm implements, and the total amount of any such loan, together with moneys spent by the board on improvements as above specified, not to exceed $3,000 on any one farm allotment, or $2,000 on any one farm laborer's allotment. Authority is granted to the board to operate and maintain any irrigation works constructed to conserve any lands purchased and sold under the provisions of the act. All moneys received in tolls and charges for the operation and maintenance of any works or for any water supplied therefrom shall be deposited in the land settlement fund created by the act and shall become available for the payment of any costs, expenses, or other charges authorized to be paid from said land settlement fund. After the purchase of land by the board, and before its disposal to approved bona fide applicants, the board shall have authority to lease such land or a part thereof on bonded or secured leases on such terms as it shall deem fit.

The act provides in detail for public notice to be given before any part of an area is thrown open for settlement, and the mode and amount of payment and such other particulars as the board may deem proper, and it shall have the power in its discretion to reject any and all applicants. The board may also sell at public auction, under such conditions of sale and notice thereof as the board may prescribe, any areas which it may determine are not suitable for farm or farm laborer's allotments. Any citizen of the United States, or any person who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, and who is not the holder of agricultural lands or of possessory rights thereto to the value of $15,000, and who, by his purchase, would not become the holder of agricultural land or of possessory rights thereto exceeding such value, and who is prepared to enter within 6 months upon active occupation of the land acquired, may apply for and become the purchaser of either a farm allotment or a farm laborer's allotment; not more than one allotment shall be sold to any one person.

The board may, in offering for sale farm or farm laborer's allotments, co-operate or contract with the duly authorized representatives of the United States government and other public corporations or agencies generally. It is authorized to perform all acts necessary to co-operate fully with the agencies of the United States engaged in work of similar character, and with similar boards and agencies of other states. In its co-operation with such representatives or agencies of the United States government, preference must be given to soldiers, sailors, marines, and others who have served with the armed forces of the United States, including former American citizens who served in allied armies against the Central Powers, and have been repatriated, and who have been honorably discharged. The board may give such preference to any of such citizens of California, who, as soldiers, sailors, marines, and others, have served with the armed forces of the United States as above described.

The selling prices of the several allotments into which the purchased land may be subdivided shall be fixed by the board in such amounts as are calculated to return to the state the original costs of the land, together with a sufficient sum added thereto to cover all expenses and costs of surveying, improving, subdividing and selling such lands, including the payment of interest, and all costs of engineering, superintendence, and administration, including the cost of operating any work built, directly chargeable to such land, and also the price of so much land as shall on subdivisions be used for roads and other purposes, and also such sum as shall be deemed necessary to meet unforeseen contingencies. The board may revise such prices in such a manner as to best protect the interest of the state, and may reoffer such allotments for sale at the revised prices so stated.

Every approved applicant shall enter into a contract of purchase with the board, which contract shall, among other things, provide that the purchaser shall pay as a cash deposit a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the sale price of the allotment and in addition not less than 10 per cent. of the cost of any improvement made thereon. The balance due on the land shall be paid in amortizing payments extending over a period to be fixed by the board, not exceeding 40 years, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, except as otherwise provided by the act. The amount due on improvements shall be paid in amortized payments extending over a period to fixed by the board, not exceeding 20 years, together with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. Provision for the repayment of loans made on live stock or implements is also made. If, after the expiration of 6 years from the opening date of any colonization project, it shall appear to the board that the contracts made with settlers shall work an undue hardship upon them, and the success of the project, and investment of state funds is thereby jeopardized, the board shall have authority with the consent of the settler to revise such existing land purchase contract by a reduction of not exceeding 30 per cent. in the sale price of the land and by a reduction in the rate of interest to be thereafter charged on the land purchased.

Every contract entered into between the board and an approved purchaser shall contain provisions that the purchaser shall cultivate the land in a manner to be approved by the board and shall keep in good order and repair all buildings, fences, and other permanent improvements situated on his allotment, reasonable wear and tear and damage by fire excepted. Each settler shall, if required, insure and keep insured against fire all buildings on his allotment, the policies therefor to be made out in favor of the board and to be in such amount or amounts and in such insurance companies as may be prescribed by the board.

In the event of the failure of a settler to comply with any of the terms of his contract of purchase and agreement with the board, the state and the board shall have the right at its option to cancel the said contract of purchase and agreement, and thereupon shall be released from all obligation in law or equity to convey the property, and the buyer shall forfeit all right thereto and all payments theretofore made shall be deemed to be rental paid for occupancy. The board may require the settler, as security and for its protection, to execute a mortgage or a deed of trust on the property purchased upon such terms as may appear just.

Actual residence on any allotment sold under the act shall commence within 6 months from the date of the approval of the application and shall continue for at least 8 months in each calendar year for at least 10 years from the date of approval of said application, unless prevented by illness or some other cause satisfactory to the board. By the amendment of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 83S), for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act, the sum of $1,000,000 was appropriated out of any money in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum of $1,000,000, it is calculated, shall be returned to the state within a period of 50 years from the date of said appropriation.

Other provisions of the act not essential to a consideration of the questions presented are omitted.

[1] We have quoted freely from the act, substantially adopting its language, for the reason that it aptly illustrates the completeness of the official control under which the colonization plan has been placed and shows that said lands are treated as state property. The purchase of all lands by the board is made subject to the approval of the Governor of the state and the title thereto must be approved by the Attorney General. The state water commission must also certify to the sufficiency of the water supply. Several public commissions and boards are given advisory powers in the promotion of the general plan. The control and operation of the plan is strictly under the direction of the state's legally constituted agencies. In this respect it does not differ from the many other public institutions or entities of the state which are controlled indirectly by the state through trustees or boards or commissions.

It will be also noted by an examination of the plan and scheme of the act that nothing is said nor is any provision made for the payment of taxes on land owned by the state and not under contracts of purchase. It is not likely that such an important item as the payment of taxes on lands owned by the state would have escaped the attention of the framers of the act in view of the very careful and thoughtful provisions made for the payment by the purchasers of all costs and expenses incidental to sales and for the repayment of all outlay or advancement of moneys made by the state in carrying out the provisions of the act, together with interest, which costs, expenses, and outlays of money are included in the purchase price, to the end that the state may be made whole in the transaction. The fact that taxes are not regarded as an element in computing the price to the purchasers gives support to the theory that it was not the intention of the framers of the act that land acquired and held by the state for the purposes of the act should be subject to taxation. We think that all lands held by the state and open for settlement upon the terms prescribed by the state land settlement act are lands which belong to the state and are exempt from taxation under the provisions of article 13, § 1, which provides:

"All property in the state except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law, or as hereinafter provided. * * * Property * * * such as may belong to the United States, this state, or to any county, city and county, or municipal corporation within this state shall be exempt from taxation. * * *

We are unable to perceive why, and no argument of sufficient strength has been made to convince us to the contrary, lands purchased by the board in compliance with the act should be in a different class, so far as ownership is concerned, than state school lands or other public lands which belong to the state and are open to settlement. The fact that the public lands in question were once held in private ownership cannot affect the public character that such lands take on after purchase by the state for public purposes. If this argument should obtain, none of the lands belonging to the state and devoted to public uses would be exempt from taxation. We have no doubt but that property acquired by the board for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the act belongs to the state within the intent and meaning of the constitutional provision which exempts property from taxation, and that such property is property of the state of California.

"The word 'belong' is applied alike and with the same force and meaning to the United States, this state, and to counties and municipalities, and it seems to us was employed to denote an unqualified ownership of the property, not an ownership subject to the condition that it was to be used exclusively for governmental purposes. Certainly it was not intended to attach any such condition to property belonging to the United States or this state, and how can we give it a different meaning as applied to counties and municipalities? 'The Constitution of a state derives its force and authority from the vote of the people adopting it. For that reason it is a general rule that in construing the provisions of a Constitution the words employed therein shall be given the meaning which they bear in ordinary use among the people. The natural and ordinary meaning of the words is to be accepted, except where a word is used the meaning whereof is established by statute or by judicial construction.' Burke v. Snively, 208 Ill. 328 [70 N. E. 327, 329]. All the dictionaries give to the word 'belong,' among other meanings, the definition: "To be the property of" (Webster, Century); "To be possessed by" (Worcester)." San Francisco v. McGovern, 28 Cal. App. 491, 152 P. 980. Other examples and illustrations of the meaning of the words "belonging to" are given to show that the words used in a Constitution are equivalent to "the property of." The words "belong to" are equivalent to the words "owned by." The primary meaning of the term is "to be the property of." It implies ownership. 7 C. J. 1039, and note. There is ample authority in this and other jurisdictions to sustain this construction. Many of the revenue acts of this state would have an uncertain meaning if we were to depart from the evident meaning of the word as used in the state Constitution. The Constitution places no limitation upon the use that the state shall make of its land. It is not, for the purposes of taxation, restricted to an exclusive use.

[2, 3] The rule that provisions exempting property from taxation are to be strictly construed has no application to this case. In Pasadena v. County of Los Angeles, 182 Cal. 171, 187 P. 418, speaking of the strict construction rule, it is said:

"That rule applies to exemptions of property held in private ownership. But, where the question is whether or not public property shall be taxed, the rule is that it is not to be taxed unless there is express authority therefor. An example of this is found in the decisions to the effect that property belonging to a city was not taxable under the Constitution of 1849, although there was no express exemption thereof in that Constitution. People v. Doe, 36 Cal. 220."

The parcels of land upon which the assessments are sought to be canceled are situate within the Delhi state land settlement and are numbered 256 and 433, respectively. Allotment No. 256 has been sold by the board and is subject to a contract of purchase made by it with one N. J. Garrison. "When an interest in land, whether freehold or for years, is severed from the public domain and put into private hands, the natural implication is that it goes there with the ordinary incidents of private property and therefore is subject to being taxed. * * * The principle that a possessory right in public land is private property, and that it may be assessed for purposes of taxation to the person in possession, although in point of law he may have no right as against the state or government owning the land, has long been settled in this state." San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. Los Angeles, 180 Cal. 18, 179 P. 393. A private interest in or use of public lands is not exempt from taxation because the interest of the state is nontaxable. It does not follow, however, that, because the interest of a private person in public lands is taxable, the reversionary interest of the state thereto is also taxable. San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. Los Angeles, supra.

The prayer of the petition is much broader in its requests for relief than the allegations of the petition would warrant us in granting, in that no assessments are specifically alleged to have been made against any property belonging to the state other than the two allotments described therein. Neither are any sales shown to have been made under void assessments. Our order cannot be made effective against illegal assessments or sales not alleged by petitioner to have been made. If such assessments have been made, they would fall within the rule herein announced.

Let a peremptory writ of mandamus issue directing the cancellation of the assessments of the two allotments of land described in the petition.

KENDALL v. BUNNELL. (Civ. 5257.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 23, 1925.)

1. Pleading $\S$ 251—Offered amendment to complaint pleading evidence and apparently irrelevant and disconnected matters held properly refused.

In suit to have patentee of public lands, under Act Cong. March 3, 1877, amended by Act Cong. March 3, 1891, and Act Cong. March 28, 1908, being U. S. Comp. St. § 4674 et seq., declared a trustee, offered amendment to complaint held properly refused, as pleading petitioner's evidence and apparently irrelevant and disconnected matters instead of ultimate facts.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1097(1)—Decision on first appeal becomes law of case when second trial develops no evidence substantially different from facts on former hearing.

Decision of appellate court on first appeal becomes law of case on second appeal, when second trial developed no evidence substantially different from facts on former hearing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Suit by Ramer O. Kendall against Schuyler U. Bunnell. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Haines & Haines, of San Diego, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. On March 3, 1877, an act was approved entitled, "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain states and territories." 19 Stat. 377 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4674 et seq.). On March 3, 1891, that act was amended. 26 Stat. 1096 (U. S. Comp. St.

§ 4677 et seq.). On March 28, 1908, the statute was further amended. 35 U. S. Stats. at Large, 52 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4681-4683). Under the latter statute (section 1 [U. S. Comp. St. § 4681]), it was provided that from March 28, 1908, the right to make entry under the provisions of the acts of 1877 and 1891 should be restricted to surveyed public lands of the character contemplated by said acts, and no such entries of unsurveyed lands should be allowed or made of record provided:

"That any individual qualified to make entry of desert lands under said acts who has, prior to survey, taken possession of a tract of unsurveyed desert land not exceeding in area 320 acres in compact form, and has reclaimed or has in good faith commenced the work of reclaiming the same, shall have the preference right to make entry of such tract under said acts, in conformity with the public land surveys, within ninety days after the filing of the approved plat of survey in the district land office."

Of the lands in controversy a survey was made in 1856. That survey was so defective that a resurvey was authorized by an act approved July 1, 1902. The resurvey was made, and a copy was filed in the land office at Los Angeles on February 23, 1909. Such proceedings were had that an application was made by Bunnell for a tract consisting of 320 acres. His application was accepted; it was approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; from that approval an appeal was taken to the Secretary of the Interior, and that officer, through one of his assistants, rendered an opinion favorable to Bunnell, and in accordance with that opinion a patent was issued to the applicant. Kendall, claiming to be possessed of a better title, commenced this action to obtain a judgment that Bunnell holds the legal title in trust for him. A trial was had in the superior court, and a judgment was ordered in behalf of Kendall. Bunnell took an appeal, and the judgment was reversed. Kendall v. Bunnell, 56 Cal. App. 112, 205 P. 78. An application was made to the Supreme Court to have the cause heard in that court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal, but the application was denied. After the remittitur went down a second trial was had. During those proceedings Kendall offered an amendment to his complaint; the offer was refused, and an exception was duly noted. A little testimony was offered, and thereupon counsel stipulated that the bill of exceptions prepared on the first appeal should be adopted as a part of the record. Thereafter judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, and from that judgment the plaintiff has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] In pleading his statutory right, among other things, the plaintiff alleged:

"That on March 4, 1908, plaintiff set 4x4 redwood posts at each of the corners of that part of said land above described which is claimed by the said defendant as hereinafter set forth, upon which posts were plain and conspicuous notices that he, the plaintiff, intended to reclaim said land; and said notices remained so posted for more than one year thereafter; that in the month of April or May, 1908, plaintiff commenced the work of reclamation of the said land now claimed by the defendant herein, and did thereon reclamation work of the value of $85; which work consisted of clearing and rough leveling, and the construction of borders in the east side of said tract of land; that between the 1st day of March, 1909, and the 21st day of said month, plaintiff caused 21 days' work with a two-horse team and Fresno scraper to be done on said land in clearing and rough leveling the same, which said work was of the value of $105."

The offered amendment was to insert immediately following $105:

"That in the month of August, 1908, plaintiff assisted in organizing and incorporating a company known as the High Land Construction Company for the purpose of bringing water to said land and other land, and expended for such purpose the sum of $25 in cash; the plaintiff was secretary of said company and devoted, as nearly as he can estimate, one month of his time to the work of said company for the purpose aforesaid."

Comparing the amendment with the statute it will be noted at once that the plaintiff was but offering to plead his evidence and apparently irrelevant and disconnected matters instead of ultimate facts. The trial court did not err in refusing to allow the amendment.

[2] The plaintiff took the stand and gave testimony. Among other things he testified regarding the incorporation of the High Land Construction Company, and of and concerning his activities in aiding in the incorporation of that company; that he paid out $25 in that behalf; that he devoted 30 days of work in that connection; but he did not testify that the High Land Construction Company or any other company as the lawful successor thereof ever put a drop of water on the lands in question, or ever constructed any ditches or water works. On cross-examination the witness stated that he gave testimony before the register and receiver of the United States Land Office on the hearing of Bunnell's application to make his desert-land entry. He further testified that on that hearing he gave certain testimony which was in substance the same as the testimony which we have quoted as having been given on the second trial. The defendant gave testimony to the effect that no company other than Imperial Water Company No. 2 ever constructed ditches to the land for the irrigation thereof or applied any water to the land. There is not a particle of evidence in the record that the plaintiff and his associates ever organized any other water company than the High Land Company, or that the Imperial Company is in any sense the successor in law of the High Land Company. Under the record before us the judgment in Kendall v. Bunell, supra, constitutes the law of the case. Nothing that developed on the second trial in legal effect tends to modify that judgment.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

A. Ruggles, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an action for damages for the alleged seizure and conversion by defendants of a certain quantity of tomatoes and a certain quantity of Egyptian corn.

The action is in conversion, and the complaint, among other facts therein stated, alleges:

"That at the time of the commencement of this action and for a long time prior thereto the plaintiff was the owner of and entitled to the possession of all the following described personal property, namely: 196,605 pounds of tomatoes and 102,040 pounds of Egyptian corn which were raised on plaintiff's ranch in said San Joaquin county in the year 1918.

"That on or about the — day of October, 1918, while plaintiff was so the owner of and entitled to the possession of all the aforesaid tomatoes and Egyptian corn, the defendants entered upon plaintiff's said premises and, without plaintiff's consent or knowledge, wrongfully and unlawfully seized, took, and carried away all of the aforesaid personal property and converted the same to their own use, whereby plaintiff was damaged by such unlawful taking and conversion on the part of said defendants in the sum of $4,772.15, which was the market value of said tomatoes and Egyptian corn at the time of said conversion."

The defendants were and are represented by different attorneys. The defendant corporation demurred to the complaint on the general ground and also on certain special grounds, among which was that of misjoinder of parties defendants, and that "several causes of action have been improperly united, or not separately stated." Section 430, subd. 5, Code Civ. Proc.

The defendant Powers demurred to the complaint on the general ground. The demurrer in each instance was disallowed, and within due time the defendants filed separate answers, in both of which the material allegations of the complaint were specifically denied. Each of the answers also set up several special defenses, which will hereinafter be noticed.

Upon the close of plaintiff's case, the defendants made separate motions for a nonsuit, the same were granted, and the action as to each of the defendants was dismissed. The cause is before us on appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment entered upon the orders granting said motions.

A case growing out of precisely the same transactions has previously been before, and decided by, this court; the judgment of nonsuit from which the appeal therein was prosecuted by the plaintiff there and here having been affirmed. Ramsey v. Cal. Pack. Corp. et al., 51 Cal. App. 517, 201 P. 481.

The facts of the transactions from which this action arose were gone into more extendedly or in greater detail at the trial of the

RAMSEY v. POWERS et al. (Civ. 1967.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 16, 1925.)

1. Judgment ⇨570(4)—Doctrine of res adjudicata as a plea in estoppel not available as to a judgment entered upon an order granting a nonsuit.

The doctrine of res adjudicata as a plea in estoppel is not available as to a judgment entered upon an order granting a nonsuit.

2. Chattel mortgages ⇨229(2)—Mortgagee alleging single act of conversion must prove single act done jointly by defendants.

In action by mortgagee against two defendants for conversion of corn and tomatoes, where complaint alleged a single trespass by joint act of defendants, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to prove that the taking of tomatoes and corn constituted a single act of trespass, done jointly and in concert by both defendants.

3. Action ⇨50(6)—Where complaint alleged single act of trespass by two defendants jointly, but evidence showed each defendant acted independently, there was misjoinder of causes of action and parties.

In an action by mortgagee against two defendants for alleged conversion of corn and tomatoes where complaint charged a single act done jointly by both defendants, but the evidence showed two independent transactions, carried out by persons acting independently, held there was a misjoinder of parties as well as causes of action.

4. Torts ⇨26(2)—Where evidence shows only one committed wrong, court should hold offending party and dismiss case as to other.

Where two parties are alleged to have jointly committed a tort, but evidence shows only one committed the wrong, it is duty of court to hold offending party and dismiss case as to other.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by W. C. Ramsey against E. Powers and another. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, and Frank W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant. Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, of Stockton, and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and Charles former action than in the trial of the present action. It appears from the present record, as it was made to appear by the record in the former action, that the plaintiff was the owner of a certain ranch, situated in San Joaquin county, and consisting of 320 acres; that on the 1st day of November, 1917, he leased the whole of said ranch to one W. T. Kim and one C. H. Hahn, for the term of one year; that, on the 18th day of March, 1918, said Kim and Hahn executed and delivered to the plaintiff their promissory notes for the sum of $3,000 and $2,000, respectively, and at the same time, as security for the payment of said notes, gave to plaintiff a mortgage on all crops of sugar beets, tomatoes, beans, Egyptian corn, and similar products "being, standing and growing" on the demised land, and which is described in the mortgage. It further appears that Kim and Hahn first attempted to grow sugar beets on the land. In January, 1918, they planted the entire acreage of the land to sugar beets, but, as Kim stated, they "blew out." Shortly thereafter they again planted sugar beets in the land, with the same result. In May, 1918, they put the land in tomatoes and Egyptian corn. When these crops had matured, Kim and Hahn sold the tomatoes to the defendant California Packing Corporation, and the corn to the defendant Powers. They (Kim and Hahn), upon effecting those sales, conveyed the tomatoes to Manteca, a railroad station not far distant from the land, and there put them aboard a car and consigned them to the defendant corporation at its packing plant. The corn, by request of Powers, was removed from the land and deposited on "high land" near a road, a short distance from the Ramsey ranch, at which point Powers took possession of the corn and by means of trucks carried it away.

The above comprehends a statement of the general facts.

The only testimony in this case directly bearing upon the transactions constituting the bases of this action was that contained in a deposition given by Kim. There was some other testimony received, but it has no direct relation to the transactions herein involved, and need not, therefore, be here presented.

[1] The nonsuit here was based on substantially the same grounds as those upon which the nonsuit in the former action was allowed, and many, if not all, the legal points herein urged upon us in support of the appeal were presented and considered in the appeal from the judgment of nonsuit entered in the former action. There were, however, two other grounds added in this case to those presented in the former case, to wit: (1) That there is a misjoinder of parties defendants; (2) that arising upon the pleas of estoppel interposed by defendants as against the right of the plaintiff to maintain this action in that the judgment in the former action is res adjudicata. In limine, it may as well be stated that the doctrine of res adjudicata, as a plea in estoppel, is not available as against a judgment entered upon an order granting a nonsuit. "It is fundamental that the doctrine of res adjudicata has no application to judgments of nonsuit." Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 543; City and County of San Francisco v. Brown, 153 Cal. 644, 648, 96 P. 281.

On the appeal from the judgment entered in the former action, these points, among others, were raised and considered: (1) That the mortgage in question there and here does not cover or include the crops of tomatoes and Egyptian corn purchased by the defendants; (2) that the mortgage, the execution of which was acknowledged by the mortgagors before one Emerson, as a notary public, was, as to third parties, invalid, because said Emerson was a partner of the plaintiff in the ownership of the mortgage and the notes it was given to secure. As to what was said in the opinion disposing of the appeal in the former action upon those propositions, the Supreme Court, in denying a hearing there, expressly declined to state its views. Ramsey v. Cal. Packing Corp. et al., 51 Cal. App. 517, 201 P. 481. Clearly what was said in that opinion with regard to the scope of the mortgage was dictum. As to the other point, the Supreme Court in effect held that the judgment of this court could be sustained without regard to whether the mortgage covered the crops in question. But neither of these propositions need be considered here, since we are convinced that the nonsuit was properly granted upon the ground that there is a misjoinder of parties defendants.

[2, 3] Upon the face of the complaint there is therein alleged a single trespass or tort, which it is alleged was committed by the joint act of the two defendants. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to make his case as his pleading submitted it, to prove that the taking of the tomatoes and the corn constituted a single act of trespass and that it was done jointly or in concert by the defendants. This the plaintiff failed to do. There is absolutely no evidence tending to show that the defendants ever maintained with or between each other any business relations of any kind or character. There is not the slightest evidence that the two jointly acted in the transactions involved in this dispute. To the contrary, the evidence conduces to the conclusion that the act of taking the tomatoes and the act of taking the corn constituted two different, distinct, and independent transactions carried out by two different persons acting independently of each other. Kim testified that the original agreement by him and Hahn with the packing corporation for the purchase of the tomatoes was made in the month of December, 1917; that the negotiations leading to said agreement were conducted on behalf of the corporation by a Mr. Davis, the "buyer" of the said defendant; that, through said Davis, the agreement with that corporation was that the latter was to provide the financial means necessary for the planting, cultivation, and harvesting of the tomatoes, and that Kim and Hahn were to sell the vegetable to the corporation at the rate of $20 per ton; that the delivery of the tomatoes to the corporation was made before the corn was sold and delivered to defendant Powers; and that such delivery was made by Kim and Hahn at the railroad station at Manteca in pursuance of the written memorandum of the agreement between them. Kim further testified:

"Q. Did Mr. Davis or California Packing Corporation or anybody representing or connected with California Packing Corporation ever talk to you about corn? A. No. Q. Never had anything to do with corn? A. No. Q. Nothing at all? A. No. Q. Did they ever take any corn off that place, off the Ramsey place; did Mr. Davis or California Packing Corporation ever touch any corn or buy any corn or take any corn off the Ramsey place? A. No. Q. Not a grain? A. No, just the tomato. Q. They bought tomato from both ranches? A. Yes. Q. Baccieleri ranch, other ranch? A. Yes. Q. Forty acres and eighty acres? A. About 70 to 80. Q. But never touch any corn? A. No. Q. Did Mr. Powers ever talk to you about tomatoes? A. No. Q. Did Mr. Powers ever buy any tomatoes from you? A. No. Q. Did you ever give any tomatoes, or deliver any tomatoes, to Mr. Powers? A. No. Q. Off the Ramsey place? A. No. Q. In 1918? A. No. Q. Or at any other time? A. No. Q. California Packing Corporation and Mr. Powers never come together to do anything? A. No. Q. Never saw them together? A. No. Q. Any time? A. No."

The transaction resulting in the sale of the corn to Powers, so Kim testified, took place after the tomatoes were sold to the corporation, one Hooper, buyer for Powers, representing or acting for the latter therein.

The above testimony stands uncontradicted in the record, there having been introduced, as before stated, no other testimony than that of Kim directly relating to the two transactions. And thus it is clear that, as before declared, assuming that the sale and the removal from the land of the tomatoes and the corn were tortious and in violation of the rights of the plaintiff under his mortgage, the plaintiff not only failed to show that the defendants were joint tort-feasors, but that the evidence affirmatively shows that they acted in two entirely different transactions and independently of each other, or, in other words, that there was, in the carrying out of the two transactions, no concert of purpose between them. It follows that there is here not only a misjoinder of parties defendants, but a misjoinder of causes of action. For these reasons alone, if for no other, there was no alternative left to the trial court but to grant the motion for a nonsuit. The authorities are quite uniform upon this proposition.

In Miller v. Highland Ditch Co., 87 Cal. 430, 25 P. 550, 22 Am. St. Rep. 254, the action was for damage to plaintiff's land, alleged to have been caused by the acts of defendants in maintaining ditches whereby "foreign waters" were diverted into and through the mountain canyon in which said land was situated, with the result that the said land was inundated and as a consequence seriously injured. The complaint proceeded upon the theory that the three defendants were joint tort-feasors, but the evidence disclosed that they maintained, independently of each other or without acting in unison in such maintenance, three different ditches, all, however, contributing to the damage complained of. The Supreme Court, in disposing of the case on appeal, and speaking through the late learned Justice McFarland, said:

"It is clear that the rule as established by the general authorities is that an action at law for damages cannot be maintained against several defendants jointly, when each acted independently of the others, and there was no concert or unity of design between them. It is held that in such a case the tort of each defendant was several when committed, and that it does not become joint because afterwards its consequences united with the consequences of several other torts committed by other persons. If it were otherwise, say the authorities, one defendant, however little he might have contributed to the injury, would be liable for all the damage caused by the wrongful acts of all the other defendants, and he would have no remedy against the latter, because no contribution can be enforced between tort-feasors. Chipman v. Palmer, 77 N. Y. 51 [33 Am. Rep. 566]; Little Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Richards, 57 Pa. 182 [142], [98 Am. Dec. 209]; Sellick v. Hall, 47 Conn. 260; Gould on Waters, § 222; Pomeroy on Remedies, §§ 307, 308. The case of Blaisdell v. Stephens, 14 Nev. 17 [33 Am. Rep. 523], is very similar to the case at bar, and involved the very point under discussion. In that case several defendants were sued 'for wrongfully flowing waste water from their lands, to the injury of plaintiff's ditch, and for an injunction to restrain such wrongful flowing of waste water.' It appeared, however, that the defendants 'own, occupy, and irrigate separate and distinct tracts or parcels of land, each in his own right'; and they moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that it did not appear that the injury complained of 'was the result of the joint or concurrent act of defendants.' The trial court overruled the motion, and, on appeal, the Supreme Court of Nevada held that the nonsuit should have been granted, and said in its opinion: 'The general principle is well settled that where two or more parties act, each for himself, in producing a result injurious to plaintiff, they cannot be held jointly liable for the acts of each other.'"

In the case of Livesay v. First Nat. Bank, the Colorado Supreme Court (36 Colo. 526, 532, 86 P. 102, 104, 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 598 at page 601) announced the same doctrine, and the case of Miller v. Highland Ditch Co., supra, among other cases, is cited. In the Colorado case the action was against several defendants, acting independently of each other, for tortiously taking certain goods from plaintiffs. The court said:

"The question then is: Was there sufficient evidence to warrant the court in submitting to the jury the issue of joint liability by reason of the joint acts of the defendants? It is admitted that the action was against the defendants as joint tort-feasors. A failure to prove the joint liability of all the defendants was a failure to prove the cause of action alleged. Proof of several separate and distinct liens or trespasses was fatal to the cause of action, and warranted the court in directing a verdict. * * * The principle is the same whether the question is ex contractu or ex delicto."

See, also, Pomeroy, Remedies and Remedial Rights (2d Ed.) p. 265; Mau v. Stoner, 15 Wyo. 109, 87 P. 434, 440, 89 P. 466; Bonte v. Postel, 109 Ky. 64, 58 S. W. 536, 51 L. R. A. 187, 189; Farley v. Crystal Coal & Coke Co. et al., 85 W. Va. 595, 102 S. E. 265, 9 A. L. R. 933.

[4] It may be suggested that, where a tort has been committed and two or more parties are alleged by the plaintiff to have jointly committed the same, and the evidence shows that one of the defendants only had committed the wrong or the damage, then it would be the duty of the trial court to hold the offending defendant liable and dismiss the case as to the others. That is not this case, however. Here, as seen, we have two different torts, neither of which was jointly committed by the defendants, but each of which, if committed at all, was by the defendants acting independently of each other or for himself, or, in other words, the one defendant taking no part in the commission of the alleged tortious act committed by the other.

For the reasons stated, we find it to be our duty to affirm the judgment, and it is so ordered.

SAUER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 4985.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 15, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 14, 1925.)

1. Dismissal and nonsuit — §57 — Failure to serve summons and make return within three years held to deprive trial court of jurisdiction other than to dismiss action.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, failure to serve summons and make return thereon within three years from commencement of action held to deprive trial court of jurisdiction other than to dismiss action.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit — §50 — Jurisdiction, lost through failure of plaintiff to serve summons and make return within three years, held not resumed by stipulation of parties.

Jurisdiction of cause, lost under Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, through plaintiff's failure to serve summons and make return within three years, held not resumed by stipulation that defendant would not take advantage of delay theretofore or thereafter occurring.

Application by Joseph G. Sauer for writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court of San Diego County and C. N. Andrews and others as Judges thereof. Writ granted.

E. F. Du Fresne, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Crouch & Sanders, of San Diego, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. On writ of prohibition. On the 25th day of June, 1921, Brown, special administrator of the estate of Murray, filed his complaint against Anna M. Sauer and others for the foreclosure of a mortgage on real property in San Diego county. On the 29th day of December, 1924, pursuant to notice duly given, Joseph G. Sauer, petitioner herein, who was a defendant in that action, presented to the superior court his motion for an order to dismiss said foreclosure action and for judgment of dismissal thereof. The stated ground of the motion was as follows:

"That more than three years have elapsed since the commencement of said action, and a summons has not been served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of said action, according to the provisions of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California. * * *"

There is no contention that the summons in said action was not issued promptly. The motion was heard upon affidavits and the record of the action. The court denied that motion, and in connection therewith asserted its jurisdiction to further proceed in said action, and will so proceed unless prevented by peremptory writ of prohibition.

Contending that the superior court is without jurisdiction to proceed further in said action, petitioner relies upon the following provisions of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure:

"No action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, and all actions heretofore or hereafter commenced must be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced, on its own motion, or on motion of any party interested therein, whether named in the complaint as a party or not, unless summons shall have issued within one year, and all such actions must be in like manner dismissed, unless the summons shall be served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of said action. But all such actions may be prosecuted, if appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants, within said three years in the same manner as if summons had been issued and served. * * *"

The affidavits and record show that no appearance in the action was made by petitioner within three years from the time of commencement of the action. It does appear from the affidavits, and we assume the fact to be, that on November 13, 1924, petitioner, as defendant in said action, signed and delivered to plaintiff's attorney a document, wherein he stated that about one week after the action was commenced, said defendant J. G. Sauer and his codefendant, Anna M. Sauer, secured a continuance and postponement of all proceedings therein by agreement with the plaintiff that they be given time to refinance the loan and pay off the note and release the mortgage; "and that any additional delay that may be taken would be for the same purpose, and these defendants will not take advantage of such delay." Also there is other evidence that said defendants had so obtained a continuance and postponement of all proceedings in the action, but there is no evidence that any agreement made by them in that connection was made in writing.

[1] Section 581a was added to the Code of Civil Procedure in the year 1907. But it was not new legislation. The same provisions, without any material difference, had been contained in section 581, as subdivision 7 thereof, for many years prior to 1907. During this long period of time, these provisions of the Code have been the subject of discussion by the Supreme Court in many cases. Some of the principal cases were reviewed in Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 195 P. 390. The actual case there presented arose under section 581b, which, in language identical with section 581a, prohibits the further prosecution and requires the dismissal of an action in which, after an order for change of venue, the plaintiff has not within the required time paid the costs and fees incident to such change of venue. The decisions relating to section 581a, Code of Civil Procedure, were therefore directly applicable in determining the meaning and effect of said section 581b. The Supreme Court summarized the matter as follows:

"It appears, therefore, as matter of law, from the facts disclosed by the moving papers, that the fees had not been paid in time. This being the case, it follows, under the plain provisions of section 581b and the principles established by the decisions above cited in regard to the meaning and application thereof, that the superior court had then no power or jurisdiction to entertain the motion or to do anything in the action except to dismiss it. If there had been no judgment of dismissal at that time, the only duty resting upon the court and the only power it had, from the admitted facts, was to enter a judgment of dismissal."

It will be seen that the court thus directly held that on the record made in the case, the court had lost jurisdiction of the action except for the single purpose of dismissal. For that reason the court in that case issued a peremptory writ of prohibition forbidding the superior court to proceed further in the action.

Respondent attempts to establish a difference between that part of section 581a which deals with cases where the summons has not been issued within one year, and the remainder of the section. The contention is that that part of the section which declares that the action shall not be further prosecuted and no further proceedings shall be had therein does not apply except in cases where the summons has not been issued within one year; that, where the defect consists only in the fact that the summons has not been served and return made thereon within three years after the commencement of the action, the only penalty is that the action must be dismissed. The argument is that, even though it be conceded that in the first instance the court is without jurisdiction to proceed further, it retains its jurisdiction in the second instance. In view of the fact that in several decisions the rule adverse to respondent's contention has been enforced without regard to this attempted distinction, we do not feel at liberty to make such distinction at this time. Rules of practice which have been so long established upon a definite understanding of a statute should not be disregarded without a compelling reason. For a list of cases in which the rule of section 581a has been applied to the full extent in cases where the summons (although issued promptly at commencement of action) was not served and returned within the prescribed period of time, see Bellingham Bay Lumber Co. v. Western Amusement Co., 35 Cal. App. 515, 518, 170 P. 632.

[2] Respondent further contends that the stipulation signed by petitioner, to which we have referred, was a waiver of petitioner's right to ask for a dismissal of the action, and that this waiver is sufficient to authorize the court to proceed with the action. To adopt this view of the matter would be, in effect, to deny that, at the time when said stipulation was made, the court had lost jurisdiction of the case, or to hold that, by stipulation of the parties, a jurisdiction which has been lost can be resumed. Neither of these alternatives can be accepted. There have been several instances in which it has been sought to avoid the effect of section 581a (or subdivision 7 of section 581, as formerly in force), by showing that the delay and failure to serve summons was at the solicitation of the defendants or pursuant to stipulations made by them. In Siskiyou County Bank v. Hoyt, 132 Cal. 81, 64 P. 118, there is a review of such cases which had been decided prior to that time. The court held that, notwithstanding such solicitations made by defendant, accompanied even by a verbal authority to take judgment in the case at any time, these facts were not sufficient to remove the case from the operative effect of said provisions of the Code. So far as we are aware, this decision in Siskiyou County Bank v. Hoyt, supra, has not been overruled.

Let the peremptory writ issue.

HANSON et ux. v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF TOWN OF MILL VALLEY et al.
(Civ. 5128.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 16, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 14, 1925.)

1. Pleading $\S$ 364(5) — Allegations of probative and not ultimate facts properly stricken from complaint to declare proceedings in awarding contract void.

In action to have declared void proceedings leading to award of contract for certain improvements, fact of levy of special tax for purpose of paying for lands purchased by city for delinquent taxes for such improvements is admissible only as tending to show belief of trustees that benefits derived would be less than cost of improvements, and allegations thereof, being allegation of probative and not of ultimate fact, were properly stricken from complaint.

2. Evidence $\S$ 181 — Purported copy of map properly rejected, in absence of competent proof of original.

Map purporting to be copy of map found in office of town clerk, in absence of competent preliminary proof of official character of map found, was properly rejected as evidence.

3. Evidence $\S$ 245 — Board of trustees not bound by declarations of member at public meeting.

Board of trustees of city is not bound by declarations of member of board made at public meeting, not a meeting of board, as to policy and intentions of board with reference to certain improvement.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 323(3) — Testimony of town clerk of delinquencies in taxes in districts other than one in question properly rejected.

Testimony of town clerk as to delinquencies in payment and sales of land for nonpayment of assessments in districts other than one in question held properly rejected as irrelevant.

5. Evidence $\S$ 314(2) — Testimony of witness, as to opinions of real estate dealers of effect of certain improvement on value of land, held incompetent.

Testimony of witness as to opinions of real estate dealers as to effect of proposed improvement on land value held incompetent as hearsay.

6. Municipal corporations $\S$ 323(3) — Testimony that effect of improvement was to depreciate values inadmissible, in absence of allegation.

In action to declare void proceedings leading to contract for improvements, testimony of real estate dealer that effect would be to depreciate values held inadmissible, in absence of allegation that no benefit would accrue to land, and that evidence presented to board on objection was all evidence on which board acted.

7. Municipal corporations $\S$ 450(4) — Determination by trustees property included in assessment district will be specially benefited, conclusive in absence of fraud.

Where an assessment district is formed to pay cost of improvements, determination by trustees of municipality that property included in district will be specially benefited is conclusive in absence of fraud, and absence of benefit cannot be a judicial question unless fact found by board is unsupported by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by C. H. Hanson and wife against the Board of Trustees of the Town of Mill Valley, R. C. Ward, and others, as members of said Board of Trustees, and another. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

M. J. Gillespie and E. B. Mering, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

H. C. Symonds, of San Francisco, and Daniel V. Marceau, of Stockton, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An action was brought by C. H. Hanson and Lucretia K. Hanson, appellants herein, against respondents R. C. Ward, W. H. Derr, C. E. Hatch, O. C. Cappelman, and R. L. Heminway, who were on December 11, 1923, the members of the board of trustees of the town of Mill Valley, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, and Frank C. McIntire, the contractor for the work of constructing certain improvements hereinafter mentioned, to have declared void the proceedings leading to the award of a contract therefor and to enjoin further action thereunder.

Respondent board on December 11, 1923, adopted a resolution of intention to order certain work to be done and improvements to be made in the grading and paving of certain streets within the town in accordance with plans and specifications therefor adopted on the same date, the expense of the improvement, as provided in the resolution, to be charged upon a district thereby created, declared therein to be benefited by the improvement and to be known as assessment district No. 6, it being therein provided that the proposed work should be done pursuant to the act known as the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), and amendments thereto, and therein fixed a day on which objections to the proposed improvement might be made and of which due and legal notice was given.

On the day fixed appellants, who were the owners of a certain lot within the assessment district, filed in writing their objections to the proposed improvement. Thereafter at an adjourned meeting respondent trustees overruled the objections and ordered the improvement to be made in accordance with the resolution of intention. A contract was thereafter entered into with respondent McIntire for the construction thereof, and the action mentioned was brought, appellants alleging therein that the trustees failed to consider the objections made, acted contrary to and against the evidence, that their order overruling such objections was an abuse of discretion in that they "well knew and believed that the benefit derived from such improvement would be far less than the assessment to be imposed."

Certain portions of the complaint having on motion been stricken therefrom, respondents answered, denying the allegations mentioned above, and upon the trial of the action a judgment of nonsuit was entered, from which the appeal herein was taken.

Appellants contend that the order striking out the portions of the complaint mentioned and hereinafter considered was improper, and that the trial court erred in sustaining objections to the introduction of certain evidence offered by appellants at the trial of the action.

The portions of the complaint stricken therefrom were as follows: An allegation that respondent board, having in view the improvements contemplated, ordered a special tax of 10 cents on each $100 of assessable property in the town for the purpose of paying for any lands which might be purchased by the town at a delinquent sale of any property subject to assessment for the proposed improvement; that such tax was irregular, in that it was an inducement held out to bidders to enter into contracts for doing the proposed work; certain allegations describing the location and the character of the population of the town, the history and the effect upon values of other previous assessments and assessment districts made and created therein by its board of trustees, which did not include or affect the lands involved in the present proceeding; alleging hardships and losses suffered by the owners in said districts; describing specifically certain property included therein with the names of the owners thereof, and in detail the individual experiences of such owners in selling or attempting to sell their lands after the completion of such improvements.

[1] The fact of the levy of the special tax mentioned would be material, if at all, only as evidence tending to show a consciousness or belief on the part of the trustees that the benefits which might be derived from the proposed improvement would be less than the cost of construction, and, such fact appearing, that they abused their discretion in making the order therefor; and the allegations setting forth the history of other assessment districts were likewise of facts having a possible probative value for the same purpose, but, being allegations of probative and not of ultimate facts, were properly stricken from the complaint. Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566; Harris v. Hillegass, 54 Cal. 463; County of San Joaquin v. Budd, 96 Cal. 47, 30 P. 967; Ahlers v. Smiley, 11 Cal. App. 343, 104 P. 997.

[2] At the trial there was offered a map prepared by a draughtsman called as a witness for the appellants, which purported to be a copy of certain maps, testified by the witness to have been found in the office of the town clerk, of certain improvement districts within the town other than the district in question. No competent preliminary proof of the official character of the maps found was offered; and though the map prepared by the witness was allowed by the court to be referred to in his testimony, an objection on the ground stated above was properly sustained to its introduction in evidence.

[3] Appellants offered the testimony of certain witnesses, to which objections were sustained by the court, and in the rulings thereon appellants contend that the court erred. Respondent Cappelman was asked to testify as to declarations made by him at a public meeting held prior to the adoption of the resolution of intention mentioned above, not a meeting of the board, as to the policy and intentions of the board with reference to the improvement here involved. Objection to the offered testimony, on the ground that neither the town nor the board could be bound by declarations by a trustee not made while acting in the course of his duties as such, was properly sustained.

[4] Objection was sustained to the testimony of the town clerk as to delinquencies in payment and sales of lands for the non-payment of assessments in districts other than the one in question, offered, as stated by counsel for the appellants, for the purpose of showing that the members of the board "expected people to lose their property, and they make provision for it in advance." The facts sought to be shown, as well as the offered evidence, were irrelevant for any purpose, and an objection was properly sustained on that ground.

[5] An objection to the offered testimony of appellant Lucretia K. Hanson as to inquiries made by her of various dealers in real estate as to the effect of the improvement upon land values within the assessment district, and which clearly would have been hearsay, was properly sustained.

[6] Appellants further sought to show by the testimony of a real estate dealer of the town that the effect of the proposed improvement would be to depreciate property values within the district. It was not alleged that no benefits would accrue to appellants' land by reason of the improvement, or that the evidence presented in support of appellants' protest constituted all the evidence on which the board acted in making its order. In the absence of such allegations, the opinion of a witness as to the effect of such improvement would be irrelevant and immaterial, and respondents' objection to the testimony on that ground was properly sustained.

[7] Where an assessment district is formed to pay the cost of improvements, the determination by the trustees of a municipality that the property included in the district will be specially benefited is conclusive in the absence of fraud or such an abuse of discretion as is equivalent to fraud (Beale v. City of Santa Barbara, 32 Cal. App. 235, 162 P. 657); and the absence of benefit cannot be a judicial question unless the fact found by the board be unsupported by evidence (Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 P. 661), nor does the validity of the proceedings depend upon the ability to show that the benefits to the property included therein will be identical with the burdens (Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 404, 14 P. 71; Federal Construction Co. v. Ensign, 59 Cal. App. 200, 210 P. 536; Larsen v. San Francisco, 182 Cal. 1, 186 P. 757).

In the instant case no evidence was adduced in support of the allegation of the complaint that the board failed to consider appellants' protest; nor could there be fairly or reasonably drawn from the evidence offered and admitted the conclusion that the board abused its discretion in making its order; and it appearing that the court did not err in its rulings in the instances urged by appellants and hereinbefore considered, the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

PACIFIC SOUTHWEST TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. TULLEDO et al. (Civ. 2972.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1925.)

1. Abatement and revival §17—Judgment of foreclosure of mortgage on property in custodia legis held not premature.

Judgment of foreclosure of mortgage on property in custodia legis by virtue of a prior claim and delivery proceeding held not subject to criticism as premature, where the issue of ownership was tendered and determined and no defendants interposed a plea in abatement nor objected to proceeding with trial, and all parties to claim and delivery proceeding were parties to foreclosure suit.

2. Abatement and revival §17—When mortgagee entitled to judgment of foreclosure as to property in custodia legis, stated.

Independently of question whether property taken under a claim and delivery proceeding is subject to execution in a foreclosure suit, a mortgagee has the right to have foreclosure of judgment entered, if the court with all the parties before it finds the property belonged to the mortgagor at the date of the execution of the mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Suit by the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, against V. Tulleedo and two others. From an adverse judgment, defendants J. V. Fernandes and Mary V. Fernandes appeal. Affirmed.

Russell & Heid and G. W. Zartman, all of Tulare, for appellants.

D. E. Perkins and Feemster & Cleary, all of Visalia, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action to foreclose chattel mortgage on certain live stock. Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants J. V. Fernandes and Mary V. Fernandes appeal.

The record in this case discloses that on or about the 20th day of October, 1922, Mrs. M. Elma Foster, the owner of a certain ranch known as the Foster ranch in the county of Tulare and also of a certain band of cattle, leased said ranch to one V. Tulleedo and also sold the live stock thereon to the said Tulleedo, and to secure the payment of the purchase price thereof took from said V. Tulleedo a chattel mortgage covering the personal property then and there sold and delivered to the said Tulleedo, and also a promissory note evidencing the amount remaining due on said purchase price; that thereafter, and on or about the 14th day of November, 1922, said note and chattel mortgage were assigned to the plaintiff herein, and on the 15th day of November, 1922, the chattel mortgage was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Tulare county, state of California, in the official records of said county. The property covered by the mortgage is set out and described therein and consisted of 59 head of cattle and other personal property not involved herein. It also appears from the record that prior to the purchase by the defendant Tulleedo from Mrs. Foster of the property herein referred to, the said Tulleedo had, upon a conditional contract of sale, purchased from the defendant Fernandes certain other live stock consisting of a band of cattle of between 40 and 50 head; that the said defendant Tulleedo had this band of cattle on the Foster place, together with other cattle, numbering in all 96 head, a portion of which is alleged to have belonged to a brother of the defendant Tulleedo. It further appears that after the transactions herein referred to were had, the cattle were further marked by the said Tulleedo so as to render them more readily capable of being identified and some of them moved to different ranches.

The defendant Tulleedo not having complied with the terms and conditions of the conditional contract of sale by which he acquired possession of the cattle theretofore belonging to the defendants Fernandes, the said Fernandes took possession of a portion thereof, and on or about the——day of February, 1923, began an action in claim and delivery, and took possession of some 40 head of the cattle hereinbefore referred to, claiming to be the owner thereof. Said cattle were taken under claim and delivery proceedings by the sheriff of the county of Tulare in an action against the defendant V. Tulleo, and, no redelivery bond being executed by him, were by the sheriff, upon the faith of the sureties, executed by the defendants Fernandes, turned over to them. Thereafter, and on or about the 6th day of April, 1923, the plaintiff began this action to foreclose the chattel mortgage hereinbefore referred to as having been executed by the defendant Tulleo to Mrs. M. Elma Foster and assigned to the plaintiff, joining as defendants in said action V. Tulleo and J. V. and Mary V. Fernandes. The complaint sets forth the execution and the assignment of the mortgage, the noncompliance with its terms by the defendant Tulleo, the mortgagor therein named, and also alleges that the defendants Fernandes claim some interest in said property. The defendants Fernandes demurred to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint, which being overruled, made answer to said complaint, and, among other things, alleged ownership of the property in question and also set forth that on or about the 29th day of January, 1923, said defendants Fernandes as plaintiffs began an action in the superior court of the county of Tulare to recover possession of 56 head of live stock; that upon the filing of said complaint the defendants furnished the undertaking required by law and instructed the sheriff of said county to take possession of said property; that possession thereof was taken by the sheriff, was thereafter delivered to the said Fernandes and that the said action in claim and delivery is still at issue in the superior court of said county, and not yet tried. The defendants Fernandes alleged that they had no live stock in their possession included in said chattel mortgage, and further set forth:

"That by reason of the want of knowledge as to what, if any, of said live stock taken by the said sheriff of said county of Tulare in the action of claim and delivery by these defendants against said V. Tulleo were included in said chattel mortgage set out in said amended complaint, these defendants cannot state how many, if any, of the live stock so taken by said sheriff were included in said chattel mortgage, and basing their denial on that ground deny that any of the live stock taken by the said sheriff of said county of Tulare were live stock included in the mortgage executed to said M. Elma Foster."

The court made findings in accordance with the prayer of plaintiff's complaint, found that the property in question was the property sold by Mrs. M. Elma Foster to the defendant Tulleo and was not the property sold by the defendants Fernandes to the defendant Tulleo, and also made the following finding:

"That on or about January 29, 1923, defendants J. V. Fernandes and Mary V. Fernandes began an action against the said V. Tulleo in the superior court of the said county of Tulare for the recovery of the possession of 56 head of live stock and other personal property owned by said J. V. Fernandes and Mary V. Fernandes, and on the filing of said complaint furnished to the sheriff of said county of Tulare, the undertaking and affidavit required by law, together with instructions to said sheriff to take the personal property mentioned in said complaint and affidavit from the possession of said defendant V. Tulleo, and pursuant to said instructions, said sheriff did, thereafter, take a portion of the personal property, to wit, 26 head of heifers and calves he was instructed to take, and after retaining them for five days, said sheriff delivered possession thereof to said plaintiffs in that action, and that said action is now at issue in said superior court of this county, and has not yet been tried."

Upon this appeal it was argued by the appellants: First, that their demurrer should have been sustained; and, second, that the property was in custodia legis, and therefore that any judgment of foreclosure and sale before the termination of the replevin suit was premature and contrary to law. While it may be true that the demurrer of the defendants Fernandes was technically well taken, we think that any error therein is cured by the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution relative to any errors or matters of pleading which do not result in a miscarriage of justice. The testimony relative to the description of the property appeared to the trial court to be sufficient to enable any one upon inquiry to ascertain and determine the property covered by the chattel mortgage, and we have not had pointed out to us any reason why the findings of the trial court in this particular should be disturbed.

[1] The real controversy before the trial court was as to the ownership of the property; that is, whether the property covered by the chattel mortgage, 26 head of which were taken under claim and delivery proceedings by the defendants Fernandes, was the live stock sold to the defendant Tulleo by Mrs. Foster, or by the defendants Fernandes. We think the testimony sufficiently supports the finding of the court as to the ownership of the property and from whom title thereto was acquired by the defendant Tulleo. The testimony of the defendant Tulleo, if believed by the trial court, was sufficient to support the court's findings. It is clear and direct to the point that the property in controversy is the live stock obtained by him from Mrs. Foster and covered by the chattel mortgage. His testimony also accounts for the property acquired by him from the de-defendants Fernandes and what had become of the same. The real point in issue in this appeal is as to whether the judgment of foreclosure in this case was or was not premature. An examination of the record fails to disclose that request, either by pleading or otherwise, was ever made to the trial court to continue or delay the trial of the foreclosure action until after the action in claim and delivery had been heard and determined. This case also presents the differentiating feature from that of the other cases which have been called to our attention, in the fact that both the plaintiffs and the defendant in the claim and delivery action are made parties defendant in the foreclosure proceedings, and that the question of ownership and title to the property has been presented and litigated with all the parties present without any objection being made to the proceeding with the trial of the issues presented. In Hawi Mill, etc., Co., Ltd., v. Leland, 56 Cal. App. 224, 205 P. 485, the ruling was had that personal property taken in an action upon claim and delivery and thereafter delivered to the plaintiff under the provisions of section 514, Code of Civil Procedure, remains in custodia legis after such delivery and is not subject to a writ of execution. It is also further held that mandamus will lie to compel redelivery of such property to the plaintiff in the claim and delivery action, in the event that the same is taken from him upon an execution issued in another action. In that case an execution was issued in an attachment suit, the institution of which brought about the claim and delivery proceeding. The reasons given for the rule are that the sureties of the plaintiff in the claim and delivery proceeding, in the event the plaintiff therein is unsuccessful, have a right to have delivery to them of the replevied property in the event that they are called upon to pay the judgment for damages and the value of the property taken in the claim and delivery action against the plaintiff therein. To the same effect is the opinion of the court in Bisconer v. Billing (Cal. App.) 236 P. 329. In applying the principle involved in actions similar to the present, the court, in Hunt v. Robinson, 11 Cal. 262, on pages 274-279, sets forth that where attached property is taken on claim and delivery proceedings and then redelivered to the sheriff, such redelivery to the sheriff exonerates the sureties in the claim and delivery proceeding to the extent of the property so redelivered.

[2] In the case at bar and following the opinion of the court in Hunt v. Robinson, supra, the taking of the property from the defendants Fernandes in an action in which the defendant Tullado is also joined would constitute an exoneration of the sureties in the claim and delivery action, for the simple reason that the ownership of the defendant Tullado therein is completely and absolutely foreclosed. The ownership of the defendants Fernandes in and to the 26 head, taken under the claim and delivery proceeding, was also tendered and determined by the trial court. Without any plea in abatement in the foreclosure proceedings, without any objection to the court proceeding with the trial of the issues therein tendered other than the pleading which we have hereinbefore set forth, we do not very well see wherein any valid objection is urged to the entry of the judgment of foreclosure in this action. Irrespective of whether the property taken under the claim and delivery proceedings is subject to execution in the foreclosure proceeding, the plaintiff, nevertheless, possessed the right under his chattel mortgage to have foreclosure of judgment entered covering the property therein mentioned, if the court with all the parties before it claiming any interest therein found the property in question belonged to the mortgagor at the date of the execution of the chattel mortgage.

As the reasons assigned for reversal do not appear to us sufficient, it is hereby ordered that the judgment be, and the same is, hereby affirmed.

METCALF et al. v. GUERCIO et al.
(Civ. 5239.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 21, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 16, 1925.)

1. Brokers ⚡86(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain findings for defendants sued for real estate agents' commission.

In action by real estate agents to recover commission for securing lessee, evidence that person claimed to have been secured was only acting as agent for another, who was not bound by written contract, held sufficient to sustain findings for defendants.

2. Estoppel ⚡63—Letter by property owner to real estate agent held not to preclude defense that lessee found by agents was not ready, able, and willing to execute lease.

Letter by property owners, claimed to be acceptance of lessee found by agents, did not estop owner from asserting that alleged lessee was not ready, able, and willing to execute lease, where all parties knew that such alleged lessee was acting as agent for another.

3. Appeal and error ⚡173(9)—Estoppel not raised at trial cannot be raised on appeal.

Where plaintiffs made no objection to evidence that alleged lessee found by them was not ready, able, and willing to execute lease, and that he executed contract as agent of undisclosed principal, without presenting point that owners were estopped to assert that alleged lessee was not ready, able, and willing to execute lease, they could not on appeal defend on ground of such estoppel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by H. F. Metcalf and another, co-partners, doing business under the firm name and style of Metcalf & Ryan, against V. W. Guercio and another to recover a real estate agents' commission. From judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; Myers, C. J., dissenting.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes and F. Walton Brown, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Page & Hurt and Eugene D. Williams, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendants to recover a judgment for commissions alleged to have accrued in their favor. The action was tried before the judge of the trial court sitting without a jury. Judgment went for the defendants, and the plaintiffs have appealed, bringing up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

In their complaint the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants authorized the plaintiffs to negotiate a lease of property owned by the defendants, and which was situated at the southwest corner of Grand avenue and Sixth street in the city of Los Angeles. The alleged authorization was embodied in a letter, dated July 2, 1919, which is as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, July 2, 1919.

"Metcalf & Ryan, Agents, 626 South Spring Street, City—Gentlemen: Referring to our property at the southwest corner of Grand avenue and 6th street, this city, said property having a frontage of approximately 95 feet on West 6th street and running south to a depth of approximately 115 feet on Grand avenue, we desire to enter into a ground lease on said property. Therefore, we hereby give and grant to you for a period up to and including August 5th, 1919, the sole and exclusive right to act as our agents, and we request you to secure for us an acceptance of a lessee's right for a ground lease on said property.

"Provided you do secure for us such acceptance, it is understood and agreed that a lease will be at once executed after such acceptance and said lease shall be drawn in the usual form of ground leases as executed on Los Angeles property of this character; and the following, in so far as the intent and design is apparent, shall become a part of the terms and conditions in said lease:

"It is understood and agreed that the property is now subject to an incumbrance of thirty-five thousand ($35,000) dollars; this said incumbrance the lessee must pay to us as a bonus coincident with the execution of the lease.

"Lease to be for a period of 99 years from and after January 1st, 1920; lessee to pay as rental the sum of one thousand ($1,000) dollars per month for each month of said term. The lessee to pay, in addition to the said rental, all taxes, assessments or liens that may be levied against the property during the period of the lease, with the exception of any income, personal property, or inheritance tax or charge, which shall be paid by us; lessee also to pay all insurance charges of any description, it being the spirit of this agreement that rental shall be net to us and that we shall not be called upon to pay any charges of any nature whatsoever levied against the property, with the exception of those certain taxes or charges above mentioned.

"Lessee shall carry fire insurance in responsible fire companies, approved by lessor, to the extent of at least 40 per cent. of the cost of improvement to be erected by lessee; also, lessee shall carry an amount of accident, casualty and employee's and other liability insurance as will reasonably and continuously protect both lessor and lessee from liability, or from loss or from damage to any person or property through any occurrence relating to the lessee's leasehold on the ground or in the buildings now or at any other time on said ground.

"The nonpayment of rent or insurance after 30 days' written notice has been given by the lessor shall constitute the breaking of a covenant of said lease, and the lessor may then have the right to enter the premises, take possession thereof, and declare the said lease forfeited; provided, however, that the lessee may at any time within 60 days after such forfeiture pay up all back rent and insurance charges with interest on same at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and shall then have the right to resume full possession of the said premises just as though no such forfeiture had occurred.

"The nonpayment of taxes, assessments or any other charges after 30 days' written notice has been given by the lessor shall constitute the breaking of a covenant of said lease and the lessor may then have the right to enter the premises, take possession thereof and declare the said lease forfeited; provided, however, that the lessee may at any time within six months after such forfeiture, pay up all such unpaid taxes, assessments or other unpaid charges of any kind with interest on same at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and shall then have the right to resume full possession of the said premises just as though no such forfeiture had occurred.

"It is to be understood and agreed that, within five (5) years after January 1st, 1920, the lessee will commence the erection, on said property, of a class A building costing not less than $150,000; such building to be fully completed within one year from the date of beginning construction and to be clear of any levy or lien or incumbrance whatsoever that would in any way become or be regarded as a lien or incumbrance against the real property.

"It is understood and agreed that, coincident with the execution of a ground lease by the lessor and lessee, the lessee will provide lessor with a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $50,000, said bond being signed by a surety or sureties who would be and will be approved by Security Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, California, as being a good and reasonable surety or sureties for such amount. Said bond shall remain in full force and effect until said building, as above provided, shall have been fully completed and free from any incumbrance that would effect the title of lessors.

"The lessee may have the right to sell, assign or transfer his right in said lease, but by so doing it shall not relieve the lessee of his full responsibility under the terms of the lease until the $150,000 building above mentioned shall have been erected according to the terms of the lease. After said building shall have been fully completed, and free and clear of any lien or incumbrance that would effect the title of the lessor, the lessee may assign or sell his interest in said lease and thereafter be relieved of all liability under the terms of said lease.

"It is understood and agreed that the lessor will deliver the said property to the lessee on or before the said January 1st, 1920, free and clear of all incumbrances except an incumbrance in favor of the city of Los Angeles for the widening of West Sixth street; this incumbrance lessee shall assume. Also, a certain lease expiring not later than January 1st, 1921, on the corner storeroom, which lease, however, can be bought from the tenant by payment of one thousand ($1,000) dollars.

"Provided that you do secure, on or before the said August 5th, 1919, such acceptance as above described, we agree to pay you as commission and compensation for your services in having secured such acceptance, the sum of seven thousand ($7,000) dollars, said sum payable upon the execution of said lease.

"Provided that, on or before the said August 5th, 1919, you have not secured such acceptance as above provided, and provided that you pay to us the sum of two hundred fifty ($250) dollars, then, in such event, we agree that you may have an additional period in which to secure for us such acceptance, said additional period to extend up to and including September 10th, 1919. Provided that you do secure such acceptance on or before the said September 10th, 1919, then in such event, you are to be paid the commission and compensation as above provided and in the same manner, and also the sum of two hundred fifty ($250) dollars paid to us shall be repaid to you.

"Yours truly,

V. W. Guercio.
"John Menagh."

The term of the authorization extended to August 5, 1919, but extensions were regularly issued extending the time to September 17, 1919. On the latter date the plaintiffs advised the defendants by letter that they had procured an acceptance by James E. Crawford. On the next day the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs asking them to draw a lease and submit the lease to the defendants for approval. On the 5th day of March, 1920, the defendants leased the property to other parties and on October 5, 1920, this action was commenced.

[1] The appellants claim that during the term of the contract that they procured a lessee ready, able, and willing to execute the lease, and that they therefore earned their commission. At the outset they admitted that the trial court made findings of fact against them, but they maintain that the findings of fact referred to are not sustained by the evidence.

On the trial of the case the plaintiffs called as a witness Mr. Crawford. He testified that he is a partner of the plaintiffs in the insurance business. He was shown a paper which was evidently the above letter written by the defendants, dated July 2, 1919, and testified that he signed the acceptance attached thereto. Continuing, he stated:

"I intended to accept the lease there described. At that time I stated in my acceptance that when the lease was executed I would sign and transfer the same. I had in mind Lee A. Phillips or a group of men of which Lee A. Phillips would be the nucleus as the persons to whom I intended to assign the lease."

On cross-examination the witness testified that, acting upon the request of Mr. Ryan, he signed a letter dated September 17, 1919, and also a letter dated March 13, 1920.

"At the time I signed the acceptance there was no stipulated sum that I was to get out of it. I might have gotten something out of it. I did not intend to put up my own money in the deal. I did not intend to go out and get a bond for $50,000. The money was to be provided by Mr. Phillips. I talked to Mr. Ryan; I did not talk to Mr. Phillips about it. My negotiations and conversations in the matter were altogether with Mr. Ryan. Personally, I had no agreement with Mr. Phillips that he was going to put up the money. If Mr. Phillips had failed to put up the money I might have been able to get it. I had an agreement with Mr. Ryan that the money would be provided, but Mr. Ryan signed no papers, and none were signed by Mr. Phillips and myself. None were signed by anybody else to provide this money. I did not have that amount of money. The letter dated March 13, 1920, is the first demand I made that the lease should be drawn. I did not make any demand before that. Before January 1, 1920, Mr. Ryan did not ask me to make a demand that the lease be drawn. He did not at any time present to me a lease for my signature."

The plaintiffs also called as a witness Mr. Phillips. He testified:

"I got my information from Frank Ryan that the owners would lease the property. He informed me of the terms on which the owners would lease. Exhibit A attached to the amended complaint looks like the paper they brought to me. I said, 'Get me as much time on this proposition as you can. * * * I will put up $35,000 and take the lease, provided you can handle it in a way that I will not be known in the transaction until such time as I have completed certain other transactions which you are handling for me.' I asked Mr. Ryan whether he had any one in the office who would be willing to accept the lease and enter into it with the understanding that I would take the responsibility of paying the $35,000 and carrying out the terms of the lease and supplying the bond. Mr. Ryan said that Mr. Crawford, whom I had met in their office, was willing to carry out the acceptance under the terms of the contract, and that I could thoroughly rely upon him, and that they would have the proper arrangements made as soon as executed, and I agreed to that arrangement. At the time I had that conversation with Mr. Ryan and since that time I had the actual money to pay the $35,000, and I have many times this amount of good clear property that I could have mortgaged; so that there is no question about that. The parties that would sign the bond would have the credit at the Security Bank for many times the amount provided in the bond. I was willing and able to provide such a bond as security for Crawford if the lease were accepted by him."

On cross-examination he testified:

"I did not sign a paper to the effect I would pay the $35,000 cash. I did not sign any paper to the effect I would provide a bond. I had $150,000 government bonds which I did not want to sell on the then market, and that is one reason for my desiring delay on this. There has never been any writing between Metcalf and Ryan and Crawford and myself in regard to any of our business transactions including this particular transaction."

Mr. John F. Calhoun, manager in the office of the plaintiffs, testified that on September 17, 1919, he heard a conversation between Mr. Ryan and Mr. Guercio, in which Mr. Ryan stated to Mr. Guercio that in this transaction Crawford represented other people.

The foregoing testimony is in the record as uncontradicted. It is perfectly clear that not Mr. Crawford, but Mr. Phillips, was principal. Looking at Mr. Phillips as the principal, the record discloses that he never entered into any enforceable contract whereby he became bound to enter into a contract as lessee, or that he became lessee, or that he authorized Crawford, as his agent, to do so.

If the trial court believed the testimony of Mr. Calhoun, and in support of the judgment we are bound to assume that it did, then the trial court reached the conclusion that Crawford in all things was acting as agent, and, as the testimony subsequently disclosed, that he was acting as the agent of Phillips and his associates, principals unknown to defendants. But, taking this view of the facts, there was no writing executed by Phillips authorizing Crawford to do anything whatever. Standard Live Stock Co. v. Bank of California (Cal. Sup.) 227 P. 962; Garcia & Maggini Co. v. Colvin, 53 Cal. App. 79, 199 P. 1113. When thereafter the plaintiffs asserted a claim to commissions they had not made any showing that they had brought the lessor and lessee to an agreement or that an agreement had been executed which could be enforced by Phillips and his associates, or by the defendants against Phillips and his associates. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 P. 1105. There is nothing in the record, therefore, that indicates that the findings are not sustained by the evidence.

[2, 3] The appellants contend that the letter written by the defendants on September 18, 1919, was, in legal effect, an acceptance of Crawford as lessee, and that the defendants are estopped from thereafter asserting that Crawford was not ready, able, and willing to execute the lease. To that contention there are two answers. One answer is that according to the testimony of Mr. Calhoun all parties knew that Crawford was not to be lessee. The other answer is that the point was not presented in the trial court, because no objection whatever was made to the evidence which was adduced, but both parties proceeded to introduce evidence to the effect that Crawford was or was not ready, able, and willing to execute the lease, and that he executed the purported contract as the agent of an undisclosed principal.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOLLAND v. KELLY. (Civ. 5188.)

1. Deeds $\S$ 211(1, 4)—Conflicting evidence, in suit to set aside deed of gift, held sufficient to support finding in favor of grantees.

In suit to set aside deed of gift, on ground that grantor was incompetent, and that grantee exercised undue influence in procuring it, conflicting evidence held sufficient to support finding in favor of grantee.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence not disturbed on appeal.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1847, credibility of witness is question for trial court, and where substantial conflict in evidence exists, and conclusions of trial court find reasonable support from the evidence, its findings cannot be disturbed on appeal.

3. Evidence $\S$ 318(3)—Tags purporting to record liquor deliveries held properly excluded as hearsay.

In suit to have deed set aside, on ground that grantor was incompetent by reason of excessive use of intoxicating liquors, tags or slips purporting to record deliveries of liquor to grantor, offered as evidence of such deliveries, were properly excluded as hearsay.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Patrick Holland against William A. Kelly, as executor of the last will and testament of Julia McCarthy, deceased, substituted as defendant in place of said deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 177 Cal. 507, 171 P. 421.

W. E. Cashman, of San Francisco (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

William A. Kelly, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action by Patrick Holland, appellant herein, to set aside an instrument, in form a deed of gift to certain real property situated in the city and county of San Francisco, purporting to have been executed on April 18, 1911, by Mary Anne Holland, then the wife of appellant, to Julia McCarthy, her maternal aunt. The latter, who was the original defendant in the action, has since died, and William A. Kelly, as executor of her last will and testament, was substituted as defendant and respondent herein.

Appellant's wife at the time of her death, which occurred on May 7, 1911, was the owner of separate property which, not including the land involved in this action (the latter being also her separate property), was valued at more than $100,000, and to which, she having died intestate, appellant and a sister of deceased have become the sole heirs. The complaint alleged that the instrument in question was not in fact signed, acknowledged, or delivered by Mary Anne Holland; that she had been, for a period prior to and including the date of the instrument, addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors; that due to such use her mind had become enfeebled to such an extent as to render her incompetent; that if such instrument had in fact been executed it was due to the acts and importunities of Julia McCarthy, who, aware of such enfeebled mental condition, contributed thereto by supplying and administering intoxicants to her niece that she might and did thereby and by undue influence induce the execution thereof. The allegations mentioned being denied upon the trial of the issues, the court found against appellant, and entered its judgment accordingly. From the judgment the appeal was taken.

Appellant contends that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence; that the court erred in sustaining an objection to the introduction in evidence of certain tags or slips purporting to record deliveries by a certain liquor dealer to Mary A. Holland of certain liquors and which tags were obtained by appellant from the dealer after the death of his wife.

[1, 2] Appellant with numerous witnesses, who had been neighbors and friends of himself and wife, testified to the use by the latter of alcoholic liquors for a period of nearly a year prior to her death; that she had been an invalid since the year 1908, and that after the death in February, 1911, of Vincent Holland, the only child of the marriage, she became greatly depressed and her use of liquor thereafter increased and became excessive; that Julia McCarthy became a frequent visitor at the house of appellant after the death of his son, assisted in caring for his wife, gratifying her craving for alcohol by supplying and administering liquor in excessive quantities; and that while under its influence, by suggestion and requests, procured the execution of the deed and the transfer from her niece to herself of a certain deposit account in a San Francisco bank. From the testimony of these witnesses, if believed, the trial court might fairly have found for the appellant.

Defendant with her witnesses—many with the same opportunities for observation as the witnesses for appellant—testified with equal positiveness that the use of liquor by Mrs. Holland, though constant, was not excessive in quantity; that its use did not affect her competency; that she was competent to and did care for the affairs of her household and the business connected with her estate, was not subjected to undue or improper influences or solicitations by Mrs. McCarthy; that she had on different occasions voluntarily expressed a desire to make some provision for her aunt, and that on the occasion of the purported execution of the deed she was not intoxicated, and did sign, acknowledge, and deliver the instrument as contended by respondent. Among these witnesses were two nurses who attended Mrs. Holland at different times during the period from December, 1910, to the date of her death, one of whom was in attendance on the day on which the deed was signed, and whose testimony was in part corroborated by a real estate dealer, who drafted the deed, and a notary public, whose certificate is thereto attached, who both testified that Mrs. Holland on the occasion of its execution was not intoxicated, and that she did, with an intelligent understanding of the nature and consequences of her acts, sign, acknowledge, and deliver the instrument. Bearing upon the question of her mental condition is the testimony of a witness for the appellant, who testified that on the 1st day of April, 1911, he visited Mrs. Holland and was consulted by her with reference to the preparation of her will; that she gave him instructions as to such preparation, stating her wishes as to the provisions therein for the disposition of her property; that such instrument was prepared accordingly and read to her; and that its execution was deferred owing to her desire that appellant, who was not then present, should first see and read it. The facts as testified by the witnesses mentioned, together with the testimony of others who, with more or less frequency, visited and conversed with Mrs. Holland during the months immediately preceding her death, created a conflict in the evidence on every material issue, and, being believed by the trial court, were sufficient to support the findings.

The credibility of the witnesses was a question for the determination of the trial court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847; Badover v. Guaranty Trust & Sav. Bank, 186 Cal. 775, 200 P. 638; Crow v. Crow, 168 Cal. 607, 143 P. 689; Dracovich v. Dracovich, 53 Cal. App. 361, 200 P. 44); and, though it should appear to this court that other conclusions of fact might fairly and reasonably have been drawn from the evidence, yet where a substantial conflict therein exists, as here, and the conclusion of the trial court finds reasonable support therefrom, the rule is well settled that its findings cannot be disturbed on appeal (Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 180, 207 P. 891; Webster v. Lowe, 177 Cal. 385, 170 P. 850; Levi v. Chesley, 178 Cal. 145, 172 P. 607).

[3] The tags mentioned above purporting to record deliveries of liquor to the home of appellant, offered by him as evidence of the fact of such deliveries, the matters therein contained, not being within his knowledge, were the statements of a person not sworn as a witness or subject to cross-examination by the defendant, were hearsay, and the objection on the ground of their incompetency was properly sustained.

Th evidence being sufficient to support the findings, and, no error being shown, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by Olga Falke Parker against Frank C. Parker. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Parkinson & Parkinson, of Stockton, for appellant.

Carlton C. Case, of Stockton, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action for permanent maintenance and a division of alleged community property, on the grounds of desertion, willful neglect to provide, and extreme cruelty.

In the first three causes of action it is alleged that the parties intermarried on the 11th day of June, 1921, and ever since have been and now are husband and wife. It is further alleged therein that on the 14th day of August, 1914, the parties "began to live together as husband and wife in England, and that plaintiff was induced so to do by the promise of defendant to plaintiff that he would marry plaintiff as soon as they arrived in New York; that plaintiff, at defendant's request, took the name of Mrs. Olga Parker; that plaintiff and defendant continued to live together as husband and wife at all times since the 14th day of August, 1914," until their separation as alleged in the complaint, after their marriage on the 11th day of June, 1921.

In the fourth cause of action it is alleged that the parties entered into a contract marriage in the state of New York in September, 1914, and thereafter lived together in the state of New York as husband and wife until May, 1918, when they came to California, that such contract and assumption of marital rights constituted a valid legal marriage under the laws of that state, and that at all times since such common-law marriage the parties have been and now are husband and wife.

The complaint alleges that property of the value of $84,000 stands in the name of defendant, all of which, except $2,000 is community property, acquired by the joint efforts of the parties while residing in California, that plaintiff is "nervous and unable to work and produce any income whatever," and "has no income sufficient to provide for her the necessities of life," and that $500 a month is a reasonable sum to be allowed her for permanent support and maintenance. The prayer, in so far as material here, is for a division of the alleged community property and permanent maintenance in the sum of $500 a month.

The answer admits the marriage of June 11, 1921; denies the alleged contract marriage; denies that the defendant ever promised to marry plaintiff; admits that the parties at various times lived together and traveled together temporarily as husband and wife, but alleges that they did not do so with any "intention whatever of being or becoming husband and wife"; alleges that on the 20th day of August, 1921, plaintiff commenced an action against defendant in which she alleged that she was the owner of one-half of all of defendant's property, that the parties "compromised said action," and defendant "paid plaintiff $5,000 upon her promise and agreement to release all claims to defendant's property." The agreement, executed August 24, 1921, is attached to and made a part of the answer. The answer denies that the property standing in defendant's name is community property, or of a value in excess of $40,000 or was accumulated while the parties were living together as husband and wife, and denies that $500 is a reasonable sum to be allowed plaintiff for maintenance. There are many other allegations in the complaint and allegations and denials in the answer, but enough has been stated to show the issues involved in this appeal. There are no children of the marriage.

The court found that the parties did not enter into the alleged common-law marriage; that "prior to the 11th day of June, 1921, neither of the parties ever agreed or intended to be or to become husband and wife, and neither of them regarded themselves as such"; that "by mutual consent, and in order that they might more conveniently and safely practice * * * illicit sexual intercourse without attracting the attention of the public, the plaintiff assumed the name of Mrs. Frank C. Parker," and that the parties "represented to persons with whom they came in contact that they were husband and wife"; that at various times and places they lived together in such meretricious relation, but that prior to June 11, 1921, they "never agreed to live together as husband and wife, save and except for the false and wrongful purpose of concealing their illicit sexual intercourse"; that the parties executed the aforesaid agreement of August 24, 1921; that at the time of the marriage on June 11, 1921, and at the time of the trial, the defendant had property of the value of $45,000; that "all of said property was acquired by him prior to his marriage with plaintiff, or was purchased by defendant after such marriage with funds possessed by him prior to said marriage"; that "there is no community property belonging to the parties"; that the plaintiff has $4,500 in cash, which is her separate property, and which produces an income of $180 a year; that she "is 39 years of age, is in good health, and is in all respects capable of earning sufficient money for her support and maintenance"; that "defendant's income is uncertain, changeable, and fluctuating; that during certain periods defendant has had a net income realized from his labors and from his separate property which aggregates $700 per month, and at other times defendant has suffered monthly losses by reason of insufficient proceeds from business to pay overhead expenses"; that the sum of $100 a month "is a reasonable and proper amount to be contributed by defendant to plaintiff, and said sum, when added to the funds which plaintiff is capable of earning, will enable her to live in a manner befitting her rank, station, and requirements in life, and in the manner in which defendant would be able to support her if said parties were living together as husband and wife." The court found in favor of plaintiff on the issues of desertion and willful neglect and against her on the issue of extreme cruelty. Judgment was entered in accordance with the findings, and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] Appellant contends that the finding against the alleged common-law marriage is contrary to the evidence. Plaintiff testified that a verbal contract of marriage was entered into by the parties as alleged. Defendant's testimony is equally positive to the contrary. Admittedly they lived together during various periods after September, 1914, and held themselves out to others as husband and wife. Admittedly also they had continuously indulged in acts of sexual intercourse with each other for many months prior to the alleged contract marriage. The plaintiff testified that this first occurred after the defendant had asked her to marry him. He denies that he ever asked her to marry him, or that there was any understanding, prior to June, 1921, that the parties would marry. They first met during the latter part of the year 1912. Both were of mature years and wide experience. The plaintiff speaks the German, Swedish, Finnish, Russian, Danish, and English languages, and, probably by reason thereof, she made many trips to Europe as the companion of wealthy American women. She testified that she had crossed the Atlantic about seventeen times. The illicit relations between the parties commenced in about three months after they first met, or in the early part of 1913. From the foregoing statement it is apparent that the finding complained of has sufficient support in the evidence, and the details of the illicit relations between the parties may well be omitted.

[2] It is urged that the evidence does not support the finding to the effect that the defendant accumulated no property after the marriage, and that the evidence shows that at least $6,000 was accumulated since the marriage. The defendant testified that he purchased the Lyric Theater in Stockton August 12, 1919; that he then had between $8,000 and $9,000, a part of which he used in making the purchase; that at the time of the marriage in 1921 he owned property of the value of between $40,000 and $50,000; and that at the time of the trial the value of all of his property was between $30,000 and $40,000. He gave lists of the property owned by him at both times and an estimate of the values thereof. No witness testified to the contrary. The defendant owns and conducts, alone or in association with others, several moving picture theaters and also is the owner of a one-third interest in a prune orchard. His other property consists of stocks and bonds and moneys deposited in banks. He receives a salary of $20 a week from one of the theaters in which others are interested. He testified that he had no other income, except the profits which he receives from the foregoing businesses and property.

"All property owned by the husband before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is his separate property." Civ. Code, § 163.

The compromise agreement of August 24, 1921, contains the following covenant:

"It is further agreed that the property now in the hands of each of said parties at the time of the consummation of this agreement shall be the separate property of each of said parties."

The court was justified in finding that "there is no community property belonging to the parties."

Appellant contends that the finding, to the effect that the defendant during certain periods has had a net income of $700 a month and at other times has suffered monthly losses, "is no finding of fact whatever, and is too indefinite upon which to base their award," and that the "evidence supports finding of an average income of $750 per month throughout the year." Defendant's first testimony relative to his income was given August 1, 1922. He then testified:

"My income from the Lincoln Theater has been $20 a week and from the Modesto Theater of course nothing at all; there won't be for a long time. From the Concord Theater I have never taken a nickel out, I am trying to sell it; it has been a losing proposition. And the Lyric Theater I have lost anywhere from $150 to $200 a week for the last three months; it approaches that. I am trying to sell it too. * * * It has not paid last winter. I may have got a living out of it, but that is not making any real money. * * * Up until around last September or October, November, I was making money about three months last year, then from there on I started to lose money. I have been losing money ever since. * * * It is just occasionally when you make money, I have been losing money now for a year * * * on the Lyric. * * * The receipts of the Lyric Theater during the last three months was $11,881.75; the expenditures was $13,815.19. * * * My best year was almost two years ago. * * * It is more expensive now; the operator's or union salaries have gone up; the pictures are more expensive; advertising is more expensive."

The defendant was again examined as a witness on the 1st of November, 1922. Relative to receipts of the Lyric Theater, he then testified:

"It has made a little money since I was here last. * * * I don't think it is making a penny these last two weeks. Before that time I made in the neighborhood of $800 or $1,000 when I had some big pictures there. * * * I had a bunch of big pictures I put on September 1st up until about two weeks ago."

[3-5] He further testified that from July 27, 1922, when it was opened, to November 1 of that year, the receipts from the Modesto Theater averaged $200 a month above operating expenses. The defendant owns a half interest in that theater. At plaintiff's request, the defendant produced his account books, which he testified contained all of his receipts and disbursements. Counsel for plaintiff examined the defendant at considerable length relative to receipts during the months of September and October of every year since defendant commenced business in Stockton. They were as follows: 1919, $10,088; 1920, $12,432; 1921, $8,026; 1922, $10,330. The defendant testified that the expenses of 1921 and 1922 were "almost double" what they were in 1919 and 1920; that his operator's weekly salary had been increased from $37.50 to $49; that of organist from $35 to $75; ushers from $7 to $10; cashier from $10 to $16; and janitor from $10 to $14; and that the price of pictures had "increased almost 200 or 300 per cent." His testimony shows that his profits in 1920 were about $10,000. The evidence also showed that certain amounts paid out in the purchase of property during 1921 and 1922 had been entered on his books as expenses. The defendant testified that counsel for plaintiff was "picking out the best weeks we have ever had." Showing the net profits for such weeks does not justify the inference that equal profits, or any profits, were made during the year as a whole. The expenses would continue during periods of small receipts, and may have resulted in such losses as to eat up the profits of the fat weeks. The court said: "There is a way of getting the exact balances there." Counsel for defendant replied: "Yes; we have submitted the books absolutely to counsel. He has been over and over the books previously over at the theater; he can produce it if he wishes." Counsel for defendant did not see fit to introduce the books in evidence. Making proper deductions from the expense account of items improperly charged thereto, the plaintiff might readily have shown the defendant's net profits. In so far as the defendant's net profits enter into the question of the amount to which plaintiff is entitled for her maintenance, the burden is on her to show what those profits were. In the absence of sufficient evidence, an issue must be decided against the party having the burden of proof. Failure to find upon an issue which must necessarily have been found against the complaining party is not ground for reversal.

[6, 7] The amount to be allowed a wife for her maintenance is largely in the discretion of the trial court, subject to revision only in case of an abuse of discretion. In this case it does not appear that such discretion has been abused. The court found, on sufficient evidence, that during the meretricious relationship of the parties "the plaintiff was supported partly by her own labor and partly by such funds as the defendant voluntarily gave to her"; that in July, 1919, "defendant left plaintiff in Pasadena, Cal., and came to Stockton, without the intention of returning to plaintiff, or of again resuming the aforesaid meretricious relations; that plaintiff remained in Pasadena for a period of eighteen months, during which time very little correspondence was exchanged between the parties; that in January, 1921, plaintiff came to Stockton where defendant had established himself in business and endeavored to induce defendant to again resume the said meretricious relations; that defendant refused so to do; that thereupon plaintiff demanded that defendant marry her, which defendant also refused to do;" that the plaintiff threatened that, unless the defendant married her, she would "expose to the public the meretricious relations in which plaintiff and defendant had lived," and promised "that, if the defendant would marry her, she would not ask or expect him to live with her, that after the performance of the ceremony she would immediately leave Stockton and 'would not bother the defendant any more,' * * * that she wanted defendant to marry her in order that she might legally use his name in obtaining passports and returning to her native country, Finland, as an American citizen; * * * that relying upon the said promises made by plaintiff, and fearing the threats of exposure and the damage to his reputation and business, * * * and believing that plaintiff would keep and perform the said promises and agreements, the defendant consented to the performance of a marriage ceremony, and the same was performed * * * on June 11, 1921; * * * that immediately after the said ceremony the parties separated;" that plaintiff failed to keep her promise, but "on the contrary returned to the city of Stockton, frequently called at defendant's place of business and annoyed and molested him by requesting him to live with her, and on the 20th day of August, 1921," commenced the action against him hereinbefore referred to; and that "defendant desired to avoid the scandal incident to the trial of the issues which would be joined by contesting the said action," and entered into the aforesaid contract of August 24, 1921.

[8] The foregoing statement of facts found by the court is not made for the purpose of excusing in any manner the reprehensible conduct of the defendant prior to the marriage of the parties, but of showing that this is not an ordinary case of a wife suing for maintenance, after living with her husband in lawful wedlock during the best years of her life. Such facts and circumstances would naturally appeal to the discretion of the court in fixing the amount to be awarded for maintenance. On a proper showing by plaintiff, the court may at any time increase the monthly amount to be paid by the defendant. Civ. Code, § 137.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOGAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. No. 5369.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct 28, 1925. As Modified Nov. 24, 1925. Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 24, 1925.)

1. Judgment ☞279—Probate orders and decree held not part of judgment roll in action by administrator.

In suit by administratrix, who was discharged before she obtained a judgment, order and decree of settlement of account and final distribution, and order of final discharge of administratrix, do not constitute part of judgment roll, and cannot be considered in determination of question of nullity of judgment.

2. Judgment ☞470, 521—Writ will not lie to prohibit enforcement of judgment unless judgment is void.

Proceeding to prohibit enforcement of judgment is collateral attack upon it, and judgment must be held valid, unless void on its face, or shown to be void by judgment roll.

3. Judgment ⚡470—In seeking to prohibit enforcement of judgment, every presumption is in favor of validity.

In proceeding to prohibit enforcement of judgment, every presumption and intendment is in favor of its validity.

4. Judgment ⚡499—Judgment roll only evidence considered in determining jurisdiction on collateral attack.

In collateral attack upon judgment, judgment roll is only evidence that can be considered in determining question of jurisdiction.

5. Judgment ⚡497(1) — If jurisdiction was once obtained, judgment roll must show it to be lost if collateral attack is to succeed.

Where trial court has obtained jurisdiction of both res and parties, subsequent proceedings cannot be collaterally attacked, unless it be ascertained from judgment roll that jurisdiction was thereafter lost.

6. Judgment ⚡499—Matters of fact outside judgment roll not admissible in collateral attack.

In collateral attack on judgment, matters of fact not appearing on judgment roll, but depending for their establishment upon extrinsic proof, are wholly inadmissible.

7. Executors and administrators ⚡440—Judgment for administratrix, discharged after commencement of suit and before judgment, held voidable.

A judgment in favor of administratrix, who was discharged as such after commencement of action but before judgment, held neither void nor valid, but voidable.

8. Prohibition ⚡12—Dismissal of appeal conclusive, and prohibition cannot be used to serve purposes of appeal.

Where a judgment is not void, and its irregularities have been attacked on appeal, the dismissal of the appeal is conclusive, and the aid of writ of prohibition may not be invoked to serve its purposes.

9. Judgment ⚡874(1)—Question of validity of order of substitution held not vital to enforcement of judgment.

Where plaintiff, who was administratrix and sole heir, recovered a judgment, and later secured an order substituting herself individually as party plaintiff instead of as administratrix, validity of such order held not vital to enforcement of judgment, because plaintiff was only person entitled to enforce it.

10. Parties ⚡58—Prohibition ⚡3(3)—Right of substitution discretionary, and prohibition not proper remedy for irregularities growing out of substitution of parties.

A transferee's right of substitution as party to suit rests in discretion of court, and irregularities growing out of it should be corrected by appeal and not by writ of prohibition, because rules applying to immunity of judgments from collateral attack apply with equal force to orders of court.

Application by Walter Hogan for writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, J. J. Van Nostrand, Judge, to prevent the enforcement of a judgment. Writ denied.

J. L. Smith, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Prohibition. Walter Hogan, the petitioner herein, is a judgment debtor in an action brought against him by Barbara Hecker, as the administratrix of the estate of Charles Valentine Hecker, deceased, and seeks by this proceeding to prohibit the enforcement of a money judgment rendered against him in that action, upon the ground that said judgment is void.

It appears from the judgment roll, a certified copy of which is annexed to and made part of respondents' return herein, that the judgment in said action was rendered by the respondent court on February 19, 1924, after trial, in favor of "the plaintiff Barbara Hecker, administratrix of the estate of Charles Valentine Hecker, deceased, and sole heir of said estate," for the sum of $11,890 and costs. It further appears from said judgment roll that an appeal from the judgment was taken by the petitioner, and on April 7, 1925, on motion of plaintiff and respondent therein, was dismissed by the Supreme Court. Thereafter, and on April 10, 1925, the petition alleges, said superior court granted an ex parte order substituting Barbara Hecker, individually, as party plaintiff in said action in the place and stead of Barbara Hecker as administratrix of said estate, which substitution, it is alleged, was followed by the issuance of an execution in the name of the substituted plaintiff.

[1] The ground upon which petitioner claims said judgment is void is that, after the action was commenced, and prior to the trial thereof, the estate of said deceased had been distributed, the administration thereof closed, and the administratrix discharged, and that therefore the action was without a plaintiff when it was tried and when judgment was rendered. None of those facts is revealed even inferentially by the judgment roll; they are brought before us in this proceeding by means of a pleading which petitioner has offered for filing since oral argument, entitled "Petitioner's Reply to Respondents' Answer," and which sets forth copies of the following documents: Order substituting party plaintiff, made after dismissal of the appeal; order made after dismissal of appeal for entry of judgment against the sureties on the appeal bond; order and decree of settlement of account and final distribution; and order of final discharge of administratrix, in the matter of the estate of said deceased; also a copy of the engrossed bill of exceptions settled and allowed by the trial judge, in the matter of petitioner's appeal from the judgment in said action. Nothing is contained in either the order of substitution or the order for entry of judgment against the sureties, relating to the discharge of said administratrix. Assuming, as petitioner contends, that said order of substitution and said order directing entry of judgment against the sureties do form part of the judgment roll in said action, it is apparent that the probate orders and decree, embodied in said pleading, do not constitute any part of said judgment roll, and hence, under the authorities, neither of those documents, nor any matter or fact appearing therein can be considered in the determination of the question of the nullity of said judgment.

[2-5] A proceeding of this nature, to prohibit the enforcement of a judgment, constitutes a collateral attack upon that judgment (Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 398, 9 P. 646; Frey v. Superior Court, 22 Cal. App. 421, 134 P. 733), and, being a collateral attack, "the judgment must be held to be valid unless the record thereof, the judgment roll, shows it to be void—unless, as the authorities put it, it is void upon its face. In determining the question, we are restricted to the evidence afforded by the judgment roll." Crouch v. H. L. Miller Co., 169 Cal. 341, 146 P. 880. Every presumption and intendment is in favor of the validity of the judgment, and any condition of facts consistent with the validity of the judgment will be presumed to have existed, rather than one which will defeat it. Canadian, etc., v. Clarita Co., 140 Cal. 672, 74 P. 301, and cases cited therein. In other words, to be attackable collaterally for lack of jurisdiction, the judgment must be void on its face, and it is not void on its face unless the record affirmatively shows that the court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment. Crouch v. Miller, 169 Cal. 341, 146 P. 880; Emery v. Kipp, 154 Cal. 83, 97 P. 17, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 129 Am. St. Rep. 141, 16 Ann. Cas. 792; Estate of Eikerenkotter, 126 Cal. 54, 58 P. 370; Butler v. Soule, 124 Cal. 69, 56 P. 601; Dunn v. Dunn, 114 Cal. 210, 46 P. 5; Layne v. Johnson, 19 Cal. App. 95, 124 P. 860; Seaboard National Bank v. Ackerman, 16 Cal. App. 55, 116 P. 91. The record is the judgment roll, and upon collateral attack is the only evidence that can be considered in determining the question of jurisdiction. Extrinsic evidence is wholly inadmissible, even though it might show that jurisdiction did not in fact exist. Crouch v. Miller, supra; Lake v. Bonyng, 161 Cal. 120, 118 P. 535; Estate of McNeil, 155 Cal. 333, 100 P. 1086; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 P. 1007; Galvin v. Palmer, 134 Cal. 426, 66 P. 572; Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 P. 899; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Calif. C. C. Co. v. Crescent City Co., 30 Cal.

App. 619, 159 P. 209; Shirran v. Dallas, 21 Cal. App. 405, 132 P. 454, 462. The true rule is not whether jurisdiction has been legally exercised, but whether it was obtained at all. Once the trial court has obtained jurisdiction of both the res and the parties, its subsequent proceedings cannot be collaterally attacked, unless it be ascertained from the judgment roll that jurisdiction was thereafter lost. In the Matter of Hughes, 159 Cal. 360, 113 P. 684; Baldwin v. Morgan, 50 Cal. 585.

[6] The judgment roll here shows that the trial court acquired jurisdiction over the parties and of the subject of the action; the judgment is regular upon its face, and embraces only such matters as were within the power of the trial court to adjudicate and within the scope of the pleadings. Its jurisdiction was therefore complete (Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 51 P. 38), and it follows that the matters of fact set forth in petitioner's final pleading, pertaining to the settlement of the estate of said deceased and the discharge of the administratrix, being admittedly matters of fact not appearing in any part of the judgment roll, but depending for their establishment upon extrinsic proof, which, as we have already seen, is wholly inadmissible in a collateral attack, cannot be allowed to impeach the integrity of the judgment.

[7] Petitioner's contention that the judgment is void is based upon the theory that under all circumstances a judgment rendered for or against a dead person is void, and he likens the situation of the plaintiff administratrix herein to that of a party plaintiff who has died since the commencement of an action, but in whose name the judgment is nevertheless rendered. In support of such theory he cites the Estate of Parsell, 190 Cal. 454, 213 P. 40, 25 A. L. R. 1561. Conceding that the analogy drawn by petitioner between the two cases is a logical one, we are unable to agree with his contention that under all circumstances a judgment is void where it is rendered for or against a deceased party, and the Estate of Parsell, as we understand it, does not so hold. Freeman on Judgments states the rule as follows:

"If an action is begun by and against living parties, over whom the court obtains jurisdiction, and some of them subsequently die, it is not thereby deprived of its jurisdiction; and, while it ought not to proceed to judgment without making the representative or successor in interest of the deceased parties to the action, yet, if it does so proceed, its action is irregular merely, and its judgment is not void collaterally, particularly where the fact of death is not shown by the record." [Freeman on Judgments, vol. 1, p. 885, § 406.]

The rule just quoted has been followed in a number of cases in this state (Todhunter v. Klemmer, 134 Cal. 60, 66 P. 75; Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1, 6 P. 867; Phelan v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 80, 28 P. 114; Martin v. Wagner, 124 Cal. 204, 56 P. 1023; Wallace v. Center, 67 Cal. 133, 7 P. 441), and is summarized in California Jurisprudence as follows:

"But the death of a party pending suit does not render a judgment for or against him after death void, although there was no substitution of his representative; it is merely voidable." 14 Cal. Jur. p. 928.

In Todhunter v. Klemmer, supra, it is said:

"But the dictum in the case cited [McCreery v. Everding, 44 Cal. 284] has been expressly overruled by the later decisions of Phelan v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 82 [28 P. 114] and Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 2 [6 P. 867], where it is held that the death of a party pending suit does not oust the jurisdiction of the court, and hence that the judgment is voidable only, not void. This does not mean that a judgment can be really rendered for or against a dead man, but that it can be rendered nominally for or against him, as representing his heirs, or other successors, who are the real parties intended."

And in Phelan v. Tyler, supra, in giving the reason for the rule, the court says:

"There is nothing in the Code which would justify the inference that the death of a party pending an appeal ousts the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and renders its judgment void unless before the rendition thereof a representative of said deceased party be substituted in his stead. * * * The reason why, 'in such cases, the judgment is simply erroneous, but not void, * * * is because the court having obtained jurisdiction over the party in his lifetime, is thereby empowered to proceed with the action to final judgment; and, while the court ought to cease to exercise its jurisdiction over a party when he dies, its failure to do so is an error to be corrected on appeal if the fact of the death appears upon the record, or by writ of error coram nobis if the fact must be shown aliunde.' Freeman on Judgments, 153."

The decision in Martin v. Wagner, supra, is to the same effect, the court saying:

"In this state, however, it has been decided that when, in his lifetime, jurisdiction of the party and of the subject-matter has been acquired, the rendition of a judgment after his death, without substitution of parties, is not void, but at most erroneous"—citing Phelan v. Tyler, supra, and Wallace v. Center, supra.

The early case of Gregory v. Haynes, 21 Cal. 443, holds that, even where substitution has been made, the entry of judgment in the name of the deceased does not invalidate the judgment collaterally. True, a judgment cannot be rendered for or against a party who was dead at the time the action was begun, and if such judgment be rendered it is wholly void and may be attacked collaterally. Freeman on Judgments, vol. 1, p. 884, § 406. This doctrine has been held to apply to corporations which had been dissolved before the commencement of the action in which they were made parties. Cal. Nat. Supply Co. v. Flack, 183 Cal. 124, 190 P. 634; Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 89

P. 335. But the proceeding before us does not fall within the rule just stated, because the plaintiff here was the qualified and acting administratrix at the time of and subsequent to the commencement of the action. The decision in the Estate of Parsell, supra, cited and relied upon by petitioner, does not establish any different rule. There a direct appeal was taken from a modified decree of distribution by which the probate court sought to modify its original decree wherein it had distributed a portion of the estate to a deceased person, the fact of the death of said distributee affirmatively appearing in the record; and it was held on appeal that the original decree could not be so modified because it was wholly void, the court saying:

"The decree of distribution is in the nature of a judgment [citing numerous cases]. A judgment rendered for or against a dead person is void (De Leonis v. Walsh, 140 Cal. 175, 178 [73 P. 813]), with certain exceptions (section 669, Code Civ. Proc.; Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. M. Co., 108 Cal. 478 [41 P. 328]; Estate of Page, 50 Cal. 40) not applicable to the facts of this case."

The statement made therein, to the effect that a judgment rendered for or against a dead person is void, must be interpreted in the light of the state of facts there under consideration, and evidently was not intended to be a broad and absolute rule applying to all cases where a judgment is rendered for or against a deceased party, for the reason that the statement itself notes certain exceptions wherein valid judgments may be rendered against deceased parties, and it does not pretend to deal with that middle class of cases represented by the authorities hereinabove cited, wherein judgments against deceased parties are held to be neither void nor valid, but at most erroneous and consequently voidable. The judgment in question manifestly belongs to that middle class, and therefore is immune from collateral attack.

[8] Furthermore, it would appear that, since said judgment is not void, whatever objections petitioner may have had to its irregularity were involved in the appeal which was subsequently dismissed, and that he is concluded by such judgment of dismissal (Lake v. Bonyng, 161 Cal. 120, 118 P. 535; Michelin Tire Co. v. Bentel, 184 Cal. 315, 193 P. 770; Estate of Chase, 169 Cal. 625, 147 P. 461), and may not now invoke the aid of this remedy in prohibition to serve the purposes of the appeal which has already been dismissed.

[9, 10] The judgment herein, which was obtained by former counsel for Mrs. Hecker, was by its terms made payable to Barbara Hecker in the dual capacity of administratrix and sole heir of said estate. The entire estate being distributed to her, she became the successor in interest, as such distributee, to the fruits or said judgment. Blinn Lumber Co. v. McArthur, 150 Cal. 610, 89 P. 436. Barbara Hecker therefore is the only person entitled to enforce the judgment or to receive the amount due thereunder, and, since petitioner under the circumstances cannot possibly be called upon to pay the judgment a second time, it can make no difference to him whether he pays the amount thereof to Barbara Hecker as administratrix or as sole heir and distributee of said estate. Any question which might afterwards arise as to whether the money so paid belonged to the estate of her deceased son or to Barbara Hecker personally is a matter that must concern the estate's creditors and not its debtors. For the foregoing reasons we believe that the question of the validity of said order of substitution, which can in no sense be considered an amendment to the judgment, is not vital to the enforcement of said judgment. Moreover, a transferee's right of substitution is permissive, resting in the discretion of the court, and, under some circumstances, may be granted following the rendition of judgment. Fay v. Steubenrauch, 138 Cal. 656, 72 P. 156. Plaintiff was therefore afforded a complete and adequate remedy by appeal, to correct any irregularity growing out of the substitution herein; and this is true, even though a jurisdictional question be involved. Glougie v. Superior Court, 169 Cal. 675, 147 P. 972; Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal. 220, 74 P. 765; Jacobs v. Superior Court, 133 Cal. 364, 65 P. 826, 85 Am. St. Rep. 204; White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 54, 42 P. 471; Agassiz v. Superior Court, 90 Cal. 101, 27 P. 49; Johnston v. Superior Court, 4 Cal. App. 90, 87 P. 211. In that situation prohibition does not lie, the rules applying to immunity of judgments generally from collateral attack applying with equal force to orders of court. Galvin v. Palmer, 134 Cal. 426, 66 P. 572; Rowe v. Blake, 112 Cal. 637, 44 P. 1084; Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133; Agoure v. Peck, 17 Cal. App. 759, 121 P. 706.

For the reasons above stated, the writ is denied.

COSTELLO v. MARTIN BROS. et al.
(Civ. 2988.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 29, 1925.)

1. Landlord and tenant §103(1)—Lessor, on lessee's default, may either sue for installments due or terminate lease on nonpayment after demand.

On lessee's default in payment of rent, lessor has option of suing directly for installments of rent then due, allowing lease to continue in force, or of terminating lease in event of nonpayment after demand and notice.

2. Landlord and tenant §194(1)—On lessees surrendering premises under option given by lessor, latter could not recover rentals subsequent thereto.

Where lessees, who defaulted in payment of rent, exercised option given them by lessor and surrendered premises, lease thereby terminated, and lessor could not recover rentals due subsequent to such surrender.

3. Landlord and tenant §194(1)—Lessees surrendering premises under option given by lessor not exempt for liability for rent accruing prior thereto.

Though lessees' surrender of premises, pursuant to option given them by lessor, terminated lease as to lessor's right to rentals subsequent to such surrender, it did not affect lessees' liability for rent accrued prior to such surrender.

4. Landlord and tenant §94(1)—Where lessee vacated on notice, payment of accrued rent held not to keep lease in force.

Where lessor, on lessee's default, served notice requiring lessee to pay rent within three days or surrender possession, and lessee thereupon vacated premises, the fact that thereafter, and within the three days, he also paid the accrued rent, did not keep the lease in force.

5. Landlord and tenant §139(4)—Lessees of alfalfa land held not liable for destruction of alfalfa, resulting from general rise of water table in land.

Lessees of alfalfa land held not liable for destruction of alfalfa growing on land, due to general rise of water table in land, where to preserve alfalfa, lessees would have had to drain whole irrigation district.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of lease by George Costello against Martin Bros., a copartnership, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Levinsky & Jones, of Stockton, and E. H. Christian and Ernest S. Leslie, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Berry & Watson and Hubert H. Briggs, all of Stockton, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff leased certain lands to defendants for the term of five years from the 1st day of October, 1919; that defendants went into possession under the lease; that on the 17th day of August, 1923, they "abandoned the said premises and informed the plaintiff that they * * * would no longer be bound by any of the terms of the said lease"; that the plaintiff, since such abandonment, has diligently endeavored to procure a tenant for the premises, but has been unable to do so; and that by reason of said abandonment he has been damaged in the sum of $4,225.

For a second cause of action it is alleged:

That the defendants "failed to keep all of the alfalfa on said premises in first-class condition; that they failed to seed and re-seed, tend, and irrigate the said alfalfa in accordance with the most approved methods of farming, as they had in said lease covenanted to do, but allowed the said alfalfa on said premises to decay and become of little or no value, thereby diminishing or reducing the value of the said lands in the sum of $200 per acre."

The complaint alleges other breaches of the lease by the defendants, but the court found against the plaintiff thereon and such findings are not attacked on this appeal.

The answer alleges:

That the plaintiff "terminated said lease, * * * and notified the said defendants and each of them that said lease was terminated, and notified the said defendants and each of them to quit said premises, and that said lease would be of no further force and effect, and that the defendants or either of them would have no further right therein"; that pursuant to said notice and termination, "and at the request of the plaintiff, the said premises were surrendered to the plaintiff by the defendants and each of them, and plaintiff immediately accepted the surrender and entered into possession thereof."

In addition to denials of the allegations contained in plaintiff's alleged second cause of action, the answer alleges that:

"The principal and material inducement for the leasing of said premises, and which the plaintiff well knew, was the raising of alfalfa thereon for * * * dairy purposes; that at the time of the leasing of said premises the said lands thereof did produce and there was growing thereon a good and sufficient quantity of alfalfa; that thereafter, and notwithstanding the best efforts of the defendants in farming said premises as aforesaid, and notwithstanding that the defendants did re-seed and attempt to restore said alfalfa, said alfalfa during the year 1922 commenced to deteriorate and perish and continued to deteriorate and perish until the greater part thereof had entirely perished by reason of unfavorable soil and water conditions in said locality and not for the want of ordinary care on the part of the defendants or any of them, and the stand and growth of alfalfa on said premises did, on or about August 17, 1923, become entirely insufficient for said dairy purposes; and by reason thereof the defendants did on said 17th day of August, 1923, vacate the said premises and surrender the same to the plaintiff with his full consent to and acceptance of said surrender."

The court made findings of fact against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendants, substantially in the language of the answer, and gave the defendants judgment for costs of suit. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

The premises described in the complaint contain 120 acres of land, on which were buildings and fences suitable for dairy purposes. It was stipulated at the trial that at the time the defendants went into possession there was a first-class stand of alfalfa on all of the land.

The lease provided for the payment by the defendants of a monthly rental of $325, payable in advance on the 1st day of each month; "that said land is leased and taken for dairy purposes only and for no other purpose whatsoever;" that, "if default shall be made in the payment of the rents and or in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter said premises and remove all persons therefrom; * * * that time is of the essence of said agreement of the lessees to make said payments as above provided." On the 15th day of August, 1923, the plaintiff signed and caused to be served on defendants the following notice:

"Notice to Pay Rent.

"To Martin Bros., Tenant in Possession:

"You are hereby required to pay, within three days after the service on you of this notice, the rent of the premises hereinafter described, and of which you now hold possession, said rent now amounting to the sum of $450.00 from the 9th day of July, 1923, to the present 10th day of August, 1923. Or to deliver up possession of the said premises within said three days to George Costello or his attorney, E. H. Christian, who is hereby authorized to receive possession thereof, or any rent due or unpaid, from you, or I shall institute legal proceedings against you to recover possession of said premises, with treble rents, said premises are situated in the county of San Joaquin, state of California, and described as follows: As being the south twenty (20) acres of lot two (2) and also lots 63, 64A, and 64B, of the Naglee-Burk tract, of said county and state, and containing in all one hundred and twenty (120) acres, more or less.

"Reference is hereby made to that lease made by the parties hereto on the first day of October, 1919, and its terms made a part of this notice."

The defendants vacated the premises on the 17th day of August, 1923, and on the next day they paid all rent due up to the 31st of that month. The plaintiff moved onto the premises "the last part of August," 1923, and has resided there ever since. He endeavored to relet the premises to others, but was unable to do so, except for short periods and at small rentals. He commenced this action on the 5th day of September, 1923. The record is silent as to when the defendants first had notice of the action, other than that it shows they filed a demurrer to the complaint on the 1st day of October, 1923.

[1-4] On the defendants' default in payment of rent, at least two courses were open to plaintiff. He had the option to sue directly for the installments of rent then due, allowing the lease to continue in force, or to terminate the lease in the event of nonpayment after demand and notice. He elected to pursue the latter course, and by the foregoing notice he gave the defendants the option of paying the amount due within the time prescribed or surrendering possession. The defendants exercised the option given them by the notice by vacating the premises. Had they failed to avail themselves of either option, it is to be inferred from the contents of the notice that the plaintiff would have commenced an action of unlawful detainer against them. Had he recovered possession of the premises in such an action, he would have been entitled to judgment for rents due up to the time of such recovery, but he would not have been entitled in that action, or in any other action, to a judgment based upon subsequent rents or rental values. It is not perceived that a different rule should apply where a lessee voluntarily surrenders possession under one of the options given him by the lessor. The notice did not of itself terminate the lease. It was in the nature of an alternative offer which became effective upon the acceptance by defendants of one of the alternatives thereof. The case is unlike that of Downing v. Cutting Packing Co., 183 Cal. 91, 190 P. 455, where the lessor, after giving a similar notice to the lessees, abandoned the proceeding for a forfeiture of the lease within the three-day period, accepted payment of the overdue rent, and the lessees remained in possession. In that case, at page 96 (190 P. 457), it is said:

"If the notice had terminated the lease or created the forfeiture, or if Ibos and Roche [the lessees] desired that it should have that effect, it was their duty to vacate the premises on or before the expiration of the three-day period."

In this case the lessees did vacate the premises within the three-day period, and it must be held that the effect thereof was to terminate the lease. The fact that on the following day, also within the three-day period, the lessees paid the overdue rent is immaterial. Such payment was but the discharge of an obligation which they were bound to perform, and the time of such performance is of no consequence here; it being after the surrender of the premises. While the surrender of the premises, under the circumstances stated, terminated the lease as to the lessor's right to rentals subsequent to such surrender, it did not affect the lessees' liability for rent accrued prior to such surrender. Brewing Ass'n v. American P. Co., 59 Cal. App. 718, 723, 211 P. 817. If the defendants had not paid the accrued rent until after the expiration of the three-day period, or one day later than that on which it was actually paid, it could not be contended that the lease was continued in force. No reason appears why a different effect should be given to a payment made within that period but after the surrender of the premises in compliance with one of the options given by the notice.

[5] The evidence fully supports the findings of the court against plaintiff on his second alleged cause of action. The land in question lies in an irrigation district. Lands outside the district at a higher elevation than those within it are under irrigation. Several witnesses testified that during the years 1922 and 1923 the water table gradually rose in plaintiff's land and in other lands in the district to such level as to destroy most of the alfalfa growing thereon. The engineer of the district, an experienced irrigation engineer, testified:

"The first indications of a serious water logging of the land were developed in the summer of 1922. * * * The major cause of it is due to the irrigation of the higher lands."

On plaintiff's land in 1923, the water table "varied from 18 to 30 inches." That condition prevailed "to a major extent" throughout the district. "It destroyed the tap root of the alfalfa and to a certain extent destroyed the corona so there would be no production of any consequence." On plaintiff's land "most of it was in very bad shape." "Q. Would it be possible by the resowing, plowing, farming it in proper and farmer-like manner to get alfalfa to grow and produce ordinary fair crop with the water table as high in that land as you found it? A. No; can't be done." In 1921 the water table on plaintiff's land varied "from 4 to 6 feet" from the top of the ground. In 1922 it was from "2½ to 4 feet in this particular property." The rise in the water table "is due to the seepage through various strata of alluvial soils there. * * * It does not flow on the surface." In 1923 the district was "installing a pumping drainage unit which was not put in until the latter part of the summer, consequently there was a great accumulation of drainage water in there, and the drainage canal which, in relation to this ranch, flows practically along the south line, that was wholly full of water. The river was fairly high and * * * the water in the river is higher than this land, so a good area of this land that has been supplied lies between the hydrostatic pressures of the water surface and the ground waters to the south of it and also to the reaction of the river." If the drainage unit had been in operation in 1922, "it would naturally have been beneficial, but that benefit is something that is not brought about instantaneously; it takes time. * * * The reaction from the river * * * is quite decided. * * * When the tide backs up to the river, * * * the flow of water in the drainage ditches is reversed." The witness, testifying the latter part of March, 1924, further stated that since the drainage unit had been installed "the hydrostatic line * * * has uniformly receded throughout that country about 6 inches," and that "we had hopes that we would get it down so that there will be a growing plane of 4½ feet." He also testified that prior to the installation of the aforesaid pumping unit the district had in operation a drainage pump capable of discharging 6 second-feet of water, but that it "was totally inadequate to handle the water."

From the foregoing statement of facts it is clear that the defendants are not liable for the destruction of the alfalfa growing on the land at the time they went into possession. They could have saved such alfalfa or caused other alfalfa to be planted and successfully grown on the land only by operating pumps of sufficient capacity to keep the water table down to a growing level. It is usually true, and the evidence shows it to be true in this case, that the water table in a single parcel of land cannot be materially lowered as a separate unit, but that the draining of one parcel necessarily drains out the ground waters in the surrounding lands which are immediately connected therewith. In other words, it is impossible to drain one part of a reservoir without correspondingly lowering the water surface of the whole thereof. It was stipulated that there was a good stand of alfalfa on the land in February, 1922. The evidence shows without conflict that practically all of the alfalfa, except that on a few acres, was dead when defendants surrendered possession. The overwhelming weight of the evidence is to the effect that the destruction was due to the general rise of the water table in the land. The lease provides that—

"The lessees will farm said land * * * in a good and farmer like manner and in accordance with the usual custom or course of farming practiced in the neighborhood, and that they will keep all of the alfalfa on said premises in first-class condition and will seed and re-seed, tend and irrigate the said alfalfa in accordance with the most approved methods of farming."

In ascertaining the meaning of the covenant to "keep all of the alfalfa on said premises in first-class condition," consideration must be given to those parts of the sentence which immediately precede and those which follow the language last quoted. From the sentence as a whole it clearly appears that it was not the intention of the parties to make the lessees insurers of the stand of alfalfa growing on the land at the time of the execution of the lease, but rather that the parties contemplated that some of the alfalfa would die, in which event the lessees were to "seed and re-seed, tend and irrigate the said alfalfa in accordance with the most approved methods of farming." No "approved method of farming" would warrant the seeding of land to alfalfa where the original stand had been destroyed by the presence of an existing high-water table and any new stand must inevitably perish from the same cause. Neither would the "most approved method of farming" require the lessees to go to the great expense of draining the whole irrigation district in order to preserve the lessor's alfalfa or to develop a new crop, and it certainly was not within the contemplation of the parties that this should be done by the lessees. Since nothing of value would have resulted from re-seeding the land under the circumstances stated, the plaintiff has suffered no damage from the failure of defendants to do so, and the defendants were not required to do a vain thing. If this were an action for rent under a lease still in force, and the lessees were defending on the ground of the destruction of the alfalfa, other considerations might prevail, but, under the circumstances of this case, the defendants are not liable in damages, because they were without fault, and any attempt on their part to prevent or repair the injury suffered by plaintiff would have been futile and would have resulted in no benefit to him.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ANDURSKY. (Cr. 1261.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 31, 1925.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court.
Dec. 28, 1925.)

Criminal law §=878(4)—Findings on separate counts of information held inconsistent and conflicting so as not to support judgment of conviction.

Finding of not guilty on count of information which charged violation of the Juvenile Court Law in inducing girl to go with accused to room and having sexual intercourse, held inconsistent and conflicting with finding of guilty on count charging rape, the two counts concededly relating to the same transaction, and not to support judgment of conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

Solomon Andursky was convicted of rape. From an order granting a new trial, the People appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; Seawell, J., dissenting.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Chester C. Kempley, Dist. Atty., and E. L. Johnson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for the People.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Respondent was charged and found guilty of the crime of rape, alleged to have been committed on or about the 10th day of November, 1924, upon Martha E. Biggs, a female of the age of 15 years and not the wife of respondent. He was also charged in a second count of the information with the crime of violation of the Juvenile Court Law of the state of California (St.

1915, p. 1225), in that on or about the 10th day of November, 1924, he did cause, and tend to cause and encourage and induce, and endeavor to induce, said Martha E. Biggs, a female of the age of 15 years, to perform such acts and to follow such course of conduct and to so live as would manifestly tend to cause said minor to become and remain a person coming within the provisions of the said Juvenile Court Law, in that said defendant on the 10th day of November, 1924, did induce said Martha E. Biggs to remain away from her home and usual place of abode, and did then and there induce her to go with defendant to a room in a rooming house, and said defendant did then and there occupy the same bed in said room with said Martha E. Biggs, and did then and there accomplish acts of sexual intercourse with her.

The jury returned a verdict of "not guilty" as to the second count of said information. Thereafter respondent made a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against law in that the verdict finding him guilty of the crime of rape as charged in the first count of the information was inconsistent with the verdict acquitting him of the crime charged in the second count of the information, wherein it is alleged, among other things, that respondent accomplished acts of sexual intercourse with said minor. The court granted respondent's motion, and the people have appealed from said order.

It is conceded that the charges set forth in the two counts of the information grew out of and relate to the same transaction or state of facts. While they are not identical, the respondent is accused in each count of the commission of sexual intercourse with the said female minor, Martha E. Biggs. In the first count this is the sole charge against him, and in the second count the acts of sexual intercourse, together with other acts, are charged against the respondent in alleging a violation of the Juvenile Court Law. A verdict acquitting him of the crime of rape would not be equivalent to a finding that he was not guilty of the charge contained in count 2 of the information, for he may have enticed the minor from her home and taken her to his room in a rooming house and there occupied the same bed with her, which acts might reasonably be considered to be a violation of said act, and not have committed sexual intercourse with her. On the other hand, however, a verdict of acquittal of the charge contained in count 2 would necessarily be a finding on the part of the jury that he was not guilty of any of the acts charged against him in said count. It would therefore be a finding of the jury that he had not committed sexual intercourse with said minor. The jury therefore, by its verdict of guilty of rape as charged in count 1, found that the respondent had committed sexual intercourse with said minor, and by its verdict of not guilty of the charge contained in count 2 found that he had not committed said act of sexual intercourse. These two findings are inconsistent and conflicting, and, as such, they would not support a judgment of conviction. While this question appears never to have been directly before the appellate courts of this state, it has frequently been so held in other jurisdictions.

In Rosenthal v. United States (C. C. A.) 276 F. 714, the defendant was charged in one count with having bought and received stolen property with knowledge that it had been stolen, and in a second count with having the same property in his possession with like knowledge. The jury found him not guilty of the charge contained in the first count and guilty of that set out in the second count. Upon appeal the judgment was reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, for the reason that the two findings were wholly inconsistent and conflicting.

In Kuck v. State, 149 Ga. 191, 99 S. E. 622, a similar question was presented. In that case it was decided, reading from the syllabus:

"Where a person is accused in one count on a charge of misdemeanor, alleging that * * * the defendant did sell spirituous liquors, etc., and in another count of the same accusation it is alleged that the defendant on the same day did have, control, and possess spirituous liquors, etc., and the same evidence is relied on to convict under both counts, a verdict finding the defendant guilty on the first count, and not guilty on the second, is void for repugnancy."

See, also, State v. Akers, 278 Mo. 368, 213 S. W. 424; Second Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, § 1015; 16 C. J. § 2596.

These authorities appear to sustain the order of the trial court in granting respondent a new trial. Said order is therefore affirmed.

MILLER et ux. v. TOWN OF SEBASTOPOL et al. (Civ. 2990.)(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 23, 1925.)1. Municipal corporations ⇨293(2)—Resolution of intention to improve street held to cover part of street not improved by gutters.

A resolution of intention by board of trustees of town ordering improvement on part of avenue for full width of roadway, except where gutters are now constructed, means that improvement, instead of covering full width of street, shall be extended only to gutter, but is not intended to exclude entire width of street in front of gutters, as it is a matter within range of common experience that street might require repaving though gutters be in good condition.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨513(7)—Evidence held to show no "constructed gutter."

Evidence held to show that there was no constructed gutter in front of plaintiff's house within meaning of resolution of intention to improve avenue for full width of roadway, except where gutters are now constructed; "constructed gutter" is one so constructed as to serve in full or proper measure purposes of conduit for carrying off of water.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨293(2)—Resolution of intention to improve street held to refer to gutters of character contemplated by improvement.

Resolution of intention by board of trustees ordering improvement on avenue except where gutters are now constructed is intended to declare that gutters existing when work was begun should be such as corresponded with character of work of improvement as called for by plans and specifications in resolution.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨330(4)—Proceedings for improvement held not void because restricting purchase of materials.

Proceedings for improvements of streets held not void because they require contractor to purchase materials from certain parties at fixed price, thereby preventing competitive bidding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by John F. Miller and wife against the Town of Sebastopol, a municipal corporation, and E. F. Jewell and others, as trustees thereof. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

G. W. Libby, of Sebastopol, and H. C. Symonds, of San Francisco, for appellants.

E. S. Page, of Oakland, for respondents.

HART, J. This action was instituted by the plaintiffs to relieve their property from the lien of an assessment imposed thereon by virtue of the provisions of the street improvement laws of the state for the improvement of the street, in the town of Sebastopol, upon which said property is situated, and to secure an injunction against the issuance of bonds in pursuance of the provisions of the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1441), "to represent and be secured by unpaid assessments for such improvement." The relief prayed for in the complaint was granted and a decree entered accordingly. A motion for a new trial by defendants was denied. From the judgment the defendants prosecute this appeal.

The trial court found that the resolution of intention to improve the street upon which the property of the plaintiffs abuts, by its terms, as construed in the light of the evidence, does not include, or, rather, excludes, the said property from the operation thereof, and upon such finding predicated its judgment, and that finding presents the principal point of controversy here. Counsel, in their briefs, discuss some other points, which will be given due attention.

[1] The part of the resolution of intention which is important here reads as follows:

"Resolved, that it is the intention of the board of trustees of the town of Sebastopol to order the following work to be done and improvement to be made in said town, to wit:

"That the portion of Bodega avenue, for the full width of the roadway thereof, except where gutters are now constructed, from a line parallel and distant one hundred and eighty (180) feet southwesterly along Bodega avenue from the southwesterly line of South Main street projected northwesterly, to the southwesterly line of Florence avenue projected southeasterly, be improved as follows: * * * That concrete curbs be constructed along both sides of said portion of Bodega avenue above described, of the size, in the manner, and at the places as shown by said plans and specifications, except where said concrete curbs are already constructed to line and grade."

The said resolution further provided that the work and improvement therein referred to "is to be done in accordance with the plans and specifications made therefor by the town engineer, * * * which plans and specifications are now on file in the office of the town clerk of said town of Sebastopol, and are hereby referred to and made a part hereof."

The views of counsel diverge upon the meaning of the language of the resolution of intention which, as given above, is in italics. The plaintiffs contend that that language means that where, at the time the resolution of intention was passed by the council or trustees, gutters had been constructed and were in existence in front of any property abutting upon the street to be improved, and included within the district to be improved, then that part of the street is and was intended to be excluded from the operation of the resolution: that is, no work of improvement was to be done on that part of such street. The defendants contend that the language referred to merely means that the full width of the street or the roadway thereof shall be improved except in those instances where "gutters are now constructed," in which case the improvement, instead of covering the full width of the street, shall be extended only to the gutter, or include only that part of the width of the street which is not already improved by the construction thereon of gutters. In other terms, the language means, as the defendants conceive, that where gutters have already been constructed, that part of the width of the street that is so improved and used shall not be included in the work of improvement.

We are not in accord with the plaintiffs' notion of the meaning of the language in question. The width of streets of towns and cities is from curb to curb, of which a small part is always devoted to the purposes of gutters. The street, or a portion thereof, concerned in the proceeding before us had once before been paved, and, it may be assumed, gutters in some places constructed thereon. It is obviously true that while a street, although well paved, will, in the course of time, wear out or become so impaired as to render it unfit and even unsafe for use and so require repaving, the gutters properly constructed thereon when the street was first paved will still remain in good condition, sufficient in all respects for the purpose they are intended to serve. This is so because, manifestly, streets are subject to more violent and perhaps more constant use than are gutters. All these are matters that come within the range of common experience. Hence, when the governing board of a city or town proposes, by the authorized legal methods, to order the improvement of a street, once paved and improved, quite naturally and justly anticipating that the gutters constructed thereon at the time of the first improvement would or might be sufficient for the proposed new improvement of the street, it would so frame its proposition to repave the street as to exclude therefrom that portion of the street upon which sufficient gutters had previously been and "are now" constructed, thereby relieving the owners of property abutting upon the street to be improved, and which must stand for the expense of the improvement, of the additional financial burden which would be entailed if the full width of the street, from curb to curb, were repaved. Thus we have the reason underlying and prompting the insertion in a proposal to improve streets of such a provision as the one under consideration. This view is, we think, conclusively established by the consideration that the interpretation of the provision in question, as given by the plaintiffs, would, in many instances of its practical application, produce absurd consequences. If, for illustration, several blocks of a street or avenue were included within the district thus to be improved, and there were gutters "now constructed" along the street or avenue in one of the blocks, that portion of the street or avenue would be excepted from the operation of the resolution, even though it were true that such portion of the street would be in need of improvement, even in greater need thereof than any other part or portion of such street. Indeed, it is not impossible that such a situation might arise where one block only of the street was proposed to be improved. It might happen that in front of a single piece of property in such block there existed a well-constructed gutter, while in front of the other property in the same block there was no "constructed gutter"; that is, a gutter so constructed as that it will properly function according to its purposes. In such case, obviously, upon the assumption of the correctness of plaintiffs' interpretation of the language in question, a portion of the street in one block would not be subject to the terms of the resolution, albeit a particular portion of such street might require repaving, or be in even greater need of such improvement than any other part or portion of the street in such block. The possibility that a situation so absurd could and might arise entirely forecloses any and all justification for holding that it was the intention of the trustees to ascribe to the language in question the meaning claimed for it by plaintiffs.

It is to be conceded that the sentence embracing the exception, as punctuated, is, on first blush, apt to be misleading. If the comma at the end of the word "avenue" in the sentence, were omitted, the language would be clearer in expressing the meaning which we are convinced it was intended to bear. At any rate, we cannot believe that, upon careful reflection, any other conclusion, as to the meaning of the exception provided in the resolution of intention and now under consideration and as to the intention of the trustees with respect to the scope thereof, can reasonably be justified than that to which we have been persuaded.

[2] Upon the foregoing considerations alone a reversal of the judgment would be required. But we are further of the conviction that the evidence does not support the finding that, at the times mentioned herein, a gutter was "constructed" in front of the property of plaintiffs. The plaintiff John F. Miller testified that, on the 26th day of August, 1921 (the date of the adoption and passage of the resolution of intention), "there was a gutter constructed in front of my house or place on Bodega avenue, in the town of Sebastopol." This was the full extent of his testimony brought out on direct examination on the subject of the gutter. On cross-examination he testified:

"Q. What character of gutter was constructed? A. It was a macadam gutter.

"Q. In what way was it constructed? A. Well, it was graveled the same as the street; the street and the gutter was all the same thing.

"Q. Simply the dirt in its natural condition, wasn't it, practically? A. Well, it was a graveled street, and there was a graveled gutter there also.

"Q. In other words, the street simply went down lower for the water to run along the curb? A. No, sir; it was curbed that way.

"Q. What? A. I say, it was curbed that way when the street was in before; when they put the gravel on the street they made the street and the gutter.

"Q. Was there any constructed gutter? A. Well, yes, there was a constructed gutter there.

"Q. Constructed separately from the street? A. How is that?

"Q. Was there any gutter that was constructed separately from the street? A. Well, the street and the gutter was all one, just the same as it is now.

"Q. So that the gutter was just the same as the street, was it? A. Well, it was a gravel gutter, yes, and a gravel street.

"Q. It was the same material, the street came right down to the gutter, of the same material? A. Yes, it was gravel."

Joseph Frates, for the plaintiff, testified:

That the gutter was "constructed apparently at the same time the street was constructed, and of the same material" (that is, of gravel); that "the street just came down into a lower place where the water ran. And a curb was run on the extreme sides of the street, and the gutter and the curb meet.

"Q. What kind of a curb? A. Wooden curb.

"Q. A wooden curb, was it? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And this portion of the gutter, similarly constructed to the street, ran up to this wooden curb? A. Yes, sir."

Charles E. Mueller, town engineer, who prepared the plans and specifications for the work of improvement, testified that there was in front of the property of plaintiffs nothing more than a gutter line formed by the sloping of the street to the curb; that no gutter was constructed there prior to the time work under the present proceedings was begun; that the gutter line in front of said property was scarcely a ditch, the base or surface of which was formed of rocks; that it was not what is known as and understood to be a constructed gutter. In short, the witness declared that in front of plaintiffs' property "there was nothing called a gutter; it was anything but a gutter; it did not serve the purpose of a gutter." He further stated that the plans "show a pavement from curb to curb in front of the property of plaintiffs," and that they also called for a curb in front of said property; that is, a curb of concrete and the pavement to be extended to the curb, but do not specifically provide for a gutter.

[3] The foregoing is substantially all the oral testimony upon the question whether there was a gutter in front of the property of plaintiffs at the times mentioned, and it is clear therefrom that there did not exist in front of said property at the time the resolution of intention was adopted by the board of trustees, or at the time the work of improvement was begun, a gutter that would serve in full or proper measure the purposes of such a conduit or passageway for the carrying off of water. This is clearly enough shown to be true by the testimony of the plaintiff John F. Miller, himself, and that of his witness Frates. According to their testimony, there was nothing in the shape of a gutter before the property involved herein but the depression necessarily formed by the sloping of the street, as originally macadamized, towards and to the curb line in front of said property. The base or surface of the depression was made of rock or gravel, and the curb of wood, but the construction and the condition thereof by reason of such construction, so testified the town surveyor (and in this he was not contradicted), was such that it would practically be no gutter at all as a part of the work proposed to be done and which was done under the plans and specifications adopted in the proceedings involved herein. It is undoubtedly true that by the language, "gutters now constructed," the trustees meant to declare in the resolution of intention adopted in the present proceedings that the gutters existing when the work was begun should be such in the general character of construction as would correspond, at least approximately, with the character of the work of improvement of the street as called for by the plans and specifications, as briefly outlined in the resolution of intention.

Upon the present branch of the case we are satisfied that the testimony is practically without conflict in showing that, prior to the time of the doing of the work of improvement under the proceedings with which this appeal is concerned, there were no gutters constructed and in existence in front of the property of plaintiffs, within the meaning of the phrase "gutters now constructed," as used in the resolution of intention.

[4-6] Other points urged by plaintiffs in support of the judgment are: (1) "That the proceedings are void because they require the contractor to purchase materials from Warren Bros. at a fixed price, thereby preventing competitive bidding." (2) That the proceedings are void for the reason that an unreasonable or unwarranted burden was imposed upon the contractor by reason of the requirement by the specifications that he (the contractor) shall himself be liable for all loss or damage resulting from "any unforeseen construction or difficulties" encountered in the prosecution of the work. (3) That the warrant and return signed by the contractor, duly verified, "stating the nature and character of the demand," was not returned to the superintendent of streets and recorded by that officer, as required by law. All these points were presented and urged in the recent case of Woodworth v. Town of Sebastopol (Cal. App.) 236 P. 981, and were, in an opinion by Presiding Justice Finch, held to be without merit. The points are fully considered in that case, and there is, therefore, no need of considering them herein.

For the reasons herein stated, the judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Howard W. Ballard was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Walter Duane, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment convicting him of a felony, to wit, obtaining money by false pretenses. The record presents the following facts, which appellant contends are insufficient to sustain the verdict of guilty.

About April, 1922, defendant met the complaining witness, Johnsen, upon a ferryboat traveling between San Francisco and Oakland. Johnsen was a deckhand, and defendant was a passenger on the boat. Defendant engaged Johnsen in conversation, and inquired if he had any money. Johnsen said he had about $2,000 in the bank and was getting 4 per cent. interest upon it. Defendant told him that he (Johnsen) was getting too old to work such long hours and said: "I can make it better for you than that, and if you come to my office for every dollar you invest, I guarantee next October you will have to work no more." Johnsen said he couldn't come to defendant's office, because he had no leisure time. Defendant inquired where he lived, and was given the address. The following day defendant called at Johnsen's home, and said:

"Mr. Johnsen, you come down; we are having a stockholders' meeting to-day. You dig up a thousand dollars, and by October you will have $5 for every one you invest."

Johnsen replied that he could not come, and defendant said:

"Three o'clock is the stockholders' meeting; got to have the money in by that time."

Johnsen thereupon went to the bank with defendant in defendant's automobile, and withdrew $1,000 and gave it to defendant. The next day Johnsen received through the mail a receipt reading as follows:

"I hereby subscribe the sum of $1,000 for preliminary purposes to be used as such in the Lafayette Oil & Gas Company, now organizing; such sum to participate in the development fund as an investment, to share pro rata in all profits and dividends which may accrue hereafter from the actual organization of said corporation. Signed this 22d day of April, 1922.

"H. A. Johnsen.

"I, Howard W. Ballard, have this day received of H. A. Johnsen the sum of $1,000 to be used for the purposes stated above.

"Howard W. Ballard."

About May 11, 1922, defendant again called at Johnsen's home and said he wanted $300 more, explaining:

"We are taking up 300 acres more of land. All the rest of the stockholders are willing to do it, and you must follow up. By October 1st you will have lots of money. You will have five or six dollars to every one you invest."

Mrs. Johnsen, who was a woman over 80 years of age, hearing this conversation, expressed her doubt of the outcome of the investment, and began to cry. Defendant said:

"Don't think that of me. By October 11 you will have lots of money and you will have a limousine, and Harry will drive you around, Mrs. Johnsen."

Johnsen demurred, but finally yielded to defendant's persuasion, and went to the bank and withdrew $300, which he gave to defendant, and for which he received a receipt similar to the one hereinbefore set forth. At this time defendant stated that the company was formed and they were having stockholders' meetings, and it was called the Lafayette Oil Company. Johnsen heard nothing more from defendant until about September 11, when defendant called at Johnsen's home about 6 or 7 o'clock in the morning. Johnsen testified that defendant said:

"I come here to tell you we took out 300 more acres of land, adjoining land, and all the rest of the stockholders is in for it again, and I want $300."

Johnsen said he did not have $300 to give to defendant, and defendant told him to come to the city as soon as possible, and bring the money. Johnsen and his wife came to defendant's office in San Francisco, and brought him $300 additional. Johnsen testified that this money was obtained from him to buy another 300 acres of land for the Lafayette Oil Company. It also appears that in October Johnsen went to the defendant's office, and defendant attempted to get some more money from him, but failed. Johnsen testified that he believed the representations made to him by defendant, and, because of them, parted with his money.

Defendant's own testimony is to the effect that no corporation known as the Lafayette Oil Company was ever formed, and no additional land, nor any land, was ever purchased; that, when he secured the first $1,000 from Johnsen, he had a lease, individually, of some land in Contra Costa county upon which he hoped to find oil; that on October 24, 1922, together with two other persons as trustees, he executed a declaration of trust, by which said persons declared themselves trustees of a trust to be designated as the California Oil & Gas Company. This declaration of trust was never filed and was never operative. Defendant stated there was an "understanding" that he would turn over his lease to these trustees, and that this trust declaration with reference to the California Oil & Gas Company was to take the place of the incorporation of the Lafayette Oil Company. However, defendant admits that Johnsen was never consulted about this change, nor given any interest in the California Oil & Gas Company, and, indeed, this legal entity attempted to be created appears never to have had any assets at all. Defendant admits that he never executed any assignment or transfer of the lease which he held to the trustees, but was content to allow the matter to rest upon the assumption that "there is a little honor among men." It also appears that this lease and its extensions had expired at the time of the execution of the declaration of trust, so there was nothing that could be assigned.

Later defendant closed his offices in San Francisco, and when he was arrested he was in Los Angeles, promoting another oil company, known as the Lessors' Oil Company. His general defense was that, if he had not been arrested in July, 1923, he would have acquired some valuable land and oil rights for the last-named company, and would have added these to the Contra Costa county lease, and would have given the subscribers to the stock of the proposed Lafayette Oil Company the benefit of an income realized from such sources.

[1] It is not surprising that the jury refused to take this statement of future intentions as an evidence of good faith, in view of the many incidents appearing in the record which indicate bad faith, and in view of the fact that the Contra Costa county lease had expired, and that some practical legal obstacles would prevent subscribers to the stock of one company without assets from participating in the assets of a different company. Several other victims of defendant testified that they had given him money upon representations similar to those made to defendant. To some of these he gave receipts showing them to have subscribed to the stock of a corporation to be called the Contra Costa Oil Company. The testimony of all of these persons, taken together, gives a very clear picture of defendant's methods and activities. The question of fraudulent intent was one for the jury. People v. Boyd, 67 Cal. App. 292, 227 P. 783.

The count of the information upon which he was convicted charged that defendant, on or about September 11, 1922, by false and fraudulent representations, obtained Johnsen's money by falsely and fraudulently representing to said Johnsen that there was then being organized by him, under the laws of California, a corporation to be named Lafayette Oil & Gas Company, for the purpose of drilling for oil in the county of Contra Costa, Cal., and that the said Ballard was authorized on behalf of the organizers of said corporation to solicit and receive subscriptions for shares of the capital stock; whereas there was no such corporation being organized by Ballard or any one else, and Ballard was not authorized on behalf of the organizers of said corporation to solicit and receive subscriptions of money for such stock, or for any purpose for said corporation, as Ballard well knew; that Johnsen believed and relied upon said fraudulent representations, and was deceived thereby, and induced thereby to deliver to Ballard $300 for the purchase of said stock.

[2] The foregoing recital of testimony taken from the record establishes the allegations in the information, and is an answer to appellant's position that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. It is clear that defendant obtained Johnsen's money by representing that he was organizing a corporation to be known as the Lafayette Oil & Gas Company. He was not organizing such a corporation. The most that can be said, even from his own testimony, is that he was thinking about doing so. He never put this thought into execution, if he entertained it. He stated that he decided to change the name to California Oil & Gas Company, and this might have furnished him some excuse, if he had organized such a corporation, or even filed and operated under the declaration of trust, naming such a legal entity, and had thereafter transferred assets, such as he had represented the Lafayette Oil Company to have, to said California Oil & Gas Company, and permitted the subscribers to the Lafayette Company to share in the assets of the California Company. But he did none of these things. The facts appear to be that the money raised to purchase 300 acres of land for the nebulous Lafayette Company was never used to purchase any land, and the oil lease supposed to belong to this company to be created was never assigned to the California Company, and, indeed, had expired when the declaration of trust was executed. The prosecution established the false representations as to the creation and existence of the Lafayette Oil & Gas Company, and that is sufficient to sustain the verdict. People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 P. 521; People v. Gibbs, 98 Cal. 661, 33 P. 630.

[3] There are some assignments of error in the admission of testimony by the trial court, such as the objection to the testimony of a deputy from the office of the corporation commissioner, who testified that no permit had been issued for the selling of securities of the Lafayette Oil Company. It is contended that, as the defendant was not charged with the offense of selling stock without a permit, the testimony should have been excluded. It does not appear that this testimony could have prejudiced the defendant, and certainly, with a record such as the one before us, we would not be justified in reversing the judgment for an error of this kind, if we concede it to be such, where it appears that justice has been done by the verdict and judgment.

There are no other matters requiring discussion, and the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Alexander McDougal was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a female minor child. From an order denying motion for new trial and from the judgment plaintiff appeals, and the Attorney General moves to dismiss appeal from the judgment and appeal from order denying new trial. Motion to dismiss appeal from judgment granted, motion to dismiss appeal from order denying motion for new trial denied, and order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

Mulligan & Rysek, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The defendant was charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor child; before any evidence was introduced, defendant's counsel objected to its introduction on the ground that the information did not charge a public offense; the objection was overruled, a trial was had, and a verdict of conviction was rendered; motion for new trial was made and denied. At the time fixed for pronouncing judgment and sentence the trial court made an order that the defendant be placed upon probation. The appeal purports to be from the order denying the motion for new trial, as well as from the judgment. The Attorney General moved to dismiss the appeal upon two grounds, the first of which was that the application required by section 1247 of the Penal Code had not been filed. The record did not at first contain this application, but it appears that it has since been filed, and has been added to the record on appeal, so that no further mention need be made of this point.

[1] The second contention of the people as a basis for the motion is that it does not appear from the record that the defendant appeals from the final judgment of conviction and sentence. It is not clear whether or not this claim has been abandoned; at any rate it is untenable. An order denying a defendant's motion for new trial is one from which an appeal may be taken. People v. Robinson, 17 Cal. App. 273, 119 P. 527; People v. Hartman, 23 Cal. App. 72, 137 P. 611.

We now proceed to consider the merits of the appeal. The principal grounds urged by appellant are that the information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, and that the evidence does not show that the defendant committed any crime. The acts charged to have been committed and alleged to constitute an offense of which the defendant was convicted are that:

He "did on the 28th day of September, 1924, * * * willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously contribute to the delinquency and dependency of (a child 12 years of age) by then and there willfully and unlawfully accosting (her) on the public streets of the city of Ontario, and by then and there engaging her in conversation, and by then and there suggesting that the said (minor) visit the room of said Alexander McDougal in a hotel, and the said Alexander McDougal then and there promised the said (minor) that if she would visit him in his room at his hotel he would give her candy, and would give her $5 in money, and did thereafter on the same day, pursuant to said conversation, meet the said (minor) on said public streets of the city of Ontario, and did proceed with the said (minor) along the said public streets and along an unlighted alley in the direction of the room occupied by the defendant in a hotel in the city of Ontario, and did then and there attempt to take the said (minor) to his said room, as aforesaid. All of which acts would manifestly cause the said (minor) to become a delinquent and dependent child and would have a tendency to cause the said (minor) to lead a dissolute, lewd and immoral life."

[2] Section 21 of the Juvenile Court Law (Stats. 1915, p. 1225), provides:

"Any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of twenty one years to come within the provisions of any of subdivisions one to thirteen inclusive of section one of this act, or which act or omission contributes thereto, or any person who shall, by any act or omission, or by threats, or commands, or persuasion, induce or endeavor to induce any such person, under the age of twenty one years, to do or to perform any act or to follow any course of conduct, or to so live as would cause or manifestly tend to cause any such person to become or to remain a person coming within the provisions of any of subdivisions one to thirteen inclusive of section one of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

Subdivision 11 of section 1 of the act designates as within its provisions any person under the age of 21 years, "who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life."

The purpose of this statute is to make criminal the commission of any act tending to cause minors to become dependent or delinquent. It is intended to protect and safeguard children from those influences which would manifestly incline them toward entering a state of dependency or delinquency. People v. Bergotini, 172 Cal. 717, 158 P. 198, is strongly relied upon by appellant. In that case, the defendant was charged with inducing the mother of certain children to live an immoral life and otherwise to misconduct herself. The weakness of the information was held to be that there was nothing to indicate that the pursuit of this wrongful course by her affected the children in that way, but, on the contrary, it affirmatively appeared from other allegations of the information that, before the defendant's baneful influence was exercised upon the mother, the children had no parental control, and the home in which they lived was a place of depravity. There was nothing in the pleading or proof to show how Bergotini's influence affected the children or that it did affect them. There was an utter lack of showing that his action operated directly upon the minors. The same situation existed in People v. DeLeon, 35 Cal. App. 467, 170 P. 173. But, as distinguished from these cases, whatever the defendant McDougal is charged with having done operated directly against the young girl. Here the question is primarily one of fact. In so far as determining whether or not the information states a public offense, it is just this: Would the defendant's conduct toward her cause or manifestly tend to cause her to become a delinquent child? For a man to accost a young girl and invite her to his room in a hotel might be considered by a jury as in itself suggestive of such improprieties as would tend to reduce the moral standards of the child, and encourage her to enter upon a course of conduct manifestly tending to induce her to become a delinquent person. If such advances are reasonably susceptible of this interpretation, the later clandestine meeting with the child and attempt to take her through a dark alley to the man's room in a hotel alleged in the information would clearly and in a more marked degree, tend to produce the same evil result. The facts pleaded were such that the jurors would have a right to judge this defendant's conduct in the light of human experience. They would be entitled as jurors, as well as men, to recognize the fact that it would be rare indeed that a man would seek by gifts of candy and money to induce a girl to go to his room for purposes of purity and with good intentions. It was well said in People v. Baker, 38 Cal. App. 28, 175 P. 88, that:

"It may very properly be said that a definite duty is owed by all persons to abstain from doing any act having a tendency to cause a minor to become a delinquent or dependent."

[3] A man of the defendant's age, and, for that matter, all men, owe a definite duty to refrain from interfering with other people's children in any manner calculated to take such children from their parents' control, and which tends to lead them into immoral habits of thought or action. It is true, as suggested by appellant, that where two conclusions may reasonably be drawn concerning the defendant's conduct, one assigning a guilty and the other an innocent purpose thereto, it is the law that innocence will be presumed rather than guilt. But to give due weight to the presumption of innocence does not require that jurors blind their eyes and shackle their reason in viewing the evidence and in judging the defendant's intentions. The defendant's advances toward this little girl as pleaded in the information were not as consistent with innocence as with guilt. Likewise, it was fairly within the province of the jury to believe that the proposal and acts of the defendant as alleged in the information would and did suggest to the child the wicked purposes existing in the man's heart. It follows that this course of conduct upon his part might reasonably be believed to have manifestly tended to cause the child so mistreated to become a delinquent person as defined in section 1, subdivision 11, of the Juvenile Court Law.

[4, 5] It is urged that the proof does not sustain the verdict of guilty. We are authorized to consider this point inasmuch as the defendant's counsel objected to the introduction of any evidence, before the same was admitted, upon the ground that the information did not charge a public offense. There are facts shown in evidence from which we might conclude that this minor child was of so high character that she probably was not injuriously affected by her experience with the defendant. She immediately informed others of the defendant's proposal, particularly her parents, and she seems to have willingly assisted in the defendant's apprehension. These were facts proper for the consideration of the jury, as well as those tending to establish the defendant's guilt, but surely it cannot be said by a reviewing court that as a matter of law a child of unquestioned character may not be the subject of criminal act under the inhibition of the statutory provisions here involved. It is important to bear in mind, in this type of case perhaps more than the ordinary, that the jury alone have an opportunity to observe and thus form a reasonable opinion upon the important element of the appearance of the man, and of the child, and their conduct as witnesses. It cannot be declared that because this child was of high character the defendant's conduct could not reasonably have tended to cause her delinquency, when the same conduct toward another child not so pure minded would manifestly have had that result. Of course, it is fair to presume that to a child of chaste character and unsullied mind acts and speech grossly immoral in their nature would be repulsive in the extreme. Such a child might so loathe the suggestion of lewdness as to cling even more firmly than before to her high standards and chaste life. Yet, it is inconceivable that anyone would advance the argument that immoral acts performed in the presence of or attempted against the most pure-minded minor would not constitute an offense denounced by the provisions of the law above quoted as manifestly tending to cause even that type of child to lead a "dissolute, lewd, and immoral life." Unquestionably these matters are entirely within the province of the jury, and it is equally clear that, being matters of fact, they constitute a realm in which an appellate court has no right to act as long as the record contains facts which the jury might reasonably view in such a light as to establish the defendant's guilt.

[6, 7] We conclude that there is no merit in the contention that the information failed to charge a public offense upon the grounds discussed. If the facts pleaded would permit of the construction above indicated, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the facts alleged in the information do not constitute a public offense. The information sufficiently charges the defendant with contributing to the dependency and delinquency of the minor child named therein, in so far as meeting the requirements that the acts he is charged to have committed were done willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously; for it is not necessary that these words "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously" be repeated in connection with each averment of the acts detailed and enumerated as making up the charge contained in the information, and which was alleged to have been committed "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously."

The evidence produced by the prosecution fully sustained each allegation of fact. It follows from the verdict of guilty that the jury believed that McDougal's conduct toward the child at least manifestly tended to cause her to lead a dissolute, lewd, and immoral life. We cannot say as a matter of law that they were wrong.

The motion to dismiss the appeal from the purported judgment is granted; the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is denied; the order denying motion for new trial is affirmed.

WRYNN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 11617.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1925.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨623—Reporter's transcript on appeal held filed within time prescribed by statute.

Where proceedings on motion for new trial were terminated by denial of motion by operation of law on February 11, 1925, appellant, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939, 953a, had until February 21, 1925, to file notice of desire to appeal under section 953a, and reporter had until March 15th to prepare and file the transcript, and hence transcript filed on March 10, 1925, was in time.

2. Appeal and error ⇨623—Appellant's right to statutory time for preparation of transcript not impaired because filing notice of intention to appeal and request for transcript before required time.

That appellant filed her notice of intention to appeal and request for a reporter's transcript before termination of proceedings on motion for new trial did not cut off her right to statutory time for preparation of transcript after termination of such proceedings, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 953a.

3. Appeal and error ⇨628(1)—Appellant held not chargeable with lack of diligence in having transcript prepared.

Where notice of motion to terminate proceedings to procure record on appeal was served and filed two days before time expired within which appellant could file her notice and request for a transcript, appellant was not chargeable with lack of diligence in having transcript prepared.

4. Mandamus ⇨57(1)—Writ of mandate to compel trial judge to certify reporter's transcript for appeal not denied because amendments not included.

Writ of mandate to compel trial judge to certify reporter's transcript for an appeal will not be denied because amendments to record were not incorporated therein, since it was within his power to require such incorporation.

5. Mandamus ⇨16(1)—Mandate to compel trial judge to settle bill of exceptions on appeal from order terminating proceedings to procure record for an appeal will be denied.

Writ of mandate to compel trial judge to settle bill of exceptions on appeal from order terminating proceedings to procure record on appeal in probate proceeding will be denied, such order not being appealable under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3, and such order when erroneous not justifying refusal to certify transcript.

Application for writ of mandate by Josephine Marie Lee Wrynn against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco;

Frank H. Dunne, Judge thereof. Granted in part and denied in part.

Charles N. Douglas, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank H. Dunne, in pro. per.

SHENK, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent judge to certify the reporter's transcript on an appeal from a judgment taken pursuant to section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, and to settle a bill of exceptions as provided by section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, on an appeal from a special order made after said judgment was entered.

It appears from the petition that the petitioner instituted a contest of the will of Robert S. Lee, deceased, on the ground that she was a pretermitted heir of the deceased; that after trial the issue was determined adversely to her contention, and judgment to that effect was entered; that on December 11, 1924, notice of the entry of judgment was served on her; that on the 20th day of December, 1924, she filed with the clerk a notice of her intention to appeal from said judgment and a request that a reporter's transcript of the proceedings be prepared in accordance with the requirements of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure; that on said 20th day of December, 1924, she arranged with the reporter for his compensation for preparing the said transcript; that on the same day she served and filed a notice of motion for a new trial; that thereafter and within the time allowed by law she served and filed a notice of appeal from said judgment; that on February 16, 1925, the respondent court made and entered an order denying her motion for a new trial; that on February 19, 1925, one of the legatees under said will served and filed a notice of motion to terminate the proceedings pending in said court to procure a record on appeal, basing said motion on the ground that the petitioner had not proceeded with reasonable diligence in obtaining a transcript of the evidence to be used on said appeal and that more than 40 days had elapsed since the filing of the notice requiring the reporter to prepare said transcript; that on February 27, 1925, the respondent court heard and granted said motion; that no evidence was offered in support of said motion, and that the only evidence offered or received on said motion was the affidavit of petitioner's counsel to the effect that the said appeal was being prosecuted in good faith and that said counsel had made the necessary arrangement with the reporter to transcribe and complete said record on appeal; that on March 10, 1925, the reporter completed the said transcript and filed the same with the clerk as required by law; that said clerk thereupon gave notice of the time and place for the presentation of said transcript to the judge for certification; that the respondent judge refused to certify said transcript notwithstanding demand on him so to do; that the petitioner appealed from the order of the court terminating the proceedings for the preparation of the said transcript, prepared a bill of exceptions on said last-mentioned appeal, and presented the same, together with amendments thereto proposed by said legatee, to the said judge for settlement; that upon said presentation the respondent judge refused to settle said bill of exceptions and announced that he would not settle the same; that the said reporter's transcript is a full, true, and correct transcript of the proceedings had in said cause to which the same relate, and that the proposed bill of exceptions is a full, true, and correct record of all matters pertaining to the said motion to terminate said proceedings for certification of said transcript.

In response to an alternative writ of mandate duly issued herein, the respondent judge in propria persona filed an answer wherein he denies that said court denied the petitioner's motion for a new trial, and alleges that said motion was denied by operation of law on the 11th day of February, 1925; denies that on the hearing of the motion to terminate the proceedings for the preparation of the record on appeal no evidence was taken by said court in support of said motion, and alleges that said court took into consideration the state of the record in said proceeding in determining said motion, and further alleges on information and belief that the petitioner had not up to the time of the receipt of the notice of motion to terminate proceedings arranged with the reporter to prepare a complete or any record on appeal from said judgment; alleges that the affidavit of petitioner's counsel presented on the hearing of the motion to terminate proceedings consisted wholly of conclusions of law and did not state any fact showing diligence on the part of the petitioner in preparing said transcript; alleges that on the day said transcript was presented to him for certification he considered the same and decided that as the proceedings for the procurement of said record had been terminated for want of diligence on the part of petitioner the said court had no jurisdiction of the matter before it, and for that reason refused to certify said record. It is further denied that the said reporter's transcript is a full, or true, transcript of the proceedings had in said cause for the reason that the respondent's amendments to said record were not incorporated therein. It is also denied that said proposed bill of exceptions is a full, true, or correct record of all the proceedings on said motion for the same reason, to wit, that the respondent's amendments thereto were not incorporated therein.

On the return of the alternative writ and the filing of said answer, the clerk of this court was appointed as referee to take testimony on the issue raised by said answer as to whether or not the petitioner had made proper or any arrangements with the reporter to prepare a transcript of said record on appeal and to report his findings thereon. Testimony was duly taken and the referee has filed a transcript of the evidence before him and his findings thereon, which disclose that the arrangement which the petitioner made with the official reporter of the respondent court to prepare said transcript on appeal consisted of the oral agreement of counsel for petitioner with the said reporter to prepare said transcript and the promise of said counsel to pay for the same, which promise was accepted by the reporter as a satisfactory arrangement, and that said arrangement was made on the 20th day of December, 1924. No good reason has been advanced or otherwise appears why the arrangement between counsel for petitioner and the reporter for the preparation of said transcript at the time and in the manner found by the referee should not be deemed in all respects sufficient. Pursuant to said arrangement, the transcript was actually prepared in accordance therewith.

The question for determination is this: Was the said transcript prepared with due diligence and presented to the respondent judge for certification within the time provided by law? We think the question must be answered in the affirmative.

[1-4] Section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an appeal may be taken from a judgment or order of the superior court within 60 days from the entry of said judgment or order. If proceedings on motion for a new trial are pending, the time for appeal does not expire until 30 days after the order determining the motion for a new trial or other termination in the trial court of the proceedings upon such motion. The proceedings on the motion for a new trial in the present case were terminated by the denial of the motion by operation of law on the 11th day of February, 1925. Under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, the petitioner had 10 days from that date or until the 21st day of February, 1925, within which to file with the clerk the notice of her desire or intention to appeal under that section (Bernschein v. Whitaker, 175 Cal. 130, 165 P. 523), and the reporter had 20 days, or until March 15, to prepare and file the transcript. Such transcript was filed on March 10, 1925, and was therefore filed within the time prescribed by the statute. The notice of motion to terminate proceedings was served and filed on February 19, 1925, or 2 days before the time expired within which the petitioner could file her notice and request for a transcript. We think the petitioner under such circumstances should not be charged with lack of diligence in having the transcript prepared. Section 953a by its terms contemplates that the preparation of the reporter's transcript on appeal may abide the determination of a motion for a new trial, if one be pending, for the obvious reason that if the motion be granted the transcript may not be required. The fact that petitioner filed her notice of intention to appeal and request for a reporter's transcript before the required time should not operate to cut off or impair her right to the statutory time for the preparation of the transcript after the termination of the new trial proceedings. The denial in the answer that the said reporter's transcript is a full or true transcript of the proceedings for the reason that the respondent's amendments to said record were not incorporated therein does not constitute sufficient justification for refusal to certify the transcript, for the reason that it is within the power of the respondent court and the judge thereof to require said amendments to be incorporated in the transcript. No such requirement appears to have been made. No sufficient reason appears why the respondent judge should not be compelled to certify said transcript as requested by the petitioner.

[5] With reference to that portion of the petition herein which prays for the issuance of a writ of mandate to compel the respondent judge to settle a bill of exceptions on appeal from the order of February 27, 1925, terminating proceedings, it is obvious that the issuance of a writ of mandate for that purpose would be neither proper nor necessary to the full relief of petitioner. In the first place, said order is not an appealable order. It may be conceded to be a special order made after final judgment, but it is a special order in a probate proceeding and is not such an order as is made appealable by the third subdivision of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Estate of Winslow, 128 Cal. 311, 60 P. 931; Estate of Turner, 139 Cal. 85, 72 P. 718; Estate of Cahill, 142 Cal. 628, 76 P. 383; Estate of Spafford, 175 Cal. 52, 165 P. 1). Said order is not, therefore, reviewable on a separate appeal. In the second place, as said order was made before the expiration of the statutory time within which the proceedings which it purported to terminate could have been taken, the respondent court was in error in making the same. But such erroneous order may not justify a refusal to certify said transcript. When the transcript is settled as required herein, the petitioner has received all of the relief necessary to the perfection of her appeal and the question of settling the said proposed bill of exceptions becomes of no importance.

It is therefore ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue requiring the respondent judge to certify, as provided by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, the reporter's transcript on appeal from the judgment entered December 11, 1924.

In re LEE'S ESTATE. (S. F. 11595.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1925.)

Appeal and error ⇐628(2)—Motion to dismiss appeal on ground that no record had been prepared, denied.

Appeal will not be dismissed on ground that no record has been prepared and that proceedings for preparation of such record had been terminated by trial court, where it has been determined in a prior case that trial court was not justified in refusing to certify transcript and peremptory writ of mandate to compel him to do so has been ordered.

In Bank.

In the matter of the estate of Robert S. Lee, deceased. On motion to dismiss appeals from judgment and order of Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge. Motion denied as to judgment, and granted as to order.

Charles N. Douglas, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. W. Watson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is a motion to dismiss two appeals. The first is an appeal from a judgment entered on the 11th day of December, 1924, wherein it was adjudged that the contest of the will of said deceased by and on behalf of Josephine Marie Lee Wrynn was not well founded and ordering distribution of the said estate to the legatee named in said will. The motion is based on the alleged fact that no record on appeal has been prepared and that proceedings for the preparation of such record were terminated by the trial court on February 27, 1925. In the cause entitled Josephine Marie Lee Wrynn v. Superior Court et al. (S. F. No. 11617) 241 P. 849, this day decided, it was determined that the superior court and the judge thereof, respondents in said proceeding, were not justified in refusing to certify the reporter's transcript on appeal and ordering a peremptory writ of mandate to compel him to do so. The proceedings for the preparation of said record on appeal must be deemed to be pending before the superior court. There is therefore no proper basis for the dismissal of the appeal from said judgment, and the said motion is denied.

The second appeal sought to be dismissed is an appeal from the order made on the 27th day of February, 1925, terminating the proceedings for the preparation of said record on appeal. In the case of Josephine Marie Lee Wrynn v. Superior Court et al., supra, it was decided that said order was not an appealable order. On the authority of that case the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order of February 27, 1925, is granted, and said appeal is dismissed.

DOBLE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.
(S. F. 11554.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1925.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 31, 1925.)

1. Criminal law ☞1207—Conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act, committed prior to act making offense punishable, is punishable under Conspiracy Act of Penal Code.

Where act of conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act was committed before terms of act itself made such offense punishable, the penalty for such offense must be found, if at all, within Pen. Code, § 182, defining and providing punishment for criminal conspiracy.

2. Conspiracy ☞51—Conspiracy statute of Penal Code held applicable to conspiracies to commit all crimes, including conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act; "any crime."

Pen. Code, § 182, defining and providing punishment for criminal conspiracy, subd. 1 of which provided for punishment for conspiracies to commit "any crime," includes all crimes, whether felonies or misdemeanors, and whether defined or made punishable by Penal Code or by any law or statute of the state is applicable to conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act.

3. Conspiracy ☞51—First penal paragraph of conspiracy statute held to cover and punish only conspiracies to commit felonies punishable under Penal Code and those prohibited by fifth section of statute.

The first penal paragraph of conspiracy statute of Pen. Code, § 182, providing for punishment of conspiracy "to commit any felony or to commit any act injurious to public health or public morals, etc. * * * to the same extent as in this Code provided for the punishment of the said felony or act, respectively," held to cover and punish only conspiracies to commit felonies which are punishable under the Penal Code and conspiracies to commit acts prohibited by Pen. Code, § 182, subd. 5.

4. Conspiracy ☞51—Second penal paragraph of conspiracy statute may prescribe punishment for remaining offenses not made punishable under first penal paragraph.

Where Pen. Code, § 182, subd. 1, created offense of conspiracy to commit "any crime," the fact that the first penal paragraph of such statute only provided for punishment of conspiracies to commit those felonies defined in the Penal Code did not preclude the construction that the second penal paragraph thereof may not prescribe punishment for the remainder of offenses not made punishable under the first paragraph.

5. Conspiracy ☞51—Second penal paragraph of conspiracy statute prescribes punishment for conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act.

Conspiracy statute of the Penal Code, § 182, the second penal paragraph of which provided for punishment for conspiracies to do "any of the other acts described by this section," held to provide punishment for conspiracies to commit any and all misdemeanors not included in section 5 and conspiracies to commit all felonies prohibited by some general law of the state other than the Penal Code, which are provided for by the first penal paragraph, and included conspiracies to violate the Corporate Securities Act.

6. Criminal law ☞1207—Amendment of Corporate Securities Act to provide punishment for conspiracies to violate it did not indicate that Legislature assumed that such violations could not be made basis for charge under conspiracy statute of Penal Code.

Amendment of Corporate Securities Act by St. 1925, p. 962, to provide punishment for conspiracy to violate such statute, did not reflect an assumption by Legislature that, previous to the passage to such amendment, such a violation could not be made the basis of a conspiracy charge under Pen. Code, § 182.

7. Criminal law ☞147—Charge for crime, which is either felony or misdemeanor, at judge's discretion, stands as felony until judgment, and judgment of misdemeanor not retroactive as far as statute of limitations concerned.

In a prosecution within the purview of Pen. Code, § 17, providing that, when a crime is punishable either as a misdemeanor or a felony in discretion of trial court, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor after judgment imposing punishment other than imprisonment in state prison, held, charge stands as a felony charge for every purpose up until judgment; but if judgment is for misdemeanor, it does not have a retroactive effect as far as the statute of limitation against misdemeanors is concerned.

8. Criminal law ☞147—Jurisdiction of conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act not lost because of one-year statute of limitations against misdemeanors.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 182, for conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act, violation of which is either a felony or a misdemeanor, under section 14 of the act and within purview of Pen. Code, § 17, relative to prosecution for offenses constituting either felonies or misdemeanor, held, court did not lose jurisdiction of case because of one-year statute of limitation on misdemeanors, Pen. Code, § 801, for charge in such case, under section 17, stood as a felony until judgment, and judgment, if for a misdemeanor, would not be retroactive so far as statute of limitations was concerned.

Application for writ of prohibition by Abner Doble and others, to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco and Michael J. LAWLOR, J. Application for a writ of prohibition.

In an indictment by the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco, bearing date September 2, 1924, petitioners are charged by the first count thereof with a conspiracy under section 182 of the Penal Code, based on alleged violation of the Corporate Securities Act (Stats. 1917, p. 673). In six other counts petitioners are charged with certain specific violations of the said Corporate Securities Act, the punishment for which is prescribed by section 14 thereof. Petitioners interposed a demurrer to the indictment and to each and every count thereof. The demurrer was disallowed. A motion to set aside and dismiss the indictment was interposed and denied. On October 27, 1924, petitioners pleaded "not guilty" to the charges contained in the indictment and every count thereof. The trial of the general issue was thereupon set for January 12, 1925, whereupon the present application for a writ of prohibition was made.

In support of the application it is urged that the superior court and Hon. Michael J. Roche, as judge thereof, are without jurisdiction to try the petitioners upon or under the said indictment, or upon or under any count thereof. It is contended that the trial of said petitioners under the first count of the indictment would be without and in excess of the jurisdiction of the superior court, for the reason that said first count fails to state a public offense, or any offense or crime known to the law of this state. As to the other counts of the indictment (2 to 7, inclusive), it is contended that the superior court and the said judge thereof are without jurisdiction to try the petitioners, for the reason that section 14 of the Corporate Securities Act makes a violation of its provisions punishable either as a felony or as a misdemeanor, and, it appearing affirmatively upon the face of each of the said counts 2 to 7 that the act complained of in each of said counts was committed more than a year in advance of the return of the indictment, it was not punishable because, under section 801 of the Penal Code, an indictment for a misdemeanor must be found or an information filed within one year after its commission. It is urged, therefore, that the superior court is without power to impose, in the event of conviction, misdemeanor punishment.

This proceeding involves two distinct questions of jurisdiction: First, does section 182 comprehend a conspiracy to violate the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act; and, second, has the trial court jurisdiction to proceed to trial on the six counts embracing alleged criminal acts, potentially punishable as misdemeanors, and which stand outlawed as such? For convenience and clarity we will set forth the respective contentions as to the first count, and discuss and dispose of the question there involved before taking up the problem connected with the remaining six counts of the indictment. The discussion of the problem involved under the first count will necessarily revolve about sections 182 and 183 of the Penal Code, in the light of sections 15, 16, and 17 thereof, and at this point we will quote the five sections at length.

"15. 'Crime' and 'Public Offense' Defined. A crime or public offense is an act committed or omitted in violation of a law forbidding or commanding it, and to which is annexed, upon conviction, either of the following punishments: 1. Death; 2. Imprisonment; 3. Fine; 4. Removal from office; or, 5. Disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit in this state.

"16. Crimes, How Divided. Crimes are divided into: 1. Felonies; and, 2. Misdemeanors.

"17. Felony and Misdemeanor Defined. A felony is a crime which is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison. Every other crime is a misdemeanor. When a crime, punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, is also punishable by fine or imprisonment in a county jail, in the discretion of the court, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes after a judgment imposing a punishment other than imprisonment in the state prison."

"182. Criminal Conspiracy Defined and Punishment Fixed. If two or more persons conspire:

"1. To commit any crime;

"2. Falsely and maliciously to indict another for any crime, or to procure another to be charged or arrested for any crime;

"3. Falsely to move or maintain any suit, action or proceeding;

"4. To cheat and defraud any person of any property, by any means which are in themselves criminal, or to obtain money or property by false pretenses or by false promises with fraudulent intent not to perform such promises;

"5. To commit any act injurious to the public health, to public morals, or to pervert or obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws.

"They are punishable as follows:

"When they conspire to commit any felony, or to commit any act injurious to the public health, or to public morals, or tending to pervert or obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws, they shall be punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as in this code provided for the punishment of the commission of the said felony or act, respectively.

"When they conspire to do any of the other acts described in this section they shall be punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or state penitentiary not exceeding two years, or by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or both, and cases of such conspiracy may be prosecuted and tried in the superior court of any county in which any overt act tending to effect such conspiracy shall be done."

"183. No Other Conspiracies Punishable Criminally. No conspiracies, other than those enumerated in the preceding section, are punishable criminally."

Count 1. As to this count the petitioners contend:

"The Corporate Securities Act contains nothing making it a crime to conspire to violate its provisions. Section 182 of the Penal Code is the only law which, in general terms, prohibits conspiracies to commit certain crimes. * * * It will be noted that section 182 has two penal paragraphs. For brevity, we shall refer to the first penal paragraph beginning, 'When they conspire to commit any felony,' as 'Pen. Par. No. 1,' and to the second penal paragraph, beginning, 'When they conspire to do any of the other acts,' as 'Pen. Par. No. 2.' * * *

"It will be noted that Pen. Par. No. 1 is limited to providing punishment for conspiracies to commit felonies and the acts enumerated in subdivision 5. It will be further noted that Pen. Par. No. 1 provides a punishment for conspiracies to commit such felonies only as are enumerated in the Penal Code. * * *

"It will be conceded that a violation of the Corporate Securities Act is a crime. We also believe * * * that subdivisions 2, 3, 4, and 5 of section 182 do not prohibit, and do not deal with, conspiracies of the character charged in count No. 1. It therefore follows that if the crime of conspiracy charged is to be found in section 182 at all, it must be embraced within subdivision 1 of section 182, 'To commit any crime.'

"It also follows that no punishment for the crime of conspiracy charged in count No. 1 is to be found in Pen. Par. No. 1, for the reason that Pen. Par. No. 1 is limited to the punishment of conspiracies to commit such felonies only as are enumerated in the Penal Code ('this Code'), and a violation of the Corporate Securities Act is not one of the crimes enumerated or found in the Penal Code. The Corporate Securities Act is not a part of the Penal Code. [In re Isch, 174 Cal. 180, 162 P. 1026, is then cited in support of the contention that the words "this Code" found in "Pen. Par. No. 1" mean and refer to the "penal Code" exclusively.]

"Pen. Par. No. 1 covers all felonies, conspiracies to commit which are punishable criminally. * * *

"Subdivision 1 of section 182 reads: 'To commit any crime.' It therefore includes conspiracies to commit all felonies which are not included in the other subdivisions of section 182. The phrase, 'any felony,' used in Pen. Par. No. 1, is coextensive with and equally as broad as the phrase, 'any crime,' as far as the phrase 'any crime' relates to felonies. Subdivision 1, 'to commit any crime,' may be resolved into its component parts without changing its meaning and be written thus, 'to commit any felony or any misdemeanor,' because crimes are composed of both felonies and misdemeanors. Pen. Code, § 16. This throws into relief and emphasizes the fact that the phrase 'any felony' or Pen. Par. No. 1 is as 'all-inclusive' and as broad as the phrase 'any felony,' which is a component part of the phrase 'any crime' used in subdivision 1. Hence, the phrase 'any crime,' used in Pen. Par. No. 1, includes every felony, a conspiracy to commit which is punishable criminally.

"It therefore follows that if count No. 1 charges a conspiracy to commit a felony, the punishment therefor cannot be found in Pen. Par. No. 1. * * *

"There remain two further propositions to examine: (1) Is the crime charged in count No. 1 a conspiracy to commit a crime falling within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 182? And, if so, (2) is the punishment therefor to be found in Pen. Par. No. 2?

"Let us now examine Pen. Par. No. 2, to ascertain if it does provide a punishment for conspiracies to commit misdemeanors included within the generic term 'crime' found in subdivision 1 of section 182. * * *

"(1) The conspiracies to commit felonies which are punishable criminally are strictly limited. Only conspiracies to commit such felonies as are specifically enumerated in section 182, directly or by reference to felonies a punishment for which is to be found in the Penal Code are punishable criminally, thereby giving force and effect to section 183 of the Penal Code, which declares that only the conspiracies enumerated in section 182 shall be punishable criminally.

"(2) If, however, the phrase 'any crime,' in subdivision 1 of section 182, is construed to embrace conspiracies to commit misdemeanors other than those specifically described in subdivisions 2, 3, 4, and 5 of section 182, then it must follow that a conspiracy to commit any misdemeanor is punishable criminally, and that the word 'described,' used in Pen. Par. No. 2, is without restrictive meaning, the word 'enumerated,' used in section 183, is likewise meaningless, and section 183 is without force or effect as regards conspiracies to commit misdemeanors. * * *

"What is the meaning of the phrase 'any of the other acts described in this section' [found in Pen. Par. No. 2]? Let us first determine what other acts are described in section 182 to which the phrase just quoted does not apply.

The phrase does not apply to felonies or misdemeanors described directly or by reference to the Penal Code within the generic term 'crime' found in subdivision 1 of section 182. These, as has been seen, are covered by Pen. Par. No. 1. Nor does it apply to felonies or misdemeanors described in subdivision 5 of section 182. These too are covered by Pen. Par. No. 1.

"Other acts" which are not covered by Pen. Par. No. 1 are found described in subdivisions 2, 3, and 4 of section 182. These acts, described in subdivisions 2, 3, and 4, are manifestly covered by Pen. Par. No. 2. * * *

"In conclusion count No. 1 having failed to charge a crime under section 182 of the Penal Code, it perforce follows that the superior court has no jurisdiction to put these petitioners to their defense thereunder."

In reply the Attorney General contends that:

"The issue under the first count is whether or not it is a crime for two or more persons to conspire to violate the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. It is admitted by all parties that such act does not itself prohibit such a conspiracy, but it is contended by the state that section 182 of the Penal Code is broad enough in its terms to do so. This contention is opposed by the petitioners, and so the primary question is: Does section 182 of the Penal Code define, prohibit and make punishable a conspiracy to violate the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act?

"In answering the foregoing question in the affirmative, we call particular attention to subdivision 1 of section 182 of the Penal Code, which provides that if two or more persons conspire 'to commit any crime' they are guilty of a criminal conspiracy. We also call attention to the fact that under section 15 of the Penal Code a violation of the Corporate Securities Act is a crime.

"It is our contention that the phrase 'any crime' means and includes every felony and every misdemeanor prescribed by the laws of this state. Our opponents, on the other hand, contend that the term 'any crime' means 'any felony made punishable by the Penal Code.' We therefore have a secondary question, namely: What is meant by the term 'any crime' as used in subdivision 1 of section 182 of the Penal Code?

"In support of our contention that the term 'any crime' means and includes every felony and every misdemeanor, we cite sections 15 and 16 of the Penal Code, the first one of which defines the word 'crime,' and the second one of which divides crimes into felonies and misdemeanors. From these sections we see that as a matter of positive law the term 'any crime' includes every felony and every misdemeanor. * * *

"We turn now to the penal provisions of section 182 of the Penal Code to see which (if either) of the two provide the punishment for conspiracy to violate the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. The pertinent part of the first penal paragraph reads as follows: 'When they conspire to commit any felony * * * they shall be punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as in this Code provided for the punishment of the commission of the said felony.' * * *

"The question of whether or not a conspiracy to violate the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act is made punishable by the foregoing provisions of section 182 of the Penal Code depends upon what construction is placed upon the term 'this Code' as used in that provision. It would seem, upon first thought, that the term 'this Code' means the Penal Code as distinct from the other three Codes and the general laws. The dicta of In re Isch follows this view. However, section 4480 of the Political Code provides that: 'With relation to each other, the provisions of the four Codes must be construed * * * as though all such Codes had been passed at the same moment of time and were parts of the same statute.' Thus, section 4480 of the Political Code would seem to imply that the term 'this Code' includes at least the four Codes.

"We are inclined to the view that the Legislature used the term 'in this Code provided' as meaning 'as by the law of this state provided.' We reach such conclusion because we are unable to see any reason for distinguishing between conspiracies to commit felonies made punishable by the Penal Code and conspiracies to commit felonies made punishable by any other law of this state."

It is then contended that if a conspiracy to violate the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act is not made punishable by the first penal paragraph of section 182, then it is punishable by the second penal paragraph thereof, as:

"It is a general provision which penalizes all criminal conspiracies prohibited by the five subdivisions of the section, but which were not made punishable by the first penal paragraph."

[1, 2] The parties are correct in their respective statements that a conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act was not, until very recently, and subsequent to the commission of the offense here charged, made punishable by the terms of the act itself, and therefore the offense here charged, if punishable at all, the penalty must be found in section 182 of the Penal Code. Before an interpretation may be attempted of either of the penal paragraphs of section 182, it becomes necessary to determine the scope and meaning of the words "any crime" found in the first subdivision of that section. We are of the opinion it was the legislative intention that the words "any crime" should include all crimes—whether felonies or misdemeanors—which are known to the law of this state, and whether defined and made punishable by the Penal Code or by any other law or statute of the state. That is to say, neither by the term itself nor by implication does the word "crime" import alone offenses defined and made punishable by the Penal Code, as contended by petitioners, but, as indicated, is sufficiently comprehensive to include all felonies and misdemeanors known to the law of this state. This construction of subdivision 1 would seem to be the only logical one in view of the express terms of sections 15, 16, and 17 of the Penal Code. It is obvious from even the most casual reading of section 15 that the Legislature, by its definition of "crime," intended all acts or omissions in contravention of any law of the state, whether included in the Penal Code or not, and to which would attach the prescribed penalties. It must therefore be held, especially in view of the interpretation of the term "crime" in section 16, that the Legislature employed the word in that sense in the first subdivision of section 182. By no rule of interpretation can the word be held to be limited to offenses provided for in the Penal Code.

[3, 4] Nor do we think there is anything in the remainder of section 182 opposed to the construction we have placed upon the word "crime" found in subdivision 1 thereof. Subdivisions 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the section merely prescribe specific acts a conspiracy, to commit any one of which is denounced as an offense. We may next consider whether there is anything in the two penal paragraphs of the section calling for a different construction. The first penal paragraph punishes a conspiracy "to commit any felony, or to commit any act injurious to the public health, or to public morals, or tending to pervert or obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws * * * to the same extent as in this Code provided for the punishment of the commission of the said felony or act, respectively." In other words, it is evident that this first penal paragraph fixes the penalty upon persons found guilty of conspiring to commit any of the acts enumerated in subdivision 5 of this section, or conspiring to commit any felony comprehended by subdivision 1, defined and made punishable by the Penal Code; the punishment for the conspiracy in each instance being the same as that prescribed by the Penal Code where an individual is guilty of the offense which is the object of the conspiracy. It may be said, then, that the first penal paragraph is meant to cover and punish only conspiracies to commit felonies punishable under the Penal Code and conspiracies to commit the acts prohibited under subdivision 5 of section 182. The mere circumstance that some of the offenses created by the first subdivision of section 182—namely, conspiracies to commit felonies defined by the Penal Code—are punishable under the first penal paragraph of the section does not necessarily preclude a construction that the second penal paragraph may, among other things, prescribe the punishment for the remainder of the offenses created under subdivision 1 and not made punishable by the first penal paragraph. It therefore becomes necessary to determine the scope of the second penal paragraph.

[5] This latter penal paragraph commences, "When they conspire to do any of the other acts described in this section. * * *" The quoted words are sufficiently broad to include within the purview of the paragraph all of the offenses created by the five subdivisions of the section, and for which no penalty is imposed by the first penal paragraph. That is to say, the words, "any of the other acts described in this section," were meant to, and do in fact, include all other conspiracies to commit crimes or acts prohibited by the section regardless of whether they are denounced by subdivision 1 or any other subdivision thereof. Therefore, in this second penal paragraph, we find the penalty that is to be imposed upon those conspiring to commit any of the crimes or acts denounced by subdivisions 2, 3, and 4, and that which is to be imposed for a conspiracy to commit any and all misdemeanors, whether defined by the Penal Code or by any other statute, and for conspiracies to commit all felonies which are defined and penalized by some law other than the Penal Code. In other words, the second penal paragraph, in addition to prescribing the punishment for conspiracies to commit the crimes or acts specified in subdivisions 2, 3, and 4 of the section, also prescribes the punishment for all offenses denounced by subdivision 1, and for which the first penal paragraph does not prescribe a punishment; namely, conspiracies to commit any and all misdemeanors, not included in those enumerated in subdivision 5, and conspiracies to commit all felonies prescribed by some general law of the state other than the Penal Code.

The construction contended for by petitioners—that the words, "any of the other acts described in this section," were intended to include only conspiracies to commit the crimes or acts enumerated and denounced by subdivisions 2, 3, and 4 of the section—is a strained construction, not reasonably justified by the language employed. The second penal paragraph does not, in so many words, attempt to confine itself exclusively to the crimes or acts set forth in subdivisions 2, 3, and 4, and to so hold would, in our opinion, give an erroneous and limited meaning to the language found in the paragraph. Nor do we find any merit in the contention that by section 183 there are no conspiracies punishable criminally other than those "enumerated" in the preceding section (182), for the words "any crime," appearing in subdivision 1 of section 182, having been shown to include felonies and misdemeanors punishable under the law of the state, a conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act, being a crime, would be "enumerated" within the meaning of the terms of section 183.

Our construction of section 182 may be illustrated by placing the several classifications of conspiracies in juxtaposition with the punishment prescribed therefor, thus:

If two or more persons conspire:

(Subd. 1.)

to commit "any crime":

1. felonies

- (a) defined by the Penal Code
(b) defined by other laws

(punishable by Penal Paragraph 1.*)
" " " " 2.)

2. misdemeanors

- (a) defined by the Penal Code
(b) defined by other laws

" " " " 2.)
" " " " 2.)

(Subd. 2.)

to falsely and maliciously charge or indict another for any crime

" " " " 2.)

(Subd. 3.)

to falsely move or maintain any suit, action or proceeding

" " " " 2.)

(Subd. 4.)

to cheat and defraud another of property by criminal means or to obtain money or property by false pretenses or promises to commit any act injurious to public health, public morals, to pervert or obstruct justice or the due administration of the laws

" " " " 2.)

(Subd. 5.)

" " " " 1.*)

They are punishable as follows:

* (Penal Paragraph 1.) "When they conspire to commit any felony, or to commit any act injurious to the public health, or to public morals, or tending to pervert or obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws, they shall be punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as in this Code provided for the punishment of the commission of the said felony or act, respectively."

 (Penal Paragraph 2.) "When they conspire to do any of the other acts described in this section they shall be punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or state penitentiary not exceeding two years, or by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or both. * * *"

Petitioners seek to fortify their foregoing contentions as to the scope and meaning of section 182 by the historical background of that section, and state that:

"There can be no gainsaying the proposition that, at the time the Penal Code was adopted, subdivision 1 of section 182 referred only to crimes enumerated in the Penal Code, because the only acts or omissions that were criminal or punishable then were those prescribed by the Penal Code. Section 6 of the Penal Code, which was also adopted in 1872, makes this quite evident. It reads: 'No act or omission commenced after twelve o'clock noon of the day on which this Code takes effect as a law, is criminal or punishable, except as prescribed or authorized by this Code, or some of the statutes, which it specifies as continuing in force and as not affected by its provisions. * * *' The statutes that were specified as being continued in force are enumerated in section 23 of the Penal Code.

"The Legislature in 1872, as it were, wiped the slate clean, and set out in the Penal Code all acts or omissions that should be criminal or punishable. It perforce follows, therefore, that the only crimes that subdivision 1 of section 182 could have referred to, at the time of its enactment, were the crimes specifically enumerated and described in the Penal Code. [Petitioners are in error as to this statement. Among the statutes continued in force by section 23 of the Penal Code are several which create crimes of the grade of misdemeanors and prescribe the penalties therefor. See, for example: Subdivision 8 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 604); subdivision 9 (Stats. 1865-6, p. 641); subdivision 11 (Stats. 1865-6, p. 332); and subdivision 12 (Stats. 1865-6, p. 637). It is not true therefore that "the only crimes that subdivision 1 of section 182 could have referred to, at the time of its enactment, were the crimes specifically enumerated and described in the Penal Code."] It also follows that since section 183 limited the conspiracies that were punishable criminally to those enumerated in section 182, and since section 182 was in turn limited, in its reference to crimes, to crimes enumerated in the Penal Code, section 183 limited the conspiracies to commit crimes to those crimes which are specifically enumerated in the Penal Code.

"It is conclusively evident, therefore, that, at the time the Penal Code was adopted, the crimes, a conspiracy to commit which were punishable criminally, were strictly limited to those crimes enumerated in the Penal Code, because there were no other crimes and that such limitation was necessarily the intent of the Legislature.

"The Legislature might have enlarged the scope of section 182 and of subdivision 1 thereof, but it has not done so. Subdivision 1 has never been amended, nor has section 183."

We quote from respondents' brief:

"But even aside from the question of grammatical construction, * * * the history of section 182 of the Penal Code belies the contention that the term 'any crime' means 'any felony made punishable by the Penal Code.' In 1850, the First Legislature passed 'an act concerning crimes and punishments' (Stats. 1850, p. 229). Section 102 of that act (page 242), is the forerunner of section 182 of the Penal Code. It provided in part: 'If two or more persons shall conspire * * * to commit any offense * * * they shall, on conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year or by a fine not exceeding $1,000.' It should be noted that the Legislature used the generic term 'any offense.' Unfortunately, we have been unable to find any case construing that term; but one thing is sure: It was not limited in meaning to 'felonies made punishable by the Penal Code,' for the very good reason that at that time there was no Penal Code. Nor can it be said that the term 'any offense' applied only to those offenses prescribed by the 'act concerning crimes and punishments,' for the simple reason that that act was not self-sufficient, but depended upon other acts for its efficacy, and therefore, of necessity, would have had to have been construed as being a part and parcel of the general laws of the state. * * *

"In 1872, when the four Codes were first adopted, section 102 of the act concerning crimes and punishments was changed into section 182 of the Penal Code. In the transposition the term 'to commit any offense' was changed to 'to commit any crime'; the word 'offense' and the word 'crime' having the same legal significance. Statutes 1850, p. 275, § 2, and Penal Code, § 15. From 1872 down to the present time, subdivision 1 of section 182 of the Penal Code has read, 'to commit any crime.' In 1872, and until the 1919 amendment to the section, the penal provision was: 'They are punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both.' In other words, prior to the 1919 amendment, all criminal conspiracies were made punishable in the same manner and to the same extent. Bearing this fact in mind, let us construe the meaning which attached to the words 'any crime' prior to the 1919 amendment. The section read in part as follows: 'If two or more persons conspire; * * * to commit any crime * * * they are punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both.' What was, then, the meaning of the term 'any crime'? Was it limited in its meaning to felonies to the exclusion of misdemeanors? Did it mean only such felonies or felonies and misdemeanors as were made punishable by the Penal Code? Manifestly not. It meant any and every crime, whether felony or misdemeanor, whether made punishable by the Penal Code, the Civil Code, the Code of Civil Procedure, the Political Code, or the General Laws. See sections 15, 16, and 17 of the Penal Code.

"Such was the meaning of the term 'any crime' prior to the 1919 amendment. It still has that meaning—the same conspiracies which were prohibited prior to the amendment are prohibited to-day; it is only the penalties which have been changed. As our opponents admit, indeed as they argue, the penalty imposed is a separate and distinct element of a crime from that of its prohibition. The Legislature amended the penal provisions or one element of the crime, but did not amend the prohibitory provision, a separate and distinct element of the crime. Therefore the same conspiracies which were prohibited prior to the 1919 amendment are prohibited to-day, and it is manifest that the term 'any crime' means any and every crime, whether felony or misdemeanor, and whether made punishable by the Penal Code or by any other law of the state."

It is plain to us that, instead of the historical aspect of the question supporting or fortifying petitioners' contentions, the reply of respondents seems to refute them, for, as pointed out in the reply, the language, "as in this Code provided," was not made a part of the penal provisions of section 182 until the year 1919. Stats. 1919, p. 170. In view of this there can be no question that if the identical point here involved had been raised prior to said amendment petitioners' argument would have been rejected.

[6] The petitioners, in support of the claim that conspiracies to violate the Corporate Securities Act did not, when the alleged violations thereof were committed, come within the purview of section 182, refer to the amendment in 1925 of section 14 of said act (Stats. 1925, c. 447, p. 962), making a conspiracy to violate its provisions punishable, as, in effect, indicating legislative construction that section 182 never had been intended to apply to conspiracies to commit crimes not provided for in the Penal Code. We do not think it can be said that the amendment of section 14 in 1925 reflects an assumption upon the part of the Legislature that, previous to said amendment, a violation of the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act could not be made the basis of a charge of conspiracy under section 182 of the Penal Code. It seems to us it would be as reasonable to conclude that the Legislature intended to eliminate any ambiguities or uncertainties as to the scope and meaning of section 182.

Having decided that a conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act is punishable under the second penal paragraph of section 182, which provides for the infliction of either a felonious or misdemeanor penalty, in the discretion of the trial court, a conclusion which, it is fair to say, if anticipated by the petitioners, would doubtless have been met with the claim made by them under counts 2 to 7 as to the statute of limitations, therefore what we shall say under the next head may be deemed to apply equally to count 1 of the indictment.

[7, 8] Counts 2 to 7. As to counts 2 to 7, inclusive, it is contended by the petitioners that:

"The crime of violating the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act is punishable either as a misdemeanor or as a felony, in the discretion of the court. Section 14, Corporate Securities Act. The prosecution of a misdemeanor is barred if the indictment therefor is not returned within one year after its commission. Section 801, Pen. Code. The indictment in the case at bar was returned more than one year after the commission of the offense alleged in each count. * * *

"It is apparent from the foregoing considerations that, as to counts 2 to 7, inclusive, there is just one question for determination, and that is: Where a crime is punishable either as a misdemeanor or as a felony, in the discretion of the court, what is the effect of the statute of limitations on the jurisdiction of the trial court where the indictment for the crime is returned more than one year after its commission? This proposition will be conceded by all: The purpose of making a crime punishable, either as a misdemeanor or as a felony, is not to give to a judge unbridled or arbitrary discretion, but to give to him the opportunity to mete out such punishment as, in his opinion, will be commensurate with the gravity of the offense, coupled with a consideration of the age and character of the accused. * * *

"Now, in the instant case, is the court free to exercise that merciful, judicial discretion which has been bestowed upon it by the Legislature in the furtherance of justice and sound public policy? The answer must be 'No!' And, why? Because: (1) Upon the trial and conviction of the accused the trial court must render some judgment and mete out some punishment within the limits prescribed by law, and the court, in the case at bar, cannot impose a misdemeanor punishment. (2) A court, in order to have complete jurisdiction, must have the power to carry its judgment into effect, and unless it has such power it has not jurisdiction at all, and any judgment it may render is a nullity and void. (3) If a court is deprived of its power to exercise the full discretion granted to it by the Legislature in the rendition of its judgment and the imposition of punishment, then the accused affected by such judgment and punishment is denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed to him by the federal and state Constitutions. * * *

"The court cannot determine and impose a punishment within the limits prescribed by law, because those limits by a failure to return the indictment within one year have been abolished. The court has no jurisdiction to render a judgment as for a misdemeanor, because such a judgment would be a nullity, unenforceable, and void."

It is then contended that:

"Under such circumstances the court is without jurisdiction to render a judgment of sentence as for a felony. Unless this latter proposition is true, an accused would be denied the equal protection of the laws. * * *

On the other hand, the Attorney General contends, as to these several counts, that:

"Under section 17 of the Penal Code, an offense which may be punished either as a misdemeanor or as a felony in the discretion of the trial court, is a felony—at least for all purposes prior to the imposition of a punishment of misdemeanor grade. * * * If we are correct in our contention as to the meaning of the word 'deemed,' then it follows that a crime which is punishable by imprisonment either in the state prison or by fine or imprisonment in the county jail in the discretion of the court, is, and forever remains, a felony, but that if the punishment imposed is other than imprisonment in the state prison, although the nature of the crime is not changed, yet for all purposes thereafter arising it is regarded as being a misdemeanor.

"Under such a construction of section 17 of the Penal Code it would follow that the only statute of limitation which would be applicable to an offense made punishable either by imprisonment in the state prison or by fine or imprisonment in the county jail, in the discretion of the court, would be the statute of limitation applicable to felonies. * * *

Concisely stated, the contention of petitioners is this: Since it affirmatively appears on the face of the indictment that each of the acts complained of was committed more than one year prior to the filing thereof, the misdemeanor phase of each charge, by virtue of the statute of limitations (section 801, Pen. Code), stands eliminated from the case; that it would therefore be futile to proceed with the trial, for if the court should decide that misdemeanor punishment was called for the judgment would be void as resting on a barred charge; and that if a felonious punishment should be deemed appropriate it could not legally be imposed for with the misdemeanor element eliminated there would be no basis for the exercise of the statutory discretion.

It is argued that the misdemeanor element is eliminated because of the provisions of sections 17 and 801 of the Penal Code. Section 17 does provide that in a case where either felonious or misdemeanor punishment may be imposed "it shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes after a judgment imposing other than imprisonment in the state prison." It is urged that, when a misdemeanor judgment has been imposed, the offense is a misdemeanor for all purposes, both before and after judgment. People v. Gray, 137 Cal. 267, 70 P. 20, upon which petitioners rely, involved a misdemeanor judgment based on a charge of seduction for which the accused was liable to be punished either by imprisonment in the state prison, or by fine, or by both such fine and imprisonment. It appearing that more than a year had elapsed between the commission of the crime and the institution of the charge, the court held that the judgment had the effect of making the crime a misdemeanor ab initio. The court declared that the point was definitely decided in People v. Picetti, 124 Cal. 361, 57 P. 156. Concerning People v. Gray, supra, the Attorney General contends that:

"The cases of People v. Salorse, 62 Cal. 139, and People v. Picetti, in no wise support the decision in the Gray Case, for the reason that in neither case was the offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison or by fine or imprisonment in the county jail in the discretion of the court. That is to say, in the Picetti Case the offense was either grand or petit larceny depending upon the value of the goods stolen. * * *

In People v. Gray, supra, differing from the case at bar, the trial had been had and judgment pronounced. It is apparent that none of the cases cited is authority on the question presented here, namely, Is prohibition available to prevent the court below from proceeding with the trial of the general issue where there has been no trial and no judgment and only the misdemeanor phase of the alleged offense is asserted to be barred? But even if it be assumed that People v. Gray, supra, is applicable to the situation here, we have reached the conclusion that it should be overruled. In the first place, the decision is inaccurate in the statement that "the question has been definitely decided by this court * * * in the case of People v. Picetti, 124 Cal. 361, 57 P. 156." It will be seen by the latter case that section 801 alone was applicable, and that section 17 was in no way involved. In People v. Picetti, supra, the appellant was charged with grand larceny and found guilty of petit larceny. It was clear from the evidence that appellant stole less than $50, and hence he never should have been charged with grand larceny. In other words, it was a misdemeanor ab initio, and section 801 was therefore properly applied. The case is therefore only authority for the proposition that, where a defendant is charged with a felony but has only committed a misdemeanor, the statute of limitations for misdemeanors and not that for felonies will govern. However, that case is not authority under the provision of section 17 here involved, for that provision only has application to the judgment where the punishment may be either for a felony or a misdemeanor. It will be noted that in quoting section 17 the opinion in People v. Gray, supra, ignores the language, "after a judgment imposing a punishment other than imprisonment in the state prison,"—following the phrase "shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes."

It is true that People v. Gray, supra, has not been challenged during the intervening 23 years, but it is also the fact that no other case has held that where a misdemeanor punishment is imposed within the purview of section 17 the judgment has a retroactive effect so as to characterize the offense as a misdemeanor from the time of its commission. But apart from these considerations we think the doctrine laid down in People v. Gray, supra, is perversive of the true intent and meaning of section 17. That case does not apparently question the proposition that in cases where discretion is vested in the trial court to impose either a felony or a misdemeanor punishment the charge may be prosecuted as a felony, and that if such form of judgment is rendered it stands throughout as a felony without any of the characteristics of a misdemeanor. This being so, it would follow that in every such case where a misdemeanor punishment is imposed the state had done a vain thing in prosecuting the charge as a felony, notwithstanding the evidence might amply justify a belief that a felonious judgment would be responsive. A fair construction of section 17, in order to give effect to every part thereof, requires us to hold, and we do so hold, that in prosecutions within the contemplation of that section the charge stands as a felony for every purpose up to judgment, and if the judgment be felonious, in that event, it is a felony after as well as before judgment; but if the judgment is for a misdemeanor it is deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes thereafter—the judgment not to have a retroactive effect so far as the statute of limitations is concerned.

It is hereby ordered that the application for a writ of prohibition be and the same is hereby denied as to all the counts of the indictment.

LAWLOR, J. Application for a writ of prohibition.

This proceeding, brought by W. A. Doble, is a companion proceeding to S. F. No. 11554 (241 P. 852), this day decided. It appears that petitioner was joined as a codefendant in the same indictment with the petitioners in S. F. (241 P.)

O'BRIEN v. O'BRIEN. (S. F. 10600.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2. 1925.)

1. Equity §66—Meaning of maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity," stated.

The equitable maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity," means that court will not confer its equitable relief unless one seeking its aid has acknowledged or will admit and provide for all equitable rights justly belonging to adverse party and growing out of subject-matter of controversy.

2. Equity §66—Maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity," applicable to action to quiet title.

The equitable maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity," is applicable to an action to quiet title.

3. Frauds, statute of §75—Agreement to devise property invalid, unless agreement or memorandum thereof in writing and subscribed.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7, an agreement to devise or bequeath any property or to make any provision for any person by will is invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, subscribed by party to be charged or his agent.

4. Frauds, statute of §1—Agreement made in consideration of marriage invalid unless in writing.

An agreement made on consideration of marriage other than mutual promise to marry is invalid unless in writing, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 3, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 3.

5. Frauds, statute of §129(1)—Subsequent marriage or execution of will pursuant to oral antenuptial agreement not part performance.

Neither subsequent marriage nor execution of a will, pursuant to an oral antenuptial agreement to make a will, is such part performance as will relieve contract from operation of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7.

6. Frauds, statute of §125(3)—Contract in contravention of statute not void but merely voidable.

A contract falling within operation of statute of frauds, but made in contravention thereof, is not invalid in the sense that it is void, but is merely voidable.

7. Frauds, statute of §129(12)—Part performance of oral antenuptial contract must be referable to covenants of contract other than covenants of marital contract.

To take oral contract whereby defendant agreed to marry plaintiff and manage her property and abandon his medical practice, on plaintiff's agreeing to make a will in his favor, out of operation of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7, part performance must be referable to the covenants of the contract other than the covenants of the marital contract.

8. Frauds, statute of §119(2)—Mere promise to reduce oral contract to writing and failure or refusal to do so does not constitute fraud.

Mere promise of plaintiff to reduce to writing oral contract to bequeath her property to defendant on defendant's agreeing to marry her and manage her property and abandon his medical practice, and her failure or refusal to do so, did not constitute fraud.

9. Specific performance §6—Not granted to defendant, where defendant could not be compelled to specifically perform his part of contract.

Where plaintiff orally agreed to bequeath her property to defendant on latter's agreeing to marry plaintiff and manage her property, specific performance is not available to defendant, since defendant could not be compelled specifically to manage plaintiff's property.

10. Specific performance §6—Not granted where party seeking it cannot be compelled to specifically perform on his part.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3386 and 3390, equity will not require specific performance of contract, where party seeking its enforcement cannot, from nature of contract, be compelled to specifically perform on his part.

11. Injunction §59(1)—Not granted to prevent breach of contract, performance of which could not be specifically enforced.

Where defendant cannot be compelled to specifically perform his part of contract, under Code Civ. Proc. § 526, and Civ. Code, § 3423, subd. 5, court cannot restrain plaintiff's breach of such contract.

12. Wills §68—Measure of damages to physician giving up medical practice pursuant to contract with plaintiff, which latter breached, stated.

Where defendant abandoned his medical practice and agreed to marry plaintiff on latter's agreeing to execute will bequeathing her property to defendant, on plaintiff's breach thereof, measure of defendant's damages, if any, is compensation for detriment he has suffered because of his change of position, and defendant must allege facts from which, when proved, court may properly fix amount.

13. Wills §68—Answer and cross-complaint held insufficient to sustain claim for damages under agreement to devise.

In suit to quiet title, answer and cross-complaint, alleging agreement by plaintiff to devise property to defendant in consideration of marriage and defendant's abandonment of his medical practice, held insufficient to entitle defendant to recover damages, when not alleging his age, revenues from present practice, or extent of his alleged inability to resume his practice, but only conclusions which would not support charge of perjury under Penal Code, § 118a.

14. Pleading §225(1)—Court justified in rendering judgment against defendant who failed to request leave to further amend after objections to his pleadings sustained.

Where defendant presented six different pleadings to court, to sufficiency of which objections were successfully made, on his failure to request leave to further amend, court was justified in rendering judgment against him.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Frances L. O'Brien against E. S. O'Brien, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James F. Peck and M. C. Chapman, both of Oakland (Peck, Bunker & Cole, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley, for respondent.

SHENK, J. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet her title to a parcel of land located at the northwest corner of Twelfth and Jackson streets, in the city of Oakland. Demurrers to the fifth amended answer and cross-complaint were sustained. No request for leave to further amend was made by the defendant. Judgment was accordingly entered against him and in favor of the plaintiff, from which judgment the defendant appeals.

The complaint is in the usual form in an action to quiet title. The answer denies that the defendant's claim of an interest in the property is without right, and alleges, in substance, as follows: That on March 10, 1914, and for more than 20 years prior thereto, the defendant was and had been a duly licensed practitioner of medicine and surgery in the county of Merced and adjoining counties; that he frequently had been employed in a professional way by the plaintiff and by W. H. Hartley, her deceased husband; that for several years prior to 1914 the defendant had received from his medical practice from $7,000 to $12,000 net per annum; that his practice was steadily increasing, and because of the nature of the services rendered by him it required his close personal attention; that he had two grown daughters, the issue of a former marriage, one of whom was dependent upon him for her support; that the plaintiff was a childless widow, and was possessed of property of the approximate value of $250,000, consisting of real and personal property, a portion of the real estate being the property described in the complaint of the estimated value of $60,000; that the plaintiff was inexperienced in the care of such property as she possessed, and the care thereof was burdensome and troublesome to her, and caused her much anxiety and concern; that within two years prior to the 10th day of March, 1914, the plaintiff and defendant agreed that they would marry; that upon such marriage the defendant would abandon and discontinue his practice of medicine and surgery, and that thereafter they would tour Europe on their honeymoon; that the defendant was to aid the plaintiff to the extent of his ability in the care and management of her said property; that after such marriage the plaintiff and defendant would be supported by the property of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff would assist the defendant in the support of the defendant's daughter when such aid became necessary; that the plaintiff then further agreed that she would by her last will and testament devise to the defendant the real estate described in the complaint, and, after making certain designated bequests, aggregating $79,000, would make the defendant the residuary legatee under said will; that the plaintiff promised and agreed that she would, prior to said marriage, reduce the said contract to writing; that, as the time for the said marriage approached, the defendant urged the plaintiff to reduce the said contract to writing, whereupon she stated to him that, because of her preparation for the approaching marriage and her other engagements, she could not then attend to the preparation and execution of said contract, but promised that immediately upon the consummation of said marriage she would reduce said contract to writing and deliver the same to the defendant; that the marriage took place on March 10, 1914; that shortly thereafter the defendant again urged the plaintiff to reduce the said contract to writing, whereupon the plaintiff, under date of March 27, 1914, executed and delivered to the defendant a will, olographic in form, by the terms of which she devised the property described in the complaint to the defendant and, after making bequests in the sum of $79,000, made the defendant the residuary legatee and appointed him executor without bonds; that the defendant accepted and retained said will, believing the same to be the irrevocable act of the plaintiff; that at the time of the execution, delivery, and acceptance of said will by the defendant, the plaintiff and the defendant both believed said will would be a substitute in law for the written contract which the plaintiff promised to execute before the marriage; that at the time of the execution of said will the plaintiff agreed that, in consideration of the acceptance by the defendant of said will as a substitute for said written agreement, the plaintiff would not revoke said will, and that the same should be and remain the last will and testament of the said plaintiff in the event that plaintiff should die before the defendant; that the defendant accepted and has retained said will with that understanding; that the defendant's first intimation or suggestion that the plaintiff did not intend to perform said agreement was the filing of the complaint herein, and the assertion in said complaint of rights in plaintiff inconsistent with said promises; that the defendant at all times relied upon the promise of the plaintiff to reduce said contract to writing, and, induced by said promise, and not otherwise, the defendant did abandon his profession of medicine and surgery, and did enter into the contract of marriage with the plaintiff on March 10, 1914; that if the plaintiff had not promised to reduce said contract to writing, the defendant would not have married her and would not have abandoned or discontinued his practice of medicine and surgery; that after the said marriage the plaintiff and defendant toured Europe and the British Isles, returned to the United States, and, through no fault of the defendant, separated; that in July, 1915, they resumed their marital relations, but separated finally, also through no fault of the defendant, in March, 1916, after which time the plaintiff has refused to live with the defendant and has refused to permit the defendant to aid her in the care of her said property; that at all times since said marriage the defendant has been able, ready, and willing to perform his part of the contract and of said contract of marriage; "that by reason of said marriage of plaintiff and defendant and the discontinuance and abandonment of defendant's attention to his said medical and surgical practice as aforesaid, the defendant's said practice of medicine and surgery became, was, continued to be, and now is, scattered, lost, and destroyed to the defendant, and the said defendant cannot re-establish, has not re-established, and could not have re-established, and never will be able, during the remaining years of his life, to re-establish said practice of medicine and surgery at said Merced county, or the equivalent practice at any other place, or any practice of medicine and surgery except in a very small and very unremunerative practice of medicine and surgery as compared with the practice abandoned in the county of Merced" as hereinbefore alleged; that the plaintiff has not, since the last separation, contributed in any way to the support and maintenance of defendant; "that the only means of livelihood of the defendant, after the said failure of the plaintiff to contribute to the support and maintenance of the defendant, was for the defendant to resume, as best he could, at the place where the practice of medicine and surgery would most likely yield a livelihood for defendant," and the defendant has been compelled by the said failure of the plaintiff to perform the said contract as agreed to resume the practice of medicine and surgery for a living; that the defendant has been greatly injured and damaged by the failure and refusal of the said plaintiff to perform said agreement; that the amount of said injury and damage cannot be computed or estimated, and the said damage and injury cannot be compensated in money; that the defendant has no remedy at law for the said breach of said contract by the said plaintiff.

At the time the answer containing the foregoing allegations was filed, the defendant also filed a cross-complaint repeating therein the allegations of said answer, and in addition thereto alleging that the plaintiff threatens to and will, unless restrained by the court, dispose of the said property without sufficient or adequate consideration, for the purpose of depriving the defendant of his interest in said property. The defendant prays that it be adjudged that the plaintiff holds title to said property subject to said alleged agreement, that the plaintiff be enjoined from making a last will and testament other than in the words and figures of the present will so long as the defendant be living, and that the plaintiff be enjoined from giving away or otherwise disposing of her property except in good faith for a valuable consideration approximating the value of the property disposed of, and for general relief.

Demurrers both general and special were interposed separately to the answer and to the cross-complaint. The sufficiency of the pleadings under attack is therefore the only matter before us for consideration on this appeal. When stripped of what is deemed not essential to a disposition of the case, and when freed from considerable confusion arising by reason of divergent theories discussed in the numerous briefs, the situation of the parties as disclosed by the pleadings is simply this: By the filing of the complaint to quiet title it is the plaintiff's purpose to avoid the consequences of the agreement and will alleged in the defendant's pleadings, to the end, first, that she may have the present full use and enjoyment of the particular property described in the complaint disentangled from any rights which the defendant may now or hereafter assert in the same; and, secondly, that there may be attached to said will by judicial decree the ambulatory feature attending the ordinary will, so that she may thereafter safely revoke the said will without the defendant's consent. To accomplish all this, the plaintiff is appealing to the equitable jurisdiction of the court. On the part of the defendant, he frankly admits and declares:

"The defense alleged in the answer and cross-complaint is defensive entirely. There will be no time before the death of the plaintiff when the defendant will have any right to the property or right of action. If defendant dies before plaintiff, then all his rights will expire with him."

But he insists that, notwithstanding the absence of a present right of action in him, he has the right to set forth such defensive matters in his pleadings as will entitle him to prove and to fully disclose to the court the inequitable and unconscionable attitude which he claims the plaintiff has assumed towards him, to the end that the court may deny her any relief whatsoever and dismiss her complaint, or, if a decree be entered in her favor, that the court may attach such terms and conditions to the relief so granted as will properly safeguard his interests or make him whole as to the loss he claims to have sustained by reason of his change of position to his detriment, which loss he claims to have sustained through no fault of his own but wholly because of the alleged breach of contract by the plaintiff as evidenced by the commencement of said action.

[1,2] Unquestionably defendant is invoking a well-recognized principle in equity jurisprudence, "He who seeks equity must do equity." This is one of the most familiar maxims of equity. It means that the court will not confer its equitable relief upon one seeking its interposition and aid—

"unless he has acknowledged or conceded, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to the adverse party, and growing out of or necessarily involved in the subject-matter of the controversy." Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 386; Cox v. Hughes, 10 Cal. App. 553, 102 P. 956; 10 Cal. Jur. 508.

This principle of equity is applicable to an action to quiet title. Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 P. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492, 22 Cal. Jur. 134, and cases cited. A familiar instance of its application is when the court precludes a mortgagor from quieting his title against an outlawed mortgage without payment of the mortgage debt. In such a case, when the debt is not paid or not required to be paid, the court does not decree that the plaintiff has no interest in the property, but dismisses the action for want of equity in the plaintiff's cause. Boyce v. Fisk, 110 Cal. 107, 42 P. 473; 17 Cal. Jur. 1005. It is, of course, true that, if the defendant claims an interest in the property, the title to which is sought to be quieted, or if he claims that the plaintiff has placed him in such a position as to render it inequitable to grant to the plaintiff the relief sought, he must set forth his claim or demand in an appropriate pleading. This the defendant has attempted to do by the allegations of his answer and cross-complaint. The important question therefore is: What properly defensive matter has the defendant set forth that would defeat the plaintiff's cause of action or cause the court to leave her where it finds her or impose conditional relief? If he has such an interest in the property, present or prospective, as may be lawfully recognized, or if the plaintiff has been guilty of unconscionable conduct towards the defendant, such interest or conduct or both arose as necessarily incidental to the contract alleged by the defendant and the action of the parties thereunder.

[3,4] It must be taken as the settled law in this state that by the amendment of 1905, adding subdivision 7 to section 1624 of the Civil Code, and by the corresponding provision of subdivision 7 of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1907, "an agreement * * * to devise or bequeath any property, or to make any provision for any person by will" is invalid unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or his agent. Also it has been the law of this state, at least since the adoption of the Codes, that "an agreement made upon consideration of marriage other than a mutual promise to marry" is invalid, unless likewise as provided by subdivision 3 in each of the sections above referred to.

[5-8] Prior to 1905 an oral contract to make a will was enforceable in a court of equity. Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 P. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369; McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 70 P. 1008; Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 138 P. 728; Wolfsen v. Smyer, 178 Cal. 775, 175 P. 10. The reason prompting the amendment of 1905 is aptly stated by the Code commissioner in his note appended to section 1624, as follows:

"The change consists in the addition of subdivision 7. The cases in which it [is] sought to establish by parol evidence alleged agreements to provide for a person by will are becoming so numerous as to warrant the assumption that the reasons inducing the original enactment of the statute of frauds apply with especial force to agreements of this class and that they ought to be brought within that statute."

Since that amendment, the effect of the new subdivision as applied to numerous and varying states of facts has been before the courts, but nowhere has it been decided, so far as we are advised, that the amendment should not be given the same force and effect as other provisions of the statute of frauds. Especially with reference to the new provision it has been held that neither subsequent marriage nor the execution of a will pursuant to an oral antenuptial agreement to make a will is such part performance as will relieve the contract from the operation of the statute. Hughes v. Hughes, 49 Cal. App. 206, 193 P. 144; Trout v. Ogilvie, 41 Cal. App. 167, 182 P. 333. It is the general rule, however, that a contract falling within the operation of the statute, but made in contravention thereof, is not invalid in the sense that it is void. It is merely voidable. The statute is said to relate to the remedy only and not to affect the validity of the oral contract.

"Such a contract, if otherwise valid, remains so, and the sole effect of the statute is to render it unenforceable by one party against the will of the other who abandons or repudiates it." 27 C. J. 309, 310; Wardner v. Hutchison (Cal. App.) 231 Pac. 563.

It may be assumed, for the purposes of this decision, that sufficient part performance of a parol agreement otherwise unenforceable under said subdivision 7 may take the contract out of the statute. But the acts of the parties alleged to be sufficient part performance must be referable to the covenants of the contract other than the covenants of the marital contract. Trout v. Ogilvie, supra. The defendant insists that there was sufficient part performance in this, that, pursuant to the plaintiff's agreement to make a will for the defendant's benefit, the said will was actually executed and delivered to the defendant, with the further agreement that the same should constitute her last will and testament, and would never be revoked; that, in pursuance of said agreement so performed, the defendant did abandon his medical practice. Nothing further was to be done on the part of the plaintiff so far as the execution of the will was concerned. In the absence of some affirmative act on her part in repudiation of the contract as executed, the defendant was willing to bide his time and rest upon the uncertain chance of surviving the plaintiff. Nothing further was to be done by the defendant under said contract in view of the plaintiff's refusal to live with him and to permit him to assist in the management of said property. We shall assume that under these circumstances sufficient part performance to take the contract out of the statute has been shown. No fraud is alleged. The mere promise of the plaintiff to reduce the contract to writing and her failure or refusal to do so did not constitute fraud. Long v. Long, 162 Cal. 427, 122 P. 1077. That the subject-matter of the alleged contract was lawful is not questioned. That said contract was unique must be admitted. What may be assumed to be defendant's proposal of marriage was conditioned on the promise on the part of his prospective wife that she would make it possible for him to receive more than two-thirds of her $250,000 estate and in the meantime he would husband her resources, so to speak. Without such promise on her part he would not have married her. But the parties had the right to make that sort of a contract, and it is assumed the plaintiff had the right to bargain away her power to revoke said will. It may also be assumed that an agreement not to revoke a will is not within the statute of frauds. Finally, it may be assumed that the defendant has, for the purpose of the consideration of the general demurrers, alleged sufficient facts as against the plaintiff as would justify the court in granting to him some kind of relief. What, then, would be the nature of the relief to which the defendant might be entitled?

[9-11] In the present situation of the parties a remedy by way of specific performance is not available to the defendant, for the reason that such a remedy would not be mutual, in that the defendant could not be compelled specifically to perform his part of the contract, to wit, to assist in the care and management of the plaintiff's property, a purely personal service. Equity will not require the specific performance of a contract where the party seeking its enforcement cannot, from the nature of the contract, be compelled specifically to perform on his part. Civ. Code, §§ 3386, 3390; Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 403; O'Brien v. Perry, 130 Cal. 526, 62 P. 927; Berry v. Moulie, 180 Cal. 137, 179 P. 686; Poultry Producers, etc., v. Barlow, 189 Cal. 278, 208 P. 93. Nor would the court be authorized to issue an injunction to restrain the breach of said contract. Section 526, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the breach of a contract, the performance of which could not be specifically enforced. The fifth subdivision of section 3423, Civil Code, is to the same effect. Concerning said subdivision, this court said, in Poultry Producers, etc., v. Barlow, supra, at page 287 (208 P. 96):

"In this jurisdiction, however, the express statutory inhibition above referred to—subdivision 5 of section 3423 of the Civ. Code—prohibits the granting of an injunction to prevent the breach of any contract, 'the performance of which would not be specifically enforced.' The result is that in this state the courts may not enter a conditional decree in order to avoid the effect of a lack of that mutuality of remedy which is an essential to the right to specific performance. Anderson v. Neal Institutes Co., 37 Cal. App. 174, 173 Pac. 779."

No point is made that the defendant is entitled to consideration on account of any alleged failure of the plaintiff to assist in the care of the dependent daughter. No claim is made for compensation for services past, present, or future, in caring for the plaintiff's property.

[12] If this were an action by defendant as the survivor against the representatives of his deceased wife's estate, the measure of damages would probably be "the value of the property agreed to be devised or bequeathed." Roy v. Pos, 183 Cal. 359, 367, 191 P. 542. But we are here dealing with a controversy inter vivos. The defendant may not survive the plaintiff. If he does not, he concedes that "all his rights will expire with him." He is therefore now confined to the relief which the court might impose on the plaintiff by requiring her to compensate him for whatever damages he has suffered by reason of his change of position to his detriment in giving up his medical practice in Merced county and establishing his practice elsewhere. The loss which he claims to have so suffered is such damage as the law may reasonably fix and determine. The fixation of damages in tort actions accruing to a professional man by reason of the interruption of his business is too common to require reference. The value of the business before and after such interruption is necessarily taken into consideration in fixing the damage. City of Logansport v. Justice, 74 Ind. 378, 39 Am. Rep. 79;

Stafford v. City of Oskaloosa, 64 Iowa, 251, 20 N. W. 174. The measure of the defendant's damage therefore is an amount which will compensate him for the detriment he has suffered on account of his change of position. In order that the amount thereof be properly ascertainable, it is necessary for the defendant to allege facts from which, when proved, the court may properly fix the amount. We are thus brought to a consideration of the special demurrers.

[13, 14] The allegations of the answer and cross-complaint, as indicated, particularly by the words we have italicized in the foregoing statement of facts, are that the defendant discontinued and abandoned a medical practice in Merced county yielding him from $7,000 to $12,000 net per annum (which allegation alone would seem to admit of rather a wide margin of speculation in fixing the value of his former practice); that he will never be able during the remaining years of his life to re-establish his practice in Merced county or the equivalent practice at any other place or any practice of medicine and surgery except a very small and very unremunerative practice as compared with the abandoned practice, and that, in order to support himself, he has been compelled to resume the practice of medicine and surgery in a locality most likely to yield a livelihood to him, and that the amount of his injury cannot be computed in money. The substance of his allegations is that, in reliance upon said contract, he gave up a remunerative practice of medicine and surgery in Merced county for another practice at another place which was less lucrative and agreeable. He failed or refused to allege his age, so that the court might properly receive proof of his expectancy. He has failed utterly to advise the court or the adverse party as to his revenues from his present practice, which practice it may be reasonably inferred has been carried on for many years. Conclusions only and not facts are alleged. If it should transpire that the allegations referred to be not true, it is obvious that the defendant could not be prosecuted for perjury by reason of the uncertainty and immateriality thereof. Section 118a, Pen. Code; 20 Cal. Jur. 1012. In the special demurrer to the said allegations is found the following:

"(1) It cannot be ascertained therefrom how long defendant's medical or surgical practice would have continued. (2) It cannot be ascertained therefrom why the money value thereof or what would have been earned therefrom cannot be ascertained. It cannot be ascertained therefrom what defendant lost by loss of medical practice. * * * (18) Said answer is uncertain in that it cannot be determined therefrom to what extent the defendant was unable to resume medical or surgical practice, or what the yield from his medical or surgical practice as resumed was. * * * (20) Said answer is uncertain in that it cannot be determined therefrom what the defendant means by the statement that he resumed as best he could the practice of medicine and surgery, or what he means by stating that he resumed such practice in the most likely place."

Similar objection is made to the same allegations in the cross-complaint. Further objection is made to both pleadings, on the ground that they are uncertain, in that it cannot be determined therefrom why the defendant's alleged damages cannot be computed or estimated. We are satisfied from an examination of these pleadings that the plaintiff was entitled to allegations of fact which would advise her and the court of something more than mere opinion on matters so vital to the defendant's cause and his alleged loss of business. If he is not in a position to truthfully allege what his revenues have been, either before or after his change of position, his situation in that respect is perhaps unfortunate, but is of no consequence in the consideration of the requirement of sufficient pleadings to set forth the facts. Hoyt v. Thomas, 58 Cal. App. 14, 207 P. 1038. There was certainly no impediment in the way of an allegation as to the age of the defendant, so that the court might under recognized rules and practices determine his expectancy. He presented six different pleadings to the court wherein objections were successfully made to their sufficiency, and upon his failure to request leave to further amend the court was justified in rendering judgment against him. Morrison v. Land, 169 Cal. 580, 591, 147 P. 259.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROBISON v. BRAYTON, Justice of the Peace. (S. F. 11725.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1925.)

Justices of the peace ⇨2—Justice court of township, partly within and partly without city, establishing municipal court, held to continue.

When city of Long Beach, by Amendment No. 35 to its Charter, established a municipal court under Const. art. 6, § 11, and St. 1925, p. 648, office of justice of the peace in a township lying partly within and partly without the boundaries of city held to continue and function, except as to portion of such township lying within the city boundaries, and therefore justice was bound to receive and enter pleadings in a pending case under Code Civ. Proc. § 851 et seq.

Application by Ben. S. Robison for writ of mandate, to be directed to W. S. Brayton, as Justice of the Peace of Long Beach Township, to compel him to enter an oral demurrer and appearance in certain litigation pending before him. Writ granted.

Locke, of San Francisco, Bruce Mason, of Long Beach, Ray L. Morrow, of Glendale, Earl J. Sinclair, of Berkeley, Jess E. Stephens, of Los Angeles, William Guthrie, of San Bernardino, J. H. Howard, of Pasadena, M. A. Fitzgerald, of San Luis Obispo, S. J. Higgins and Frank M. Downer, Jr., both of San Diego, A. W. Sans, of Watsonville, Jerome D. Peters, of Chico, Joseph P. John T. York, of Napa, and George Lull, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent herein in his capacity as a justice of the peace of the township of Long Beach, county of Los Angeles. The particular facts upon which he bases his application and upon which the same is resisted are embraced within the stipulation of the parties as to the facts of the case, and are as follows:

"That W. S. Brayton was, prior to July 24, 1925, the duly elected, qualified, and acting justice of the peace of Long Beach township in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and still continues to be such justice of the peace, unless affected by the provisions of article 6 of the Constitution of the state of California, chapter 358 of the Laws of 1925 of the state of California, and Amendment No. 35 to the Charter of the city of Long Beach. Now and at all times in petitioner's petition mentioned Long Beach township lay partly within and partly without the limits of the city of Long Beach. That on July 24, 1925, by virtue of the provisions of article 6 of the Constitution of the state of California, chapter 358 of the Laws of 1925 of the state of California, and Amendment No. 35 to the Charter of the city of Long Beach, there was established in the city of Long Beach a municipal court, if said Amendment No. 35 is valid. That the Western Credit Association is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California. That on or about the 8th day of July, 1925, said Western Credit Association caused a complaint naming petitioner as defendant, to be filed with respondent as justice of the peace of Long Beach township, and caused summons to be issued thereon. That thereafter, and on or about the 16th day of July, 1925, said Western Credit Association, a corporation, caused said summons to be served upon petitioner, together with a copy of the complaint in said action. That on or about the 4th day of August, 1925, petitioner through his attorney, Henry E. Phister, demanded that respondent as justice of the peace of Long Beach township, enter upon his docket without payment of fees an oral general demurrer, and the appearance of petitioner in said action. That respondent refused and still refuses to enter such oral demurrer or appearance. That petitioner is and was at all times herein mentioned a resident of Long Beach township, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and that at no time in said petition mentioned was he residing within the limits of the city of Long Beach. That amendment No. 35 to the Charter of the city of Long Beach (section 249a) was submitted to the qualified voters of the city of Long Beach at a special municipal election held in said city of Long Beach on the 8th day of April, 1925, and at such special municipal election a majority of the qualified voters of said city of Long Beach voting thereon voted in favor of said Amendment No. 35 to the City Charter of the city of Long Beach and duly ratified same. That, at the time said special municipal election was held, the Legislature of the state of California was in session and continued in session for some time subsequent thereto. That said amendment was submitted to the Legislature then in regular session, and the same was approved as a whole, without amendment or alteration by said Legislature on the 18th day of April, 1925. That all other necessary acts precedent to the adoption of Amendment No. 35 to the City Charter of the city of Long Beach were and each of them was performed in pursuance of the provisions of law pertaining thereto."

It being an admitted fact herein that Long Beach township now and at all the times mentioned in the petitioner's application lay and still lies partly within and partly without the city of Long Beach, it follows that the decision of this court, this day filed in the case of Bakkenson v. Superior Court, etc., 241 P. 874, interpreting the scope and meaning of the recent amendment to section 11 of article 6 of the state Constitution, relating to the creation of municipal courts, has application to the situation presented in this proceeding, and hence that, as to the township of Long Beach, which lay, and according to the stipulation of the parties hereto yet lies, partly within and partly without the boundaries of the city of Long Beach, the jurisdiction of the justices' courts within such townships and of the justices of the peace functioning therein remains unaffected by such constitutional amendment and also by the terms of the statute recently enacted (Stats. 1925, p. 648), except as to the portion of such townships lying within the corporate boundaries of cities qualified to establish or actually establishing municipal courts. Under such interpretation the justice's court of Long Beach township continued and still continues to exist and the respondent herein to be and function as its justice of the peace; and, being such, he was bound to receive and enter upon his docket the oral demurrer of the petitioner herein in the case then pending in his said court, wherein the petitioner was a defendant, under the provisions of section 851 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent herein in his capacity as justice of the peace of Long Beach township, county of Los Angeles. The particular facts upon which it bases its application and upon which the same is resisted are embraced within a stipulation of the parties as to the facts of the case, which said stipulation is in the main identical with that presented in the case of Robison v. Brayton (S. F. No. 11725) 241 P. 867, this day decided, with the exception that in the above case the petitioner was seeking to have received and entered upon the docket of the respondent an oral demurrer in a case which was pending before him as a justice of the peace prior to July 24, 1925, while in the instant case the petitioner was, on August 24, 1925, seeking to have the respondent receive and file a complaint in an action not theretofore pending in the justice's court of Long Beach township, of which it is herein contended the respondent was and still is a justice of the peace.

We can perceive no difference in principle between these two cases, nor in the application to them of the conclusions which this court arrived at in the case of Bakkenson v. Superior Court (S. F. No. 11729) 241 P. 874, this day decided.

On the authority of the foregoing cases it is therefore ordered that a writ of mandate issue as prayed for herein.

BRAYTON v. PAYNE, County Auditor. (S. F. 11727.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1925.)

Justices of the peace  2—Office of justice of township, partly without and partly within city establishing municipal court, held to continue, and justice ineligible to become municipal judge.

When city of Long Beach established a municipal court under Amendment No. 35, § 249a, of its Charter, Const. art. 6, and Laws 1925, p. 648, justice of the peace of Long Beach township, situated partly within and partly without city of Long Beach, continued as justice of the peace, and he was, therefore, not eligible to become judge of municipal court.

In Bank.

Application by W. S. Brayton for writ of mandate, to be directed to H. A. Payne, as County Auditor of the County of Los Angeles, to compel him to audit and approve the demand of petitioner for salary as Judge of the Municipal Court of Long Beach. Writ denied.

F. & F. M. Linnell and Noland M. Reid, all of Long Beach, for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and Chas. E. R. Fulcher, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent herein, as county auditor of the county of Los Angeles, requiring the latter to audit and approve the claim and demand of the petitioner for the sum of $129 alleged to be due as his salary as judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach for the period between July 24, 1925, and July 31, 1925, inclusive, and to issue to petitioner a warrant drawn upon the county treasury for said sum. The particular facts upon which the petitioner bases his application herein and upon which the same is resisted are embraced within the stipulation of the parties as to the facts of the case, which reads as follows:

"Petitioner was, prior to July 24, 1925, and still is, unless his status as such is affected by the establishment of the municipal court in the city of Long Beach, the duly elected, qualified, and acting justice of the peace of Long Beach township, county of Los Angeles, state of California. Long Beach township is, and at all times in petitioner's petition mentioned was, situated partly within and partly without the limits of the city of Long Beach. Petitioner is an elector of the city of Long Beach, but has never been admitted to practice law before the Supreme Court of the state of California. In pursuance of amendment No. 35 (section 249a) of the Charter of the city of Long Beach, article 6 of the Constitution of the state of California, and chapter 358 of the Laws of 1925 of the state of California, there was established in the city of Long Beach on the 24th day of July, 1925, a municipal court. On the 24th of July, 1925, petitioner took the oath of office as judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach, and entered upon and exercised the duties of the judge of said court. Respondent is, and at all times in petitioner's petition mentioned was, the duly appointed, qualified, and acting county auditor of said county of Los Angeles. On July 31, 1925, petitioner in due form presented his claim and demand for salary as judge of such municipal court in the sum of $129, but respondent refused, has ever since refused, and still refuses, to pay said sum or any part thereof."

In the two cases of Robison v. Brayton, 241 P. 867, and Western Credit Association v. Brayton, 241 P. 868, this day filed, it was held, upon the authority of Bakkenson v. Superior Court, 241 P. 874, also this day decided, that the petitioner herein was, on July 24, 1925, and thereafter and during all of the times mentioned in his petition herein continued to be, a justice of the peace of Long Beach township in the county of Los Angeles, and that he had not, either by virtue of the constitutional amendment providing for the creation of municipal courts, or of the recent act of the Legislature providing for the establishment of the same, or of the amendment to the charter of the city of Long Beach with relation to the establishment of such municipal courts within said municipality, or of any action taken by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles relating to the redistricting of the townships thereof, become a judge of the municipal court of said city of Long Beach, or other than a justice of the peace of Long Beach township. It follows necessarily that the petitioner was not in a position to qualify as a judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach or to receive the salary appurtenant to such office. The question, therefore, as to whether or not the petitioner had been admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor at law of this state, is an immaterial issue.

The petition for a writ of mandate is denied.

DEUPREE v. PAYNE, County Auditor.
(L. A. 8863.)

1. Counties ⇐55—Emergency clause of ordinance held to fail, as emergency did not exist.

Where board of supervisors of county of Los Angeles, operating under charter (St. 1913, p. 1484), provided by ordinance under St. 1925, p. 648, for redistricting townships, and abolishing office of justice of peace in certain township, partly within and partly without city of Long Beach, by declaring justices of other townships to have jurisdiction thereof, the emergency clause required under Pol. Code, § 4058, to give ordinance immediate effect, held to fail, where emergency was declared to exist because creation on that date of municipal court for Long Beach would operate to make justice of peace of township in question a municipal judge, and therefore leave township without justice, and said justice did not, in fact, thereby become municipal judge, and therefore ordinance did not take effect until 30 days after adoption.

2. Towns ⇐6—Board of supervisors may change boundaries of townships or abolish them entirely.

In view of St. 1925, p. 648, § 23, board of county supervisors of Los Angeles county has power to change the boundaries of townships within its county as convenience requires, or to entirely abolish a particular township and thereby abolish the justice court formerly existing therein, notwithstanding the former restriction on its powers under Pol. Code, §§ 4015, 4041, as imposed by section 4016.

3. Officers —Incumbent has no property right in office.

An incumbent to an office has no fixed right therein nor any property right paramount to public interest.

Application by Joseph W. Deupree for writ of mandate, to be directed to H. A. Payne, as County Auditor of the County of Los Angeles, to compel him to audit and approve a demand of petitioner for salary as Justice of the Peace of Lankershim Township. Writ granted.

Clarke & Bowker, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and Charles E. R. Fulcher, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein, by his original application, applied for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent herein in his capacity as county auditor of the county of Los Angeles, commanding him to audit and approve the petitioner's claim and demand for the sum of $70, alleged to be the salary due and payable to petitioner as justice of the peace of Lankershim township of the county of Los Angeles for the month of July, 1925, and which said sum the respondent as such auditor has refused to audit, approve, and allow in its entirety. The particular facts upon which said application is based and is resisted are embraced in the stipulation of the parties hereto as to the facts of the case, which reads as follows:

"Prior to July 23, 1925, there existed in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, a judicial township named Lankershim township, and the same now exists unless abolished by Ordinance No. 1320, New Series, or Ordinance No. 1321, New Series, of the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles. Prior to July 23, 1925, petitioner was the duly elected, qualified, and acting justice of the peace of said Lankershim township and continued as such during the entire month of July, 1925, unless his status was affected by said ordinances or either of them. That on July 23, 1925, the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county duly and regularly, by a four-fifths vote, adopted Ordinance No. 1320, New Series, and Exhibit A of respondent's return herein is a true copy of said Ordinance No. 1320, New Series. That on July 24, 1925, the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county duly and regularly, by a four-fifths vote, adopted Ordinance No. 1321, New Series, and Exhibit B of respondent's return herein is a true copy of said Ordinance No. 1321, New Series. That each of said ordinances purported to redistrict the county of Los Angeles into judicial townships, and by the terms of each of said ordinances Lankershim township was abolished. On July 24, 1925, there was established in the city of Long Beach a municipal court, at which time the city of Long Beach lay partly within and partly without Los Angeles township and one or more other judicial townships. The salary of the justice of the peace of Lankershim township was and, if said township is still in existence, is $70 per month. At all times in petitioner's petition mentioned respondent was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting county auditor of the county of Los Angeles, state of California. On the 3d day of August, 1925, petitioner presented his demand in due form to respondent for his salary during the entire month of July, 1925, and respondent then and there refused, has ever since refused, and still refuses to audit and approve said claim of salary in the full amount, but has audited and approved said claim of salary except as to the sum of $18.07 as such salary from July 24, 1925, to July 31, 1925, inclusive."

On October 13, 1925, the petitioner herein presented and filed a supplemental petition wherein he also applied for a writ of mandate for the payment of his salary as such justice of the peace of such township for the month of August, 1925, his claim and demand for which the respondent herein had also refused to allow and approve. There is on file a stipulation by the parties hereto that the facts alleged in said supplemental application are true.

[1] Dealing first with the petitioner's original application herein, the first question with which we are confronted concerns the effect to be given to the two ordinances adopted by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles purporting to redistrict the townships of Los Angeles county. These two ordinances are identical in terms, and only differ as to the respective dates of their adoption by said board. We do not deem it necessary to determine in this proceeding any nice question as to whether the first of these two ordinances was in all respects effective by reason of the fact that it was adopted by said board one day before the legislative act of 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 648) was to go into effect, since, if the first of said two ordinances was subject to any defect on that account, the second of said ordinances in identical terms was not. We shall therefore deal only with the second of said ordinances in dealing with the merits of the instant proceeding in so far, at least, as it relates to the petitioner's original application herein.

The ordinance of the board of supervisors, adopted July 24, 1925, in so far as it refers to Lankershim township, purports to abolish said township, and impliedly, at least, to also abolish the office of the justice of the peace of said former township, by declaring therein that the justices of the peace of Los Angeles township to which the territory of Lankershim township was added should be the successors of the justice of Lankershim township. Said ordinance, as to the nature thereof and as to the time when its provisions should take effect, contained the following declaration:

"Sec. 30. This ordinance shall take effect immediately upon the passage hereof because the adoption and enforcement thereof is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety, in that on July 24, 1925, there will be established in the city of Long Beach, county of Los Angeles, state of California, a municipal court, and by virtue of the provisions of the law pertaining to the establishment of such municipal court, the justices of the peace of Los Angeles township will become the judges of the municipal court of Long Beach, thus depriving Los Angeles township of any justice court or justices' courts, or justice of the peace, or justices of the peace."

The first question which the foregoing state of the record presents is as to the time when the said ordinance of the board of supervisors must be held to have gone into effect. The county of Los Angeles is, and ever since the year 1913, has been, operating under a charter form of government adopted by the people thereof and approved by the Legislature in that year. Stats. 1913, p. 1484. The said charter of said county is, however, silent as to the powers of the board of supervisors in the matter of the passage and adoption of emergency ordinances, and the said county is therefore governed in that respect by general law. The general law upon that subject is embraced within the terms of section 4058 of the Political Code as enacted in the year 1911, which reads in part as follows:

"No ordinance passed by the board of supervisors, except when otherwise specially required by the laws of the state, and except an ordinance for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, which contains a declaration of, * * * its urgency and is passed by a four-fifths vote of the board, and no ordinance granting a franchise shall go into effect before thirty days from its final passage.
* * *

In conformity with the above-quoted provision of the Political Code, the said board of supervisors undertook to adopt their ordinance of July 24, 1925, as an emergency ordinance, and to give the same immediate operation and effect. In order to comply with said provision of the Political Code, the board was required to state in said ordinance the particular emergency, the existence of which was required to enable them to enact said ordinance as an emergency ordinance and to have the same go at once into effect. If such emergency did not in fact or in law exist, it should require no argument to show that the said board would have no power to enact such ordinance so as to have the same become effective prior to the expiration of the 30-day period provided for the taking effect of other than emergency ordinances. It was in fact so held in the case of In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 P. 517, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75. The particular emergency which the said board specifies in that portion of their said ordinance, which is above quoted, is this:

"That on July 24, 1925, there will be established in the city of Long Beach, county of Los Angeles, state of California, a municipal court, and by virtue of the provisions of the law pertaining to the establishment of such municipal court, the justices of the peace of Los Angeles township will become the judges of the municipal court of Long Beach, thus depriving Los Angeles township of any justice court or justices' courts, or justice of the peace or justices of the peace."

This court has held in the case of Bakkenson v. Superior Court, 241 P. 874, this day decided, that no such result as a matter of either law or fact has followed or could follow from the establishment of the municipal court of Long Beach so as to affect those townships which upon the date referred to lay partly within and partly without the city of Long Beach, at least as to such portions thereof which lay without the boundaries of such municipality, and that as to such latter portions thereof the offices and jurisdiction of the justices of the peace thereof still continued to persist. This being so, the particular emergency which the said board of supervisors specified in their said ordinance as comprising the emergency feature thereof was nonexistent upon the date of the passage and approval of said ordinance, and, being so, it could not furnish the basis upon which alone an emergency ordinance having immediate operation and effect could be enacted under the foregoing provision of the Political Code. Not therefore being the subject of enactment as an emergency ordinance upon the ground stated therein, such ordinance could not become effective until the expiration of the 30-day period fixed by said provision of the Code, and, this being so, it follows that the petitioner was in no wise affected by the terms of said ordinance during the period of 30 days intervening between the date of its enactment and the statutory date when it became effective; and from this it follows that the petitioner herein was entitled to the whole of his salary as justice of the peace for Lankershim township for the month of July, 1925, and is now entitled to have a writ issue in accordance with the prayer of his original application.

[2, 3] When we come to consider the supplemental application of the petitioner filed herein on October 13, 1925, a number of much more serious problems are presented. Assuming that the ordinance of the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county adopted on July 24, 1925, became effective 30 days thereafter, it follows that such ordinance was in full force and effect on August 23, 1925, and continued to be in force and effect thereafter. If the effect of said ordinance is to be that stated therein, viz. the abolition of Lankershim township as of the date when said ordinance became effective, it would follow that Lankershim township and hence the justice court of Lankershim township ceased to exist upon the said date when such ordinance took effect. It may not be doubted that the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county possess the power to change the boundaries of townships within their county as convenience requires. Section 4041 of the Political Code, which has relation to the general jurisdiction and powers of boards of supervisors, grants the said board that power. Subdivision 2 of said section, granting such power, reads as follows:

"2. To divide the counties into townships, election, school, road supervisor, sanitary, and other districts required by law, change the same, and create others, as convenience requires."

Section 4015 of the Political Code, which has relation to township officers, contains the same grant of power, reading as follows:

"The board of supervisors of each county, as public convenience may require, shall divide their respective counties into townships for the purpose of electing justices of the peace and constables; provided, however, that in the establishment of townships that may be hereafter established, no incorporated city shall be divided so as to lie partly within one township and partly within another."

In the same article, however, in which the foregoing section appears, and immediately following it, is section 4016, which reads as follows:

"The provisions of this article shall not affect any incumbent of the office of justice of the peace or constable."

That the foregoing two sections of the Political Code are to be read together, and that so read the latter section places a definite limitation upon the power of boards of supervisors to so change the boundaries of townships as to affect the incumbency of the justice of the peace of any township, the boundaries of which have been changed, would seem too plain for argument. As these sections of the Political Code stood, therefore, prior to July 24, 1925, and had they remained unaffected by any legislation having effect on and after said day, the office and hence the salary of the petitioner herein would have been unaffected thereby. On the 24th day of July, 1925, however, the act of the Legislature (Stats. 1925, p. 648) went into effect. The purpose of this act was unquestionably to comply with the mandate of the recent constitutional amendment providing for the creation of municipal courts and directing the Legislature to provide by general law for the establishment, constitution, regulation, government, and procedure of municipal courts. Both the constitutional amendment and the act in question provide for radical changes in those townships and township justices courts in counties wherein one or more municipalities exist which are qualified by population to establish municipal courts and which shall proceed to establish the same as to townships lying wholly within such municipalities. Justices courts cease to exist, and the justices thereof either become judges of the municipal courts, or, if disqualified to so become, cease to be and function as justices of the peace. As to townships lying partly within and partly without the boundaries of such municipalities, the territorial jurisdiction of the justices of the peace thereof is, or is likely to be, materially affected by the assertion of the jurisdiction of such municipal courts over that portion of the territory of such townships as may lie within such municipalities. Bakkenson v. Superior Court, supra. A condition was or was likely to be thus created which would require an extensive exercise of the powers of boards of supervisors over the subject of the changing and readjustment of the boundaries of townships within such counties as were to be affected by the going into effect of said constitutional amendment and of the said act passed for the purpose of putting the same into full operation and effect. It would seem that the powers of the governing body of the county should be plenary in the foregoing regard in order to give such full effect thereto as the exigencies of the particular situation might require, and that such was the purpose of the Legislature in placing in said legislative act section 23 thereof, we entertain no doubt. Said section reads as follows:

"Whenever a municipal court is established for any city which lies partly within and partly without one or more judicial townships, the board of supervisors of the county within which the municipal court is established shall immediately by ordinance divide such county into judicial townships are [as] public convenience may require."

While it is true that the act of which the foregoing section forms a part does not in express terms purport to repeal any particular portions or sections of the Political Code, it is obvious that such is the effect wherever the provisions thereof are operative to effectuate changes in townships and township justices courts and the justices of the peace who are the incumbents thereof in all counties within the city or cities and counties of which municipal courts may be established. The provision of the Political Code above quoted, relating to justices courts and the incumbents thereof, are obviously abrogated by the general provisions of the act of 1925, in so far as they affect justices of the peace in townships lying wholly within the boundaries of such municipalities, for as to such townships the office and the officer both cease to exist. If the general provisions of said act are thus far operative we can see no reason why the particular provisions of section 23 of said act should not also be operative as to all townships and township justices courts and the justices thereof which may be affected to a greater or less degree by the putting into effect of the provisions of the entire act. The present case furnishes an apt illustration of the very matter under review. Lankershim township has apparently been so far affected by the present or impending changes in the township boundaries and the territorial and Application by Joseph Marchetti for writ of mandate, against H. A. Payne, as County Auditor of the County of Los Angeles, to compel him to issue a warrant to petitioner for salary as Judge of the Municipal Court of Long Beach. Writ denied.

Leslie Hewitt and Hewitt, Crump & Penn, all of Los Angeles (Kimball Fletcher, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and Chas. E. R. Fulcher, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of mandate directed to the respondent as county auditor of the county of Los Angeles, requiring the latter to issue to petitioner a warrant drawn upon the county treasury for the sum of $129, alleged to be due and payable to the petitioner as his salary as judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach for the period between July 24, 1925, and July 31, 1925. The single question presented by this application is as to whether the petitioner became or was a judge of the said municipal court during said period or at all. From the stipulated statement of facts filed herein, it appears that prior to July 24, 1925, the petitioner was a duly appointed, qualified, and acting justice of the peace in and for Los Angeles township in said county of Los Angeles, a portion of which lay partly within and partly without the corporate limits of the city of Long Beach; that by virtue of the provisions of law and of Amendment No. 35 to the Charter of the city of Long Beach, there was, on July 24, 1925, established in said city of Long Beach a municipal court. There is also set forth in said stipulated statement of facts a statement to the effect that on July 23, 1925, and also on July 24, 1925, the board of supervisors passed and adopted certain ordinances identical in form, purporting to rearrange the boundaries of the townships of Los Angeles county, the text of which ordinances is appended to the return other jurisdiction of the justices of the peace of those other townships of Los Angeles county which lie in whole or in part within the boundaries of the cities of Long Beach and Los Angeles as to render it no longer expedient or practicable that said Lankershim township should exist as a separate entity in the government of Los Angeles county. These consequences have been the direct result of the establishment of municipal courts in the two municipalities above referred to, and, such being so, we must assume that the occurrence of just such results was within the contemplation of the Legislature in the adoption of the legislative act in question, and that it was therefore the intent of the Legislature in the insertion therein of section 23 thereof to provide for such contingencies by reposing in the board of supervisors of counties thus affected such plenary power to deal with township and township justices courts therein and the officers thereof as to render fully effective the extensive readjustments contemplated by the constitutional amendment and the act passed in pursuance thereof. That such boards of supervisors in so dealing with such a situation could entirely abolish a particular township we have no doubt, and that by so doing they could also do away with the justice court formerly existing therein, we have also no doubt, and, if in so doing the effect thereof was to put out of being both the office of justice of the peace and the incumbent of such office in his official capacity, we can perceive no obstacle in the way of such a consequence, since it is well settled that there is no vested right in an incumbent to an office, nor any property right therein paramount to the public interest. Miner v. Solano County, 26 Cal. 116; McKannay v. Horton, 151 Cal. 711, 719, 91 P. 598, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 121 Am. St. Rep. 146; Boyd v. Pendegast, 57 Cal. App. 504, 207 P. 713.

We do not deem it necessary to consider any other points discussed by respective counsel in their briefs presented herein, since the following is our conclusion from the foregoing considerations, viz.: That as to the salary of the petitioner herein for the entire period of the month of July, 1925, he is entitled to a writ as prayed for in his original petition herein; and that the petitioner is further entitled to his salary as prayed for in his supplementary petition herein for such portion of the month of August, 1925, as lay within the period between the passage of the aforesaid ordinance of the board of supervisors adopted on July 24, 1925, and up to the time when such ordinance is herein held to have gone into effect.

Let a writ issue in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion.

We concur: MYERS, C. J.; Lawlor, J.; SHENK, J.; LENNON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; WASTE, J.

of the respondent to the alternative writ issued herein. The main question presented by this application is, we think, sufficiently answered by our decision in the case of Bakken-son v. Superior Court, 241 P. 874, this day filed, wherein it is held that as to townships partly within and partly without the boundaries of municipalities qualified to establish municipal courts within their territorial limits and establishing the same, the existence and jurisdiction of the justice's courts within such townships and of the justices of the peace functioning therein are each unaffected thereby except in so far as the territory embraced within such municipalities is concerned. Such being our conclusion in that case, it follows that the petitioner in this proceeding still continues to be a justice of the peace of Los Angeles township, notwithstanding the establishment of a municipal court in the city of Long Beach, and has not, by the act of such establishment or otherwise, become a judge of such municipal court. It further follows that the action of the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, taken in the passing and immediate putting into effect of the ordinances above referred to or either of them, is an immaterial factor in the disposition of this case, since it appears upon the face thereof that the township of Los Angeles, of which this petitioner is a justice of the peace, still continues in being, and that the justice's court thereof, of which the petitioner is such justice of the peace, also still continues to exist and function.

It follows that the application of the petitioner herein for a writ of mandate must be, and the same is hereby, denied.

We concur: MYERS, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.

BAKKENSON v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(S. F. 11729.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1925.)

1. Constitutional law ¶15—Entire scope and purpose of amendment must be given effect in construing portion.

In determining meaning of language employed in a portion of a constitutional amendment, the entire scope and purpose of amendment as expressed when read as a whole must be looked to and given effect.

2. Constitutional law ¶12—Of alternative constructions of amendment, one consisting of sense and wisdom will be adopted.

Where a constitutional amendment is susceptible of two constructions, one leading to mischief or absurdity, and the other consisting of sound sense and wise policy, the former will be rejected and the latter adopted.

3. Justices of the peace ¶2—Municipal court amendment held not to oust justices of peace of townships partly within and partly without municipalities from jurisdiction over portions not within cities.

Municipal court amendment to Const. art. 6, § 11a, St. 1925, p. 648, §§ 4, 5, and Amendment No. 35 to Charter of City of Long Beach (St. 1925, p. 1349), held not to abolish justice courts in townships lying partly within and partly without cities or cities and counties wherein municipal court has been established, in respect to jurisdiction over those portions of townships lying outside of cities.

4. Criminal law ¶90(4)—Justice court held to have jurisdiction over offense, notwithstanding subsequent redistricting ordinance.

Justice of the peace held to have jurisdiction of misdemeanor within Pen. Code, § 1425, subd. 3, irrespective of ordinances purporting to redistrict townships in such a manner that the district in which offense was committed was no longer included in township presided over by justice before whom complaint was brought.

5. Prohibition ¶27—Jurisdiction of superior court over appeal from refusal of justice to exercise jurisdiction presumed.

Jurisdiction of superior court over an appeal by the state from an order of justice court having jurisdiction of misdemeanor of class described in Pen. Code, § 1425, subd. 3, will, on application for writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court from exercising jurisdiction over the case, be presumed, where appeal was regularly taken and perfected and motion to dismiss appeal was not based on grounds that order was not appealable.

Application by A. G. Bakken-son for writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and another. Writ denied.

Ivan Kelso, John R. Berryman, Jr., and Louis C. Spiess, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel, and Chas. E. R. Fulcher, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of prohibition directed against the respondents, superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles and Walter C. Guerin, one of the judges thereof, forbidding said respondents to take and exercise jurisdiction over a certain case entitled People v. Bakken-son on appeal from the justice's court of Los Angeles township, in which case the petitioner herein is charged with the commission of a misdemeanor alleged to have been committed on the 28th day of July, 1925, within the said township of Los Angeles county, but outside of the portion thereof which lies within the corporate limits of the city of Los Angeles and also outside of the portion thereof which lies or at least formerly lay within the corporate limits of the city of Long Beach. The questions involved in this proceeding relate to the interpretation to be given to what is known as the municipal court amendment to section 11a of article 6 of the state Constitution and to the legislation adopted by the Legislature of 1925 for the purpose of giving effect to said amendment to the Constitution, and also as to the validity and application of certain amendments to the charter of the city of Long Beach and of certain ordinances of the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles with relation to township boundaries within said county.

The particular facts upon which this proceeding is founded, and which the parties hereto have stipulated to be true are these: The petitioner was on July 28, 1925, arrested upon the charge of driving an automobile on and along Whittier boulevard near Belden avenue in the township of Los Angeles, and in that portion thereof which lay and yet lies outside of the corporate boundaries of either the city of Los Angeles or the city of Long Beach, and was and is unincorporated territory; and upon his said arrest was brought before the court which was then purporting to act as the justice's court of said Los Angeles township and before Robert Scott, who was then purporting to be and act as the justice of the peace thereof. The petitioner upon his arraignment demurred to the jurisdiction of said court and of the justice thereof to hear and determine his case, and, this demurrer being overruled, entered a plea of not guilty, but, upon the cause being set for trial, appeared upon the date fixed therefor, and, withdrawing his plea of not guilty, entered a plea of guilty and moved in arrest of judgment upon the sole ground that the said justice's court and the said justice thereof were without jurisdiction to pass sentence or render judgment in his case. The justice granted said motion, whereupon an appeal was taken by the district attorney to the superior court, which appeal being perfected and being assigned to department 10 thereof, the petitioner herein moved said court and Hon. W. G. Guerin, the judge thereof, to dismiss said appeal upon the ground that the said superior court had no jurisdiction to entertain or to do other than to dismiss the same for the reason that the justice's court from which said appeal had been taken was not at the times mentioned a lawfully constituted court and was not in fact in existence, and that said Robert Scott, claiming to be and acting as the justice of the peace of said justice's court, had been without jurisdiction to hear and determine said case. The superior court and the said judge thereof denied petitioner's said motion and proceeded to set said cause for trial, and will, unless prohibited by this court, entertain, try, and determine said cause upon said appeal.

It is further stipulated by the parties hereto that the city of Long Beach, county of Los Angeles, is governed under a charter framed and adopted under the authority of the Constitution of the state of California, and that said city has attained a population of more than 40,000 inhabitants, as ascertained by the last census, taken under the authority of the Congress of the United States. That certain amendments to the charter of the said city of Long Beach were duly ratified by the electors of said city and said amendments were submitted to the Legislature of the state of California, for approval or rejection without alteration or amendment, at the forty-sixth session thereof, and that the said session of said Legislature, acting through the senate and assembly thereof, by joint resolution, the majority of both houses voting therefor, did approve said amendments to said charter as a whole and without alteration or amendment. That amendment No. 35 of said Charter (St. 1925, p. 1349), adopted as aforesaid, provides that, upon the taking effect of certain acts of said Legislature in conformity to sections 1, 5, 11, 12, 14, 18, 23, and 24 of article 6 of the Constitution of the state of California, as amended in 1924, relative to the creation, regulation, government, and procedure of municipal courts and for the establishment thereof in cities governed under a charter framed and adopted under the authority of said Constitution it should ipso facto become effective, and there should thereby be established in the city of Long Beach a municipal court as contemplated by said sections of the California Constitution herein referred to.

It further appears from the stipulation of the parties hereto as to the facts that prior to July 23, 1925, Los Angeles township lay partly within and partly without the city of Long Beach; that on July 23, 1925, the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, by a four-fifths vote, adopted an ordinance purporting to redistrict the county of Los Angeles into judicial townships, by the terms of which ordinance Los Angeles township was so described as to lie wholly without the limits of the city of Long Beach; that on July 24, 1925, the said board of supervisors again passed and adopted this identical ordinance, each of which said ordinances is appended to the return of the respondents herein as Exhibits A and B; that immediately after the adoption of each of said ordinances, and on the dates, respectively thereof, the said board of supervisors regularly adopted an order that the justices of the peace who, under the terms of each of said foregoing ordinances would succeed themselves, were thereby appointed justices of the peace of their respective townships as redistricted under said ordinances respectively.

[1, 2] The basis of the petitioner's contention herein rests upon the interpretation and effect which he insists shall be given to the constitutional amendment, the statutory provisions, the charter amendments, and the ordinances to which reference has above been made. The particular passage in the constitutional amendment relied upon in support of the petitioner's position is the portion of section 11a of article 6 thereof, which reads as follows:

"In any city or in any city and county where such municipal court has been established, and in townships situated in whole or in part in such city or city and county, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court except as herein provided; and pending actions, trials, and all pending business of inferior courts within such city or city and county or township, upon the establishment of any such municipal court, shall unless otherwise provided by law be transferred to and become pending in such municipal court, and all records of such inferior courts be transferred to and thereafter be and become records of such municipal court. Upon the establishment of any such municipal court, and until the first election and the qualification of the judge or judges thereof and the first appointment and the qualification of the clerks and other attachés thereof, the judges or justices and the clerks and other attachés of any existing inferior courts in such city or city and county or township shall become and act as the judges, clerks and attachés respectively of such municipal court."

The petitioner contends that by the phrase in the foregoing portion of said constitutional amendment reading, "In any city or in any city and county where such municipal court has been established, and in townships situated in whole or in part in such city or city and county, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court except as herein provided," justice's courts were abolished in all townships which lay partly within and partly without cities or cities and counties wherein a municipal court has been established; and that, since a municipal court has been established in the city of Long Beach by amendment to its charter, the justice's court wherein his case arose had ceased to be, and the justice thereof ceased to function as such at the time of his arrest and attempted trial therein. We cannot agree with the petitioner's contention as to the interpretation to be placed upon the foregoing language in the constitutional amendment under review. In order to determine what the framers of said amendment intended by the language employed in the foregoing portion thereof, the entire scope and purpose of said amendment as expressed in the terms thereof when read as a whole must be looked to and given effect. Reading said constitutional amendment as a whole, it is manifest that its purpose was to provide for the organization and functioning of so-called municipal courts within the territorial limits of such cities and cities and counties as possessed the requisite population therefor and as should by the ways provided therein conclude to embrace its benefits, the municipal courts to be thus established to be confined in some respects as to their jurisdiction and functions to the territorial limits of the municipalities thus resolving to establish the same. It was a matter of public political record and history, of which the framers of this amendment apparently took notice, that in the course of establishing such municipal courts in such municipalities cases would arise where townships with their already established justice's courts would be found to lie partly within and partly without the prescribed limits of such municipalities, and which would, as to that portion of the area of such townships as lay within the boundaries of such municipalities, be affected by the action of the latter in resolving to bind themselves within the terms of said amendment, and that as to such portions of such townships thus to be affected the provisions of said amendment should be operative. But it nowhere appears from said amendment, when considered as a whole, that it was the intent of those who framed it to disturb to the extent of destroying the judicial organization within those portions of such affected townships as lay outside of the limits of those municipalities which had decided to set up municipal courts within their said limits. To so interpret the particular language of the portion of said amendment upon which the petitioner relies, and which is above excerpted, would be to give to the amendment as a whole the effect of either taking away from the inhabitants of the portion of such townships as lay without the bounds of such municipalities their already established justice's courts, leaving them without tribunals for the institution and trial of causes within the jurisdiction of such court, or of extending the jurisdiction of the municipal courts of contiguous cities over such outlying territory, neither of which results is thinkable as within the intent of the framers of this amendment to the Constitution, since to give it such an interpretation would be to take away from the inhabitants of such outlying territory their already established system of justice's courts and township officers by the vote of the electorate of an incorporated municipality of which they form no part, and to substitute in place thereof a system of municipal courts in the establishment of which and in the selection of the judges and other officers of which they would have no vote or voice. It is a cardinal principle of construction, applicable to constitutional amendments, as was well said by this court in the case of San Joaquin, etc., Canal & Irr. Co. v. Stevinson, 164 Cal. 221-229, 128 P. 924, 927, with reference to the interpretation of statutes that:

"Where a statute 'is fairly susceptible of two constructions, one leading inevitably to mischief or absurdity, and the other consisting of sound sense and wise policy, the former should be rejected and the latter adopted.' In re Mitchell, 120 Cal. 386 [52 P. 800]. 'A construction should not be given a statute, if it can be avoided, which will lead to absurd results, or to a conclusion plainly not contemplated by the Legislature.' Merced Bank v. Casaccia, 103 Cal. 645 [37 P. 649]."

In Black on Interpretation of Laws (2d Ed.) § 8, p. 20, the rule is thus stated:

"It is a cardinal rule in the interpretation of Constitutions that the instrument must be so construed as to give effect to the intention of the people who adopted it. This intention is to be sought in the Constitution itself, and the apparent meaning of the words employed is to be taken as expressed, except in cases where that assumption would lead to an absurdity, ambiguity, or contradiction."

In the case of Signal Hill v. County of Los Angeles, 236 P. 304, this court quoted with approval the following language from 2 Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction, §§ 347-376, viz.:

"It is indispensable to a correct understanding of a statute to inquire first what is the subject of it, what object is intended to be accomplished by it. When the subject-matter is once clearly ascertained and its general intent, a key is found to all its intricacies—general words may be restrained to it, and those of narrower import may be expanded to embrace it to effectuate that intent. When the intention can be collected from the statute, words may be modified, altered, or supplied so as to obviate any repugnancy or inconsistency with such intention. * * * Words or clauses may be enlarged or restricted to effectuate the intention or to harmonize them with other expressed provisions. * * * The particular inquiry is not what is the abstract force of the words or what they may comprehend, but in what sense they were intended to be used as they are found in the act. The sense in which they were intended to be used furnishes the rule of interpretation, and this is to be collected from the context; and a narrower or more extended meaning is to be given according to the intention thus indicated."

In the case of In re Haines, 234 P. 883, this court again quoting from the author last above cited said:

"The mere literal construction of a section in a statute ought not to prevail if it is opposed to the intention of the Legislature apparent by the statute; and, if the words are sufficiently flexible to admit of some other construction, it is to be adopted to effectuate that intention. The intent prevails over the letter, and the letter will, if possible, be so read as to conform to the spirit of the act. 'While the intention of the Legislature must be ascertained from the words used to express it, the manifest reason and the obvious purpose of the law should not be sacrificed to a literal interpretation of such words.' Words or clauses may be enlarged or restricted to effectuate the intention or to harmonize them with other expressed provisions. Where general language construed in a board sense would lead to absurdity, it may be restrained. The particular inquiry is not what is the abstract force of the words or what they may comprehend, but in what sense they were intended to be used as they are found in the act.' Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction, (2d Ed.) § 376, p. 721."

[3] Having in mind these principles, and applying them to the amendment as a whole and to the particular language in the portion thereof above quoted, and upon which the petitioner places his main reliance, we are of the opinion that the phrase therein reading, "in townships situated in * * * part in such city or city and county, there shall be no other court," etc., should be interpreted to mean that it was the intent of the framers of said amendment to provide that in such part of such townships as would be found to be situated within such city or cities establishing such municipal court there should be no other inferior courts than such municipal courts as were to be provided therefor under the terms of said amendment. Such an interpretation would leave said amendment entirely free from the absurdity and confusion which would result from placing the meaning upon said clause for which the petitioner contends.

The foregoing conclusion is further enforced by the provisions found in another portion of said amendment to the Constitution, reading as follows:

"The Legislature shall determine the number of each of the inferior courts in incorporated towns, and in townships or counties, or in incorporated cities or cities and counties, where there is no municipal court, * * * and until such inferior courts are otherwise so determined and provided for, such inferior courts now existing shall, until otherwise provided by law, continue in all respects as established at the time of the adoption of this amendment. * * *"

The obvious purpose of the foregoing provision was to empower the Legislature to adjust whatever disturbances should arise in cities or counties or townships outside of those in or over which or parts of which municipal courts had been set up and to provide that, until such adjustments had been made by appropriate legislation, the status quo as to existing inferior courts within the affected territory should continue. We are aided, though not controlled, in our interpretation of the constitutional amendment in question, by the contemporaneous interpretation placed thereon by the Legislature. The amendment in terms provided that the Legislature should enact such legislation as was required to carry the provisions of the amendment into effect with special references to "the powers, jurisdiction, duties, and responsibilities" of inferior courts in townships where there is no municipal court. In obedience to this direction the Legislature of 1925 enacted what is known as the "Municipal Court Law" (Stats. 1925, p. 648), and in so doing undertook to deal with townships which would be affected by the establishment of municipal courts within cities of which such townships territorially formed a part, and in so doing, and in sections 4 and 5 of said act, provided as follows:

"Sec. 4. In each city or city and county, in which a municipal court is established as herein provided, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court unless it be a court having jurisdiction in cases in which the claim or demand is fifty dollars or less. Upon the establishment of a municipal court as herein provided all existing inferior courts, except as above provided, in the city or city and county wherein such municipal court is established and in a township situated wholly within such city or city and county shall be superseded by the municipal court, and the judges, justices, clerks and other attachés of such inferior court or courts shall become and be the judges, clerks and other attachés of the municipal court, in the manner and until such time as their successors are elected or appointed as hereinafter provided. All actions pending and all records of every court inferior to the superior court, the jurisdiction of which lies wholly within a city or city and county within which a municipal court is to be established, shall upon the day fixed for the establishment of such municipal court become actions pending in and records of such municipal court. All actions pending in, and records of courts, the jurisdiction of which falls partly within and partly without a city or city and county in which a municipal court is to be established, shall after the establishment of such municipal court continue in such inferior court; provided, however, that thereafter any actions then pending, together with the records thereof which could or should have been brought in such municipal court, if such municipal court had been established at the time such action was brought, shall upon motion of any party thereto be transferred to and become a case pending in and records of such municipal court.

"Sec. 5. In the event that there is annexed to a city having a municipal court, territory comprising all of the jurisdiction of an inferior court, the records of and cases pending in such inferior court shall become the records of and cases pending in the municipal court.

"In the event that there is annexed to a city having a municipal court, territory comprising part of the jurisdiction of an inferior court, the part of the township or other judicial subdivision not annexed shall continue as a judicial subdivision, but that annexed to the city shall be within the jurisdiction of the municipal court."

It thus appears that the Legislature, by the foregoing provisions in said act, has placed upon the constitutional amendment in question, precisely the interpretation which in our opinion should be given to its terms. It would seem to follow from the foregoing considerations that within that portion of Los Angeles township lying outside of incorporated territory and wherein the original case against said petitioner arose, the justice's court of said township still continued to exist and function. It is true that it did so within restricted territory, in view of the action of the city of Long Beach in electing to organize a system of municipal courts within its own territorial limits, but the original jurisdiction of said justice's court remained otherwise unimpaired. And, if this conclusion be correct, it would seem to further follow that the fact, if it be a fact, that the city of Long Beach had or had not succeeded by amendment of its charter in bringing itself within the terms of the constitutional amendment and in thus establishing a system of municipal courts within its territorial limits, would be immaterial to the determination of this cause, since the offense with which the petitioner stands charged was committed in a portion of Los Angeles township which was never within the territorial limits of said city of Long Beach.

[4, 5] In the answer and return made by the respondents to the alternative writ issued herein they have set forth the fact that on July 23, 1925, and again on July 24, 1925, the board of supervisors undertook to pass two certain identical ordinances purporting to redistrict the townships of the county of Los Angeles and to give to each of said ordinances immediate effect. These two ordinances are appended to the respondents' said answer and return as exhibits, and it appears therefrom that Los Angeles township was thereby so reorganized as to its boundaries that no portion thereof was to longer lie within the limits of the city of Long Beach, and that no portion thereof was to extend beyond the boundaries of the city of Los Angeles. The result of this readjustment of the territorial boundaries of Los Angeles township, if immediately effectual, would be to exclude that particular portion of the township of Los Angeles within which the offense of the petitioner was committed from the boundaries of Los Angeles township as of the time of the commission of his offense. This fact, however, would be of no particular avail to the petitioner herein, since the offense with which he stands charged was a misdemeanor within the class described in subdivision 3 of section 1425 of the Penal Code, and hence was within the jurisdiction of the justice's court of any of the townships within the county of Los Angeles. It thus becomes immaterial to a determination of this case whether the aforesaid ordinances of the board of supervisors were or were not to be immediately effectual or in fact were to be valid or effectual at all, since this petitioner's case could in no wise be affected thereby. The city of Los Angeles has not as yet put into effect any law or ordinance establishing municipal courts within its boundaries, and hence the justice of the peace of Los Angeles township continues to function within that portion of said township lying within said city; and hence, as we have seen, had and has jurisdiction over such offenses as that with which the petitioner stands charged. Having had such jurisdiction at the time of the commission of such offense and at the time of the petitioner's arrest and arraignment, the trial court erred in its refusal to exercise it. Whether its order made in so doing was an appealable order is not discussed by the parties hereto, and, the motion to dismiss said appeal not being based upon that ground, we shall assume, for the purposes of this decision, that the petitioner's case was the proper subject of an appeal by the people to the superior court; and, such appeal having been regularly taken and perfected, it follows that the said superior court had and has jurisdiction over said case upon appeal and may properly proceed with the consideration of the same.

It follows that the petitioner's application for a writ of prohibition must be, and the same is hereby, denied.

Amendment No. 35 of the Charter of the City of Long Beach, § 249a (St. 1925, p. 1349), providing for municipal court within the provisions of Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, 11, 12, 14, 18, 23, 24, as amended in 1924, which was approved by the Legislature in session at time of ratification by voters of charter amendment, held regularly adopted and duly ratified under Const. art. 11, § 8.

3. Judges ⚡2—City of Long Beach entitled to five municipal judges.

The city of Long Beach, a city of the second and a half class, is entitled to five municipal court judges under St. 1925, pp. 648-652.

4. Judges ⚡8—Governor's appointment of municipal judge to fill "vacancy" of newly created office held valid.

Where Long Beach, a city of the second and a half class, entitled to five municipal judges under St. 1925, pp. 648-652, established municipal court, and had several vacancies for that office because of inability of all the justices to qualify as judges under Const. art. 6, § 11a, Governor could appoint judges to fill such vacancies under Act of 1925, § 17, notwithstanding Pol. Code, §§ 996, 999; "vacancy" being an unoccupied or unfilled post, position, or office, and occurring whenever such position is without an incumbent.

Application by Charles D. Wallace for writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to H. A. Payne, as County Auditor of Los Angeles County, to compel him to audit and approve a demand of petitioner as Judge of the Municipal Court of the City of Long Beach. Writ granted.

Wm. M. Morse, Jr., of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel, R. C. McAllaster, Deputy Co. Counsel, and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Deputy Co. Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent in his capacity as county auditor of the county of Los Angeles commanding him to audit and approve the petitioner's claim and demand for the sum of $451.61, alleged to be due petitioner as his salary as judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach for the period between August 3, 1925, and August 31, 1925, inclusive. The particular facts upon which said application is based and is resisted are embraced in the stipulation of the parties hereto as to the facts of the case which is, in substance, as follows:

On the 1st day of August, 1925, the Governor of the state of California appointed and commissioned the petitioner herein a judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach, who, on August 3, 1925, took the oath of office as such judge of said court and thereupon assumed to be and act as such judge. That the city of Long Beach is a municipal corporation, duly organized and existing in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and that said municipal corporation is governed under and by a charter duly formed and effected in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the state of California. That said municipal corporation had a population, at the taking of the last federal census, of 55,593 inhabitants. That Amendment No. 35 of the Charter of the city of Long Beach, § 249a (St. 1925, p. 1349), was submitted to the qualified voters of the city of Long Beach, at a special municipal election held in the city of Long Beach on the 8th day of April, 1925, and at such special municipal election a majority of the qualified voters of the said city of Long Beach voted thereon in favor of said Amendment No. 35 of the Charter of the said city of Long Beach, and duly ratified the same. That at the time said municipal election was held the Legislature of the state of California was in session, and continued in session some time subsequent thereto, and that said amendment was submitted to the Legislature then in regular session, and the same was approved as a whole, without amendment or alteration by said Legislature on the 18th day of April, 1925, and that all other necessary acts precedent to the adoption of Amendment No. 35 of the said Charter of the said city of Long Beach, were, and each of them was, performed in pursuance of the provisions of law pertaining thereto. That the charter of the said city of Long Beach, as thus amended on the 18th day of April, 1925, provides as follows:

"Municipal Court, section 249a.

"When this amendment takes effect, as hereinafter provided, there shall be established, ipso facto, in the city of Long Beach, a municipal court, as contemplated by sections 1, 5, 11, 12, 14, 18, 23 and 24 of article VI of the Constitution of the state of California as amended in 1924, to exist and be maintained under and in accordance with the provisions of the act of the Legislature of the state of California hereinafter referred to. If the Legislature of the state of California, in its 46th session adopted an act, applicable to the city of Long Beach, in accordance with the said constitutional provision, providing by general law for the constitution, regulation, government and procedure of municipal courts, for the jurisdiction thereof, and for the establishment of municipal courts in cities or cities and counties governed under charters framed and adopted under the authority of said constitution, and such act becomes effective, then, upon the effective date of such act, this amendment shall take effect; otherwise this amendment shall not become operative or become effective for any purpose."

That the city of Long Beach is a city of the second and a half class. That the salary of the judges of the municipal court of a city of the second and a half class is fixed by law at the sum of $6,000 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments, and that the salary of a judge, duly appointed and sitting in said court on the 3d of August, 1925, to and including the 31st day of August, 1925, would be the sum of $451.61. That respondent H. A. Payne is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting county auditor of the county of Los Angeles.

The two questions which are thus presented to this court for decision, are these: First. Was a municipal court created and established on July 24, 1925, in the city of Long Beach through the adoption and ratification of the aforesaid amendment to its charter in the manner above set forth? Second. Assuming that said municipal court was thus duly created and established within said city of Long Beach, did a vacancy exist in the office of judge of said municipal court which the Governor of the state of California was on August 1, 1925, empowered to fill by the appointment of the petitioner to such judicial office?

The Constitution of the state of California provides the method whereby chartered municipalities may accomplish the amendment of their charters. Section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution, after providing the method by which cities and cities and counties may create and procure the ratification by the Legislature of their charters, proceeds to designate how such charters may be amended. That portion thereof which so provides reads, in part, as follows:

"The charter of any city or city and county may be amended by proposals therefor submitted by the legislative body of the city on its own motion or on petition signed by fifteen per cent. of the registered electors, or both. Such proposals shall be submitted to the electors only during the six months next preceding a regular session of the Legislature or thereafter and before the final adjournment of that session and at either a special election called for that purpose or at any general or special election."

The section then proceeds to specify the method for the preparation and submission of the proposed amendment to the voters of the municipality and for the election to be held therein for the adoption or rejection thereof. The section then proceeds as follows:

"If a majority of the qualified voters voting on any such amendment vote in favor thereof it shall be deemed ratified, and shall be submitted to the Legislature at the regular session next following such election; and approved or rejected without power of alteration in the same manner as herein provided for the approval or rejection of a charter."

[1, 2] The first question presented for our determination in this case revolves around the interpretation to be given to the last above-quoted provision in said section of the Constitution. It is the contention of the respondent herein that the clause therein providing that such amendment when ratified by the voters of the municipality "shall be submitted to the Legislature at the regular session next following such election" must be held to refer, not to a session of the Legislature which may be pending during the period provided for the formulation and adoption of such amendment by the municipality and the voters thereof, but be held to refer to the next subsequent regular session of the Legislature to convene and to be held at a time after the occurrence of the municipal election at which such amendment was presented for ratification by the voters thereat. We are unable to give to said clause in said section of the Constitution the interpretation contended for by the respondent herein. It is a cardinal rule, to be applied to the interpretation of particular words, phrases, or clauses in a statute or a Constitution, that the entire substance of the instrument or of that portion thereof which has relation to the subject under review should be looked to in order to determine the scope and purpose of the particular provision therein of which such words, phrases, or clauses form a part, and in order also to determine the particular intent of the framers of the instrument in that portion thereof wherein such words, phrases, or clauses appear. Applying this rule of interpretation, first, to the entire substance of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution, it would seem to have been the purpose of the framers thereof that the procedure to be followed by cities or cities and counties in the formulation and final approval of their charters was one embracing particular limitations as to the time within which the various steps were to be taken in the course of the preparation and submission of such original charters to the voters of the municipality and to the Legislature for final ratification. When a proper petition is presented by the electors of a city or city and county desiring to have a board of freeholders chosen for the framing of such charter, the section requires that the election for the choice of such freeholders shall be called and held not less than 30 nor more than 60 days from the filing of such petition; and, when such board of freeholders have been thus chosen, it is provided that they shall prepare and propose such charter within 120 days after the result of their election is declared; and, when such proposed charter is presented and filed, the legislative body of such municipality must submit the same to its electors at the next special or general election; and, if the majority of such electors then vote for its adoption, such charter shall be submitted to the Legislature, if then in session, or at the next regular or special session thereof; and, if ratified thereat, it shall forthwith become the organic law of the city or city and county adopting the same. These several provisions of the section at large are evidently aimed at requiring a degree of expedition in the preparation and adoption of original charters, to the end that, when the electors of a municipality conclude to be governed by a charter, their resolution so to do may become speedily effective. When we come to consider the succeeding portions of said section relative to the amendment of charters, we find the same plan and purpose persisting. It is therein provided that proposals for such amendments can only be submitted to the electors of the municipality "during the six months next preceding a regular session of the Legislature, or thereafter and before the final adjournment of that session"; that the procedure for the adoption of the amendment by the electors shall have the same expedition as that required in the adoption of original charters. Then follows the provision that, when a majority of the qualified voters voting upon such amendment shall have favored the same, it "shall be submitted to the Legislature at the regular session next following such election." When this last-quoted provision is read in the light of the general plan and purpose as disclosed in the section read as a whole, to the effect that charters and amendments to charters shall move from their inception to their approval with defined expedition, and when we consider said last-quoted provision in connection with the preceding clause in said section which provides for the period within the limitations of which charter amendments must be submitted to and voted upon by the electors, viz. "during the six months next preceding a regular session of the Legislature or thereafter and before the final adjournment of that session," it becomes reasonably apparent that it was the intent of the framers of these portions of said section of the Constitution that charter amendments, if framed and adopted by the electors of a city or city and county during a pending regular session of the Legislature, might be submitted to that portion of said session thereof which next followed after the said amendments, permissively adopted during such session, were ready for presentation for ratification before such regular session of the Legislature adjourned. Such an interpretation would be in entire harmony with the spirit and purpose of the entire section, which evidently contemplated that, when charters and charter amendments had reached the point of adoption by the electors of a municipality, they should not lie inoperative and ineffective for the two years intervening between successive sessions of the Legislature. Such an interpretation would also be in accord with the statutory policy, that, when cities and cities and counties have once adopted charters, and when they discover that such charters are defective in any particular or are inadequate for the present needs or growth of the municipality, and should be amended, such amendment, in order to be remedial, should be facilitated rather than unreasonably delayed in its adoption.

We can perceive no reason why the framers of this section of the Constitution should have provided that original charters might be submitted for ratification to the Legislature in session at the time of their adoption by the electors of the municipality, but that amendments thereto must lie over until a later session of the Legislature should come into being. If the foregoing views with respect to the meaning to be given to section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution require the aid of cotemporaneous interpretation, it will find such support in the legislative history of charter amendments presented, adopted, and ratified during the 12 years which have elapsed since said section in its present form became a part of the Constitution, many of which amendments have been prepared and submitted to the electors of a goodly number of the municipalities of this state during the progress of legislative sessions, and have been presented to and ratified by then pending sessions of the Legislature. It would work infinite injury to now adopt a different interpretation than that which has been so uniformly accepted and given effect by the leading municipalities of this commonwealth during the past 10 years. We are therefore of the opinion that the amendment to the charter of the city of Long Beach above quoted, and which provided for the establishment of a municipal court in said city of even date with the going into effect of the act of the Legislature providing for the establishment of municipal courts in cities of its population, was regularly adopted and duly ratified by the Legislature, and that the same has been, since July 24, 1925, and still is, in full force and effect, and that, in pursuance thereof, a municipal court was duly established in the said city of Long Beach upon and after said date.

[3] The second question presented by this proceeding is as to whether such a vacancy existed in the office of judge of said municipal court on and after said July 24, 1925, as the Governor of this state was empowered to fill by the appointment of the petitioner herein to such office on the 1st day of August, 1925. This question involves, first, a determination as to whether the several positions of judge of said municipal court provided for cities of the class in which Long Beach comes by virtue of its population had already been filled by operation of law. The city of Long Beach is a city of the second and a half class, and as such, under the provisions of the act of the Legislature of 1925 (Stats. 1925, pp. 648-652) is entitled to five judges of its municipal court. The effect of the decision of this court in the case of Bakkenson v. Superior Court, 241 P. 874, this day filed, is to so interpret the constitutional amendment providing for the creation of municipal courts as to hold that justices of the peace in townships lying partly within and partly without chartered cities entitled to establish and establishing municipal courts retain their offices and jurisdiction in and over those portions of such townships as lie without the territorial boundaries of such cities at the time of the establishment of such courts therein, and hence do not become, by virtue of such amendment or of the statute above referred to, judges of such municipal courts. In the case of Helwig v. Payne, 241

P. 884, also this day decided, we have held the petitioner therein disqualified to become, as of the date of July 24, 1925, a judge of the municipal court of Long Beach. By this process of elimination there remained, if we are rightly advised, at least two of the five positions of judge of the municipal courts of the city of Long Beach for which no qualified occupants had been provided by operation of said amendment or of the statute giving effect to the same. Did this state of the law and facts cause to exist as to either or both of these positions a vacancy in office which the Governor of California might legally fill by appointment?

[4] The first contention of the respondent to the effect that such vacancy does not exist is based upon his interpretation of the clause in the portion of the amendment to section 11a of article 6 of the Constitution reading:

"Upon the establishment of any such municipal court, and until the first election and the qualification of the judge or judges thereof and the first appointment and the qualification of the clerks and other attachés thereof, the judges or justices and the clerks and other attachés of any existing inferior courts in such city or city and county or township shall become and act as the judges, clerks and attachés respectively of such municipal court."

In making this contention, the respondent lays especial stress upon the use of the article "the" before the word "judges" in the above-emphasized portion thereof, arguing that by the use of the word "the" in this immediate connection the framers of the amendment intended to provide that the judges of the inferior courts who were qualified to become and act as the judges of the municipal court upon the establishment thereof should constitute all of the judges thereof until the occurrence of the first election at which judges of such court could be elected. We are of the opinion that this contention, not only requires altogether too much emphasis to be placed upon the employment of the article "the" in its aforesaid connection, but that to give it such importance and to interpret the clause in which it occurs conformably to the respondent's contention would lead to consequences entirely out of harmony with the apparent design of the framers of this amendment in providing for a system of municipal courts. To illustrate, it is a matter of common knowledge that the purpose lying behind the creation and establishment of these courts in the larger cities of our commonwealth was that of relieving the existing congestion of litigation in these populous centers by providing for the immediate functioning of this new system of courts therein. But, if the respondent is correct in his foregoing contention, and if we are correct in our conclusion as to the number of judges of inferior courts presently qualified to become judges of the municipal court of Long Beach, such court would enter upon its activities, hampered by the fact that, while five judicial positions are provided for it two or possibly more of these must remain vacant until an election can occur at which such vacancies can be filled, or, in other words, for a year and a half after such court should begin to function, or, to carry the illustration still further, if perchance none of the judges of such inferior courts as held the relation to the city of Long Beach essential to his becoming a judge of the municipal court was qualified to act as such, nevertheless no vacancy would exist therein which the Governor would have the right by appointment to fill. The cases which the respondent cites from other jurisdictions as supporting his aforesaid contention as to the importance of the article "the" in certain situations bear no analogy to the situation presented in the instant case.

The next contention of the respondent is that the term "vacancy," as used in section 17 of the Act of 1925, supra, has no application to the office of judge of the municipal court as to which there has been as yet no incumbency. In support of this contention we are referred to section 996 of the Political Code, which prescribes a series of contingencies upon the happening of which an office "becomes vacant" and to section 999 of the Political Code which prescribes that:

"When an office becomes vacant, and no mode is provided by law for filling such vacancy, the Governor must fill such vacancy by granting a commission, to expire at the next session of the Legislature or at the next election by the people."

We are inclined to the opinion that these sections of the Political Code, while they evidently have reference to vacancies which occur in civil offices through the cessation, for the several causes specified therein, of incumbencies in such offices, were not intended to include offices which from the time of their creation are without incumbents until such need is supplied by the election or appointment of qualified persons to fill such offices. The term "vacancy" has a broader meaning than merely that of a hiatus in incumbency. It means, with relation to an office, a state of being unoccupied. In Bouvier's Law Dictionary the word "vacancy" as applied to an office is defined: "A place which is empty. The term is principally applied to cases where an office is not filled." The Century Dictionary defines the term "vacancy" as "an unoccupied or unfilled post, position or office." In the case of People ex rel., etc., v. Hylan, 212 N. Y. 236, 106 N. E. 89, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 122, the Governor of New York undertook to fill by appointment the offices of certain county judgeships which had just been created by an amendment to the New York constitution, upon the theory that vacancies in such offices existed as soon as the offices came into being, and which as Governor he was authorized to fill. His action in so doing was upheld by the New York Court of Appeals in an exhaustive opinion wherein the decisions of the courts of many other jurisdictions are reviewed, and in which, as a result of such review, said court declares that "the general rule is that when a law establishing an office takes effect, a vacancy in the office at once exists, unless the language of the law imports futurity of selection"; and said court further quotes approvingly the definition of the term "vacancy" as given by the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the case of State ex rel., etc., v. Maloney, 92 Tenn. 62, 72, 20 S. W. 419, 422, as follows:

"There is a vacancy in every instance in which there is an office without an incumbent. Every office without an officer is vacant. Therefore, every new office created must of necessity be vacant from the time of its creation until it is filled by appointment or election."

See, also, Cline v. Greenwood, 10 Or. 230, 240; State ex rel., etc., v. County Court, 50 Mo. 317, 11 Am. Rep. 415; State ex rel., etc., v. McMillan, 108 Mo. 153, 18 S. W. 784; In re Fourth Judicial Dist., 4 Wyo. 133, 32 P. 850; Smith v. Askew, 48 Ark. 82, 2 S. W. 349; Gormley v. Taylor, 44 Ga. 76; State, etc., v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 111; Knight v. Trigg, 16 Idaho, 256, 100 P. 1060; State ex rel., etc., v. Breckinridge, 34 Okl. 649, 126 P. 806. A persuasive decision touching this subject is the decision of this court in the case of Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 69, 82 P. 674, which had reference to the appointment and salaries of justices of District Court of Appeal of this state upon the first organization thereof in the year 1905, and wherein this court used the following language:

"We are further of the opinion that the preliminary term of the office of justice of the District Court of Appeal began to run as soon as that office was created by the adoption of the amendment of 1904 to the Constitution. Immediately upon the taking effect of the amendment, and without any regard whatever to the appointment of any person as justice thereof, the District Courts of Appeal became existing courts to which appeals could be taken, and the offices of justices thereof became existing offices to which persons could be appointed. A preliminary term extending to January 7, 1907, immediately began to run, and vacancies in the offices were at once created. These vacancies might have been filled at any time thereafter by the appointment of persons to hold the respective offices for the unexpired part of the preliminary terms then running."

We are therefore of the opinion that immediately upon the establishment of the municipal court in the city of Long Beach and of the occurrence of a condition whereby there were not a sufficient number of judges of inferior courts therein qualified to fill the five positions provided for cities of the class of the city of Long Beach, a vacancy arose and existed in the office of judge of the mu-municipal court of Long Beach which the Governor of this state was authorized to fill by appointment under section 17 of the Act of 1925, which reads as follows:

"Any vacancy in the office of a judge of a municipal court shall be filled by appointment by the Governor, and any person so appointed shall hold office until the expiration of the term of the office to which he was appointed, and until his successor is elected and qualified."

It being conceded herein that the petitioner as such appointee of the Governor is otherwise qualified to fill such office, and has properly taken the oath of office, and has also made the proper affidavit and demand for the amount of the salary of such office for the payment of which he seeks this writ, it is our conclusion that the writ should issue as prayed for herein. It is so ordered.

Application by Fred E. Helwig for writ of mandate, to be directed to H. A. Payne, as County Auditor of the County of Los Angeles, to compel him to audit and approve the demand of petitioner for salary as Judge of the Municipal Court of the City of Long Beach. Writ denied.

N. M. Reid and Frank M. Linnell, both of Long Beach, for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel, and Chas. E. R. Fulcher, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent herein in his capacity as county auditor of the county of Los Angeles, commanding him to audit and approve the petitioner's claim and demand for the sum of $129, alleged to be due to petitioner as his salary as judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach for the period between July 24, 1925, and July 31, 1925, inclusive. The particular facts upon which his said application is based and is resisted are embraced in the stipulation of the parties hereto as to the facts of the case, which reads as follows:

Petitioner was, prior to July 24, 1925, and still is, unless his status as such is affected by the establishment of the municipal court in the city of Long Beach, the duly elected, qualified, and acting police judge of the city of Long Beach. The territorial limits of the city of Long Beach are coextensive with the territorial limits of the police court of the city of Long Beach. Petitioner is an elector of the city of Long Beach, was admitted to practice law before the Supreme Court of Michigan October 5, 1901, and ever since has continuously practiced law. Petitioner was admitted to practice law before the Supreme Court of the state of California on the 19th day of April, 1922. The next municipal election of the city of Long Beach will be held in the month of May, 1927. In pursuance of Amendment No. 35 (section 249a) of the Charter of the City of Long Beach (St. 1925, p. 1349), article 6 of the Constitution of the state of California, and chapter 358, Laws of 1925 of the state of California, there was established in the city of Long Beach, on the 24th day of July, 1925, a municipal court. On the 24th day of July, 1925, petitioner took the oath of office as judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach and entered upon and exercised the duties of the judge of said court. On July 31, 1925, petitioner in due form presented his claim for salary as such judge in the sum $129, but respondent refused, has ever since refused, and still refuses, to pay said sum or any part thereof."

The primary question which stands upon the threshold of this proceeding is this: Assuming, as the parties hereto assume, that the proper interpretation of the recent constitutional amendment relating to the creation of municipal courts and of the recent statute adopted in conformity therewith permits the establishment of a system of municipal courts in the city of Long Beach; and assuming that the said municipality has by proper amendment to its charter established such system of municipal courts, has the petitioner herein become by virtue thereof a judge of said municipal court, and as such entitled to the salary of such office, notwithstanding the fact that he has not been an admitted practitioner before the Supreme Court of this state for the period of 5 years immediately prior to the period during which he claims to have been a judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach and as such entitled to the salary of such office?

The provisions of the recent amendment to certain sections of article 6 of the Constitution of California relative to the qualifications of judges of municipal courts are two. The portion of section 11 thereof, which relates thereto, reads as follows:

"Upon the establishment of any such municipal court, and until the first election and the qualification of the judge or judges thereof and the first appointment and the qualification of the clerks and other attachés thereof, the judges or justices and the clerks and other attachés of any existing inferior courts in such city or city and county or township shall become and act as the judges, clerks and attachés respectively of such municipal court."

The other provision in said constitutional amendment relative thereto is section 23 thereof, which reads as follows:

"No person shall be eligible to the office of a justice of the Supreme Court, or of a District Court of Appeal, or of a judge of a superior court, or of a municipal court, unless he shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the state for a period of at least five years immediately preceding his election or appointment to such office."

It is the contention of the petitioner herein that, by the use of the phrase in the former of the two above excerpts from the constitutional amendment reading, "the judges or justices * * * of any existing inferior courts * * * shall become and act as the judges * * * of such municipal court," the then qualified police judges and city or township justices within the municipality establishing such municipal court should continue in office until the next municipal election, with merely the change of title to that of judges of the municipal court, and with the added jurisdiction given to such courts; and that the provisions embraced in section 23 of said amendment can only have been intended to have application to those judges of municipal courts who were to be subjects of election thereafter, or of appointment in the event of vacancies in such office. This contention, while it has much of plausibility to support it, is one to which we are unable to give our adherence. The foregoing provisions of the constitutional amendment are to be read together as though they were embraced in one and the same section thereof, and are to be interpreted consistently, if possible, with each other. So interpreted, it seems to us that section 23 of said amendment was intended to define and state an essential qualification of those persons who were to become and be and act as judges of municipal courts. This view gains added force when it is noted that section 23 of said constitutional amendment is not in its entirety a new section imported into our Constitution by such amendment, but that in the main it is the original section thereof as adopted in 1879 and as applicable to the judges and justices of all courts of record then and thereby called into being; that the phrase "or of a District Court of Appeal" was added thereto when such courts came into existence; that the phrase "or of a municipal court" was introduced therein by the recent amendment; that the concluding clause in said amendment relating to the period of time during which the judges and justices referred to in said section shall have been practitioners before the Supreme Court prior to their election or appointment to their respective offices has reference not merely to judges of the municipal court, but to the judges and justices of all courts of record. With this analysis of section 23 of said amendment in mind, it would seem to be clear that the phrase therein, "preceding his election or appointment to such office," is not to be given the narrow application for which the petitioner herein contends, nor to have reference merely to the particular situation arising out of the establishment of municipal courts, but that on the contrary the provisions of said section, taken as a whole, were intended originally, and as from time to time amended, to set forth an essential qualification of all occupants of the office of judge or justice of any and all courts of record within this state.

The petitioner, in support of his aforesaid contention, urges that we should give to the term "eligible," as used in section 23 of said amendment, a meaning synonymous with "electible" and thus confine the scope of said section so as to exclude the sort of succession to the office of judge of the municipal court provided for in the preceding portion of said amendment, and cites Ward v. Crowell, 142 Cal. 587, 76 P. 491, as supporting his said contention. We do not so read that decision, nor do we find that it was intended to in any way overrule or depart from the definition of the term "eligible" as given in the case of People v. Leonard, 73 Cal. 230, 14 P. 853, wherein this court held that said term, when found in the Constitution, must be construed to mean "the qualification to hold as well as to be elected to" the particular office. We approve the foregoing definition of that term as applicable to its use in section 23 of said amendment to the Constitution, especially since the same expression appears in said section in its original form.

The petitioner further argues that, if the interpretation of the foregoing provisions of the constitutional amendment for which he contends is not adopted, a serious condition will arise with relation to municipal courts and their judges, for the reason that neither the amendment in question nor the statute recently enacted for the purpose of giving effect to its provisions contemplate the appointment by the Governor of any person or persons to the office of judge of the municipal court until a vacancy has occurred in such office, and that such vacancy can occur only through cessation of a prior incumbency. This question, however, is fully discussed in the case of Wallace v. Payne, 241 P. 879, this day decided, and to which reference is hereby made for a determination of this question.

It is our conclusion from the foregoing considerations that the application of the petitioner herein for a writ of mandate should be, and the same is hereby, denied.

Ex parte WATTS. (Cr. 2836.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1925.)

1. Criminal law ☞1219—Confinement in state prison pending execution is in addition to other punishment for capital crime.

Requirement of Pen. Code, § 1217, that a defendant upon whom sentence of death has been imposed be confined in state prison pending execution thereof, is a part of punishment for crime and is in addition to punishment provided for prior to 1891.

2. Criminal law ☞1084—Appeal from conviction in capital case stays execution of death penalty alone.

Under amendment of 1874 to Pen. Code, § 1243, providing that appeal from judgment of conviction stays execution in all capital cases, it is intended that taking of an appeal should automatically stay execution of death penalty alone without granting of certificate of probable cause under section 1243.

3. Criminal law ☞1084—Portion of judgment requiring detention in state prison pending infliction of death penalty stayed only on issuance of certificate of probable cause.

Under Pen. Code, § 1243, providing that appeal from judgment of conviction stays execution in capital cases and in all other cases on filing of certificate of probable cause, such portion of punishment, on conviction of murder, as requires detention in state prison pending infliction of death penalty, is comprised within phrase "in all other cases" in section 1243 and is stayed only on issuance of certificate of probable cause.

4. Criminal law ☞1084—Granting or denial of certificate of probable cause within sound discretion of trial court.

The granting or denial of certificate of probable cause on appeal from conviction in criminal case under Pen. Code, §§ 1243-1245, so as to stay execution of so much of punishment as requires imprisonment of defendant in state prison pending hearing of appeal, is within sound discretion of judge to whom application therefor is made.

Lawlor, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

In the matter of the application of Joseph H. Watts for a writ of habeas corpus. Appli-

MYERS, C. J. Watts was convicted in the superior court of San Bernardino county of murder in the first degree, without recommendation, and judgment was duly rendered imposing the death penalty. He gave oral notice of appeal in open court at the time of the rendition of judgment and thereafter filed his written notice of appeal therefrom. A warrant of execution was duly signed, attested, issued, and delivered to the sheriff in accordance with the provisions of Penal Code, § 1217, pursuant to which Watts was taken by the sheriff to San Quentin and there delivered to the custody of the warden of the state prison. Thereafter, upon application of the defendant, the trial judge issued a certificate of probable cause pursuant to the provisions of Penal Code, § 1243, and the same was thereupon duly served upon the sheriff of San Bernardino county and also upon the warden of the state prison at San Quentin, coupled with a demand that the defendant be redelivered to the sheriff of San Bernardino county and returned to the county jail of that county to be there kept pending the hearing and determination of his appeal. These demands being refused, application was made to this court for a writ of habeas corpus to compel the return of the defendant to the custody of the sheriff of San Bernardino county. At the conclusion of the hearing before this court upon the return to the writ, it was the opinion of the majority of the justices that the application should be granted, and an order to this effect was thereupon made from the bench.

Section 1243 of the Penal Code provides as follows:

"An appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of conviction stays the execution of the judgment in all capital cases, and in all other cases, upon filing with the clerk of the court in which the conviction was had, a certificate of the judge of such court, or of a justice of the Supreme Court, that, in his opinion, there is probable cause for the appeal, but not otherwise."

Section 1244 of the Penal Code, provides:

"If the certificate provided for in the preceding section is filed, the sheriff must, if the defendant be in his custody, upon being served with a copy thereof, keep the defendant in his custody without executing the judgment, and detain him to abide the judgment on appeal."

Section 1245 of the Penal Code provides:

"If before the granting of the certificate, the execution of the judgment has commenced, the further execution thereof is suspended, and upon service of a copy of such certificate the defendant must be restored, by the officer in whose custody he is, to his original custody."

[1-3] The requirement of Penal Code, § 1217, that a defendant upon whom sentence of death has been imposed shall be confined in a state prison pending the execution thereof, is a part of the punishment for the crime and is in addition to the punishment therefor which was provided prior to 1891. Ex parte Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 10 S. Ct. 384, 33 L. Ed. 835; People v. McNulty, 3 Cal. Unrep. 441, 28 P. 816; Id., 93 Cal. 427, 26 P. 597, 29 P. 61; People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 201, 208, 51 P. 185. We are of the opinion, however, that by the amendment of 1874 to the Penal Code, § 1243, whereby it was provided that an appeal from a judgment of conviction stays the execution of the judgment in all capital cases, the Legislature intended that the taking of an appeal should automatically stay the execution of the death penalty alone. Ex parte Fredericks, 104 Cal. 400, 38 P. 51. Obviously, the execution of the defendant pending his appeal would render the appeal utterly valueless, and the Legislature intended that such a result should not be dependent upon the hazard of granting or failing to grant a certificate of probable cause. This consideration, however, presents no reason why the taking of an appeal from the judgment of conviction should automatically stay the execution of that portion of the death warrant which requires the detention of the defendant in a state prison pending the infliction of the death penalty. We are of the opinion that this portion of the punishment is comprised within the phrase "in all other cases," and is not stayed therefore except upon the issuance of a certificate of probable cause. This view is suggested by what was said in Ex parte Fredericks, supra, wherein this court said:

"Even if this imprisonment is to be regarded as a part of the penalty it stands upon the same grounds as other judgments of imprisonment. It is not stayed without a certificate of probable cause for the appeal. * * *"

That a certificate of probable cause may issue in a capital case is the implication which arises out of what was said or done by this court, or by the justices thereof, in the following cases: People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594, 597, 30 P. 963; People v. Fredericks, supra; People v. Durrant, supra; People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 54, 50 p. 1070; People v. Ebanks (not reported, but referred to in People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 210, 51 p. 185); People v. Sliscovitch (an order of this court made October 6, 1923, not reported); People v. Arnold and Sayer (an order of this court made March 12, 1925, not reported). The only suggestion to the contrary to be found in our reports, so far as we are advised, is in the opinion of Chief Justice Beatty in People v. Ross, 135 Cal. 59, 67 p. 13. That is not an opinion of the court and has never been expressly approved or disapproved by the court. The principal ground upon which the Chief Justice based his conclusion in that case has since been eliminated by the 1905 amendment to section 1227 of the Penal Code, taking away the right to appeal from an order fixing the time for the execution of the death penalty.

[4] Our conclusion is that upon an appeal from a judgment imposing the death penalty a certificate of probable cause may be issued by the judge of the trial court or a justice of this court, the effect of which is to stay the execution of so much of the judgment as requires the imprisonment of the defendant in a state prison pending the hearing and determination of his appeal. The granting or denial of such certificate is a matter within the sound discretion of the judge or justice to whom application therefor is made.

We concur: WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.

LAWLOR, J. I dissent. The precise question presented by this proceeding is whether the custody of a defendant in a capital case pending appeal is with the sheriff of the jurisdiction or the warden of the state prison.

Three propositions appear clear: First, that the subject-matter is exclusively within the control of the Legislature; second, that the legislative policy contemplates that the custody shall be with the warden pending appeal; and, third, that not a single reasoned case can be said to be opposed to the legislative rule.

1. It will not be questioned that the entire subject involved by this proceeding is within the competence of the Legislature.

2. Section 1243 of the Penal Code deals exclusively with stays of execution of the judgment of conviction in all cases appealed from the superior court and divides them into two classes: (a) Capital cases, and (b) all other cases.

It will be noted that under section 1243 the appeal from the judgment ipso facto stays the execution in capital cases, but that "in all other cases" a certificate of probable cause is requisite and is the exclusive mode of staying the execution of the judgment. The practice in capital cases is to serve on the warden a certified copy of the notice of appeal whether the appeal is from the judgment or an appealable order entered after final judgment. See, for instance, Ex parte Fredericks, 104 Cal. 400, 38 P. 51. The conclusion follows that under the statute law a certificate of probable cause has no application to a capital case and that the appeal, of itself, by the terms of section 1243, stays the execution. Prior to the amendment of section 1217 in 1891 (Stats. 1891, p. 272), the execution of the judgment in capital cases was carried out by the sheriff in the county jail where the prisoner was at all times confined following conviction and pending the execution, and therefore the question here presented could not, prior to said amendment, arise during the pendency of an appeal from the judgment. By the terms of said amendment all executions were required to take place in the penitentiary, the amendatory language of section 1217 reading, in part:

"And must direct the sheriff to deliver the defendant, within ten days from the time of judgment, to the warden * * * for execution.
* * *

A similar requirement is made a part of the proceedings under section 1227 where the execution has not taken place on the day fixed by the warrant of execution or any subsequent order. Hence there are two provisions (sections 1217 and 1227) expressing the legislative policy that the custody of a capital prisoner shall be in the warden pending appeal from the judgment or pending execution of the judgment, after it has become final, upon an order fixing the final day for carrying it into effect.

In view of the plain term of sections 1217 and 1227, it is proper to hold that if the Legislature had contemplated any departure from the prescribed statutory policy thus declared, it would have expressly so provided. From the foregoing I conclude that by sections 1217 and 1227 the Legislature intended that from the time of the delivery of the prisoner to the warden and until his execution he must be in the custody of the warden, except when his presence is required in judicial proceedings. Section 1217 provides that the prisoner and the warrant for the execution of the judgment of death shall be delivered to the warden at the same time, thus enabling the executing officer to be prepared to carry the judgment into effect at the time fixed in the warrant. The stay of the execution beyond the time specified in the warrant, the judgment remaining in force, brings into operation the provisions of section 1227 requiring the trial court to enter an order fixing another day upon which the judgment shall be executed and providing that "a certified copy of such order * * * be transmitted * * * to the warden * * * having the custody of the defendant." Here, again, the warden having the prisoner in his custody is prepared to execute the judgment on the day fixed in such order without any further authority or direction. It is therefore plainly the legislative purpose that the defendant shall, from the time of delivery to the warden with the warrant and until the execution of the judgment, be in the custody of the executing officer, so that whether the execution be carried into effect on the day indicated in the warrant or in subsequent order the prisoner is required to be always available to the executing officer. This conclusion finds support in the italicized language of the above-quoted expression.

3. It may be confidently affirmed under this head that no opinion has declared that the custody of a capital prisoner pending execution is not with the warden of the penitentiary.

In People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594, 30 P. 963, the judgment of conviction had become final on appeal. The defendant thereafter took an appeal from the order fixing the final day of execution within the meaning of section 1227 and subdivision 3 of section 1237. After quoting section 1243, the court said:

"It is clear from the reading of this section that it is only the appeal from the judgment of conviction * * * that stays the execution proprio vigore. In case of any other appeal, such, for instance, as this appeal from an order after judgment, the mere appeal has no effect in staying execution, unless the judge of the superior court or a justice of this court will grant a certificate of probable cause for the appeal."

That case did not involve the question of the proper custody of the condemned pending appeal, and what was said touching the necessity of a certificate of probable cause was stated only in response to the argument of the Attorney General that if the appeal from such order operated in one case to stay the execution, it would have the same effect on successive appeals, and therefore the judgment of conviction would never be executed.

Ex parte Fredericks, 104 Cal. 400, 38 P. 51, involved an appeal by the defendant from the judgment of death. Before taking the appeal, his custody had been transferred by the sheriff to the warden of the penitentiary. A certified copy of the notice of appeal was served upon the warden coupled with a demand for the return of the defendant to the custody of the sheriff, which demand was refused. In the proceeding a writ of habeas corpus was sought to effect a transfer of his custody to the sheriff. The court in denying the issuance of the writ declared:

"The imprisonment of the petitioner is not unlawful. It is true that, by section 1243 of the Penal Code, it is provided that an appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of conviction stays the execution of the judgment in all capital cases. But the intention of the Legislature in adopting this provision was merely to prevent the infliction of the death penalty pending the appeal, and it has not acquired any different meaning or effect since, or by reason of the change of the law by which in capital cases the prisoner is confined in the state prison pending the execution of the sentence of death."

The only question concerned in that proceeding was whether or not the appeal from the judgment of conviction operated, of itself, to stay the custody of the defendant in the warden. After answering the question in the negative, the opinion concluded with this suggestion:

"Even if this imprisonment is to be regarded as a part of the penalty it stands upon the same grounds as other judgments of imprisonment. It is not stayed without a certificate of probable cause for the appeal, and no such certificate has been granted in this case."

People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 54, 50 P. 1070; Id., 119 Cal. 201, 51 P. 185, embraced two appeals from two orders of the superior court fixing a day for the execution of the judgment of death after it became final on appeal. Following the making of the first order, the sheriff, in conformity with section 1227 of the Penal Code, was ordered to deliver the defendant to the warden at San Quentin within ten days. The transcript of the record which was to be considered on the first appeal was filed too late to admit of a submission and decision under the rules of the court before the day appointed for the execution. Neither of the parties asked for an order to expedite the hearing, but the defendant applied to the justices for a certificate of probable cause for his appeal, which, it was stated in the opinion, would have the effect of staying the execution. It appears that no justice of the court was willing to certify there was any probable cause for the appeal, and the execution would have taken place except for a habeas corpus proceeding instituted in the Circuit Court of the United States in behalf of the defendant. His petition for the writ of habeas corpus was denied by the United States Circuit Court, but his appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States was allowed, the effect of which was to stay all proceedings under the judgment and order of the state court. Pending the proceedings in the federal courts, the hearing of the appeal in this court from the order fixing the final day of execution was continued from time to time, until word was received by telegraph that the Supreme Court of the United States had dismissed the appeal in the habeas corpus proceeding when an order was made in the superior court requiring the sheriff to produce the body of the defendant in open court on the following day to enable said superior court to determine whether any legal reasons existed why the judgment of death should not be executed.

In response to said demand upon the sheriff, the defendant made a showing that no remittitur, mandate, or order had been received from the Supreme Court of the United States showing any disposition of the appeal in the habeas corpus proceeding. To this showing by the defendant no counter showing whatever was made on the part of the people. The superior court overruled these and other objections and made an order directing the execution of the judgment of death two days later.

From this, the second order fixing the final day of execution, the defendant immediately appealed, but his bill of exceptions was not settled and allowed until either six or ten days after the order commanded the execution of the judgment of death. Upon a petition for a certificate of probable cause addressed to the Supreme Court, supported by a showing of some of the proceedings in the superior court, certified by the county clerk, such certificate was immediately granted by the concurrence of six of the seven justices and certified to the warden at San Quentin in time to stay the execution. A transcript of the record on this appeal was duly filed in the Supreme Court, upon which a certificate of probable cause was issued.

The court stated that in a capital case an appeal from an order after final judgment does not operate, of itself, to stay the execution, but that a certificate of probable cause is necessary. It was also stated "that imprisonment in the penitentiary pending execution does add something to the punishment prescribed * * * for the crime of murder prior to the amendments of 1891," citing People v. McNulty, 93 Cal. 427, 26 P. 597, 29 P. 61, and Ex parte Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 10 S. Ct. 384, 33 L. Ed. 835. The court then concluded:

"It is therefore a point settled, so far as the deliberate opinion of this court can settle it, that imprisonment in the penitentiary pending execution is a distinct part of the punishment for murder prescribed by our law."

However, it was conceded by the court that—

"There is no restriction upon the power of the Legislature to prescribe double, treble, or any number of punishments for an offense, except that they must not be cruel and unusual, and must not be applied ex post facto."

All the defendant sought in the Durrant Cases, and necessarily all that was granted, was a stay of the execution. The question was not presented, nor did the court decide, whether or not the custody of the defendant in the warden would be stayed, as well as the execution, in the event a certificate of probable cause should issue.

I may pause here to point out that the decision in Ex parte Medley, supra, by a divided court, held that the Colorado statute there in question violated the federal guaranty against the enactment of ex post facto laws. The statute of Colorado, differing from the California law, required, among other things, that the condemned should be kept in solitary confinement, and the court held that this was punishment additional to that provided at the time the crime was committed. It is open to question whether Ex parte Medley, supra, is authority in a case not involving solitary confinement pending execution. I am of the opinion that confinement in the state prison is not a part of the judgment any more than is the issuance and the delivery to the warden of the warrant; each being merely an incident to the carrying of the judgment into effect. Logically, if confinement in the state prison constitutes additional punishment, then detention in the county jail would also have that quality.

In People v. Ross, 135 Cal. 59, 67 P. 13, the defendant applied to the Chief Justice for a certificate of probable cause staying his execution after the judgment had become final and pending an appeal from an order fixing another day for carrying the judgment into effect, the judge of the superior court having declined to grant the stay. While this was not a decision by the court, I deem it worth while to quote the following from the opinion of the Chief Justice as bearing on the proper interpretation of section 1243 and the general subject of a stay of proceedings in a capital case:

"The statutory provision relating to certificates of probable cause is found in section 1243 of the Penal Code, which in terms embraces only appeals from judgments, and does not embrace appeals from orders after judgment. It has sometimes been assumed in the discussion of other matters that the provision would be construed as applying to appeals such as the present (People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594 [30 P. 963]); but the proper construction of the law has never been settled by a decision of the court, and, of course, cannot be settled by any decision or order that I might make without the concurrence of my associates. In People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594 [30 P. 963], all that was decided was that an appeal from an order fixing the date for executing a capital sentence, does not, proprio vigore, stay the execution. In making this decision, it was said, arguendo, that a certificate of probable cause from the trial judge, or from a justice of this court, would be necessary, but the case did not call for a decision that such a certificate would be sufficient to operate a stay, and the question was therefore not decided. In People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 54 [50 P. 1070, Id., 119 Cal. 203, 51 P. 185], the application was made to and acted upon by all the justices. It was in fact an application to the court for a supersedeas in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, and was dealt with as such. I think the proceedings in that case indicate the opinion of the court as to the proper practice in all similar cases, and I shall conform to it, not only because it is a proper and commendable practice, but more especially because, while my power in the premises is doubtful, that of the court is beyond question.

"I may add that, in my opinion, there are substantial grounds upon which the legislature may be supposed to have intended to make a different rule as to the stay of proceedings upon an appeal of this character and an appeal from a final judgment. On appeals from the judgment a stay of proceedings may be safely and properly granted by the trial judge or by a single justice of the Supreme Court, because no serious inconvenience can result from his mistake, if it turns out that in the opinion of the court the judgment is free from error. But on appeals from orders such as that in question here, where the effect of a stay would generally be to make another order of the same kind necessary, from which a new appeal could be taken, the mere doubts of a single judge, if he could act alone, might result in the indefinite postponement, or even the ultimate prevention, of the execution of a capital sentence in a case where the court on the hearing would find no ground for questioning the propriety of the order or orders appealed from. In such a case the granting of the stay must depend upon some apparent merit in the appeal, and that is a matter which the court alone is competent to decide. The decision should be made by the tribunal upon which the responsibility rests.

"For these reasons I shall decline to act upon the petition, leaving the appellant at liberty to apply to the court for a supersedeas, according to the practice in People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 54 [50 P. 1070]. (Italics added.)

The McNulty Case, the Fredericks Case, the two Durrant Cases, and the Ross Case are the only ones since the amendment of 1891 I have found that have discussed the question of a stay in capital cases, and, with the exception of the Fredericks Case, none of these has dealt with the question of custody pending appeal, but were concerned alone with a stay of execution. Furthermore, Ex parte Fredericks, supra, is the only one in which, as here, the appeal was from the judgment; the others involved appeals from orders made after final judgment.

If the statement of the late Chief Justice Beatty in the Ross Case, who was also the author of the opinions in the McNulty Case, 95 Cal. 594, 30 P. 963, the Fredericks Case, supra, and the final opinion in the Durrant Case, 119 Cal. 201, 51 P. 185, is to be accepted, and it was never questioned by the other justices, none of the above cases ever decided that a certificate of probable cause was necessary for any purpose in a capital case and any intimation to the contrary in the above McNulty Case "was said arguendo." It has been shown that the reference in Ex parte Fredericks, supra, to a certificate of probable cause to stay the custody was merely by suggestion, and that the only point decided was that under section 1243 the appeal from the judgment in a capital case stayed the execution alone. Whatever significance may attach to the circumstance that the two Durrant Cases, in terms, characterized the relief granted as certificates of probable cause, there would seem to be warrant for the statement of Chief Justice Beatty in the Ross Case that supersedeas and not certificates of probable cause was what was sought and granted for in both cases the action was taken by the court as distinguished from an individual justice. It may be stated that section 1243 contains the only provision relating to a certificate of probable cause. That section provides that the application must be made to the judge of the superior court, who tried the case, or in the event he declines to grant the certificate of probable cause then to a justice of the Supreme Court. And while the relief under either mode would have the same legal effect (8 Cal. Jur. p. 552, § 555), of course, an individual judge or justice could not grant supersedeas, nor a court a certificate of probable cause.

It is clear from what Chief Justice Beatty said in the Ross Case that his mind was fixed on three propositions—and no statement to the contrary appears in any of our decisions since that time—first, that section 1243 deals alone with appeals from the judgment; second, in capital cases the appeal from the judgment, of itself, operates to stay the execution thereof, whereas “in all other cases” on appeal from the judgment a certificate of probable cause is necessary to stay its operation; and, third, where, in any case, the appeal is from an order made after final judgment, section 1243 has no application, and in order to effect a stay of the judgment supersedeas alone, as an aid to the complete exercise of appellate jurisdiction (Const. art. 6, § 4), is the remedy.

I have pointed out that a certificate of probable cause is no part of the procedure prescribed by the first classification of appeals from the judgment—capital cases—in section 1243 and there is no other provision of law contemplating such a practice. Moreover, the statutory stay of the judgment in capital cases by virtue of the appeal therefrom renders unnecessary a certificate of probable cause in such cases. For the reasons already advanced the stay of the judgment in capital cases does not affect the custody of the defendant in the warden pending execution.

A certificate of probable cause is provided for in cases coming within the second classification of appeals from the judgment in section 1243, and in such cases a record must be presented upon which the judge or justice, as the case may be, may determine whether there is probable cause for the appeal under the rule. In re Adams, 81 Cal. 163, 166, 22 P. 547; People v. Gallanar, 144 Cal. 656, 79 P. 378. In the event the certificate of probable cause is granted, it operates to stay the execution of the judgment and the custody (sections 1244 and 1245). The construction I have given to section 1243 would confine the two succeeding sections (1244 and 1245) exclusively to appeals other than in capital cases. On an appeal from an order after final judgment, in any case, a record is also required and the same test will be applied in determining whether supersedeas shall be granted. There is no provision of law for a certificate of probable cause to stay the operation of the judgment in this latter group of cases, and this no doubt prompted Chief Justice Beatty to declare in the Ross Case that the proper remedy is supersedeas.

Where the appeal in a capital case is from an order after final judgment and supersedeas is granted, the execution alone, and not the custody, as on an appeal from the judgment of death, is stayed.

I find that since the Ross Case only two applications have been made to this court to stay the custody of a capital prisoner pending the preparation of the record upon which application would subsequently be made for a certificate of probable cause to stay the custody in the warden pending appeal from the judgment. The first of these cases is People v. Sliscovitch, Criminal No. 2613, and the second, People v. Arnold and Sayer, Criminal No. 2773. In the Sliscovitch Case, application was made by the defendant for a stay, both of the execution and custody, pending the preparation of the record on appeal upon which he intended to seek a certificate of probable cause to affect a transfer of his custody from the warden to the sheriff pending appeal. The Attorney General objected to granting the application, claiming that in capital cases the certificate of probable cause had no proper place and that the only stay involved in such cases was the stay of the execution—the stay being effected merely by the taking of the appeal. The court made an order, without opinion, staying the execution and directing the transfer of the defendant from the penitentiary to the custody of the sheriff pending the hearing and determining of such application for a certificate of probable cause. The terms of the application indicate the defendant's appreciation of the rule that the appeal from the judgment alone stayed the execution itself.

In the Arnold and Sayer Case the application is identical with that of the Sliscovitch Case, but it was denied, without opinion, the order reading: “The within application for a stay of execution is denied.” It seems to me that these rulings are inconsistent, for if it would be proper in the one case to stay the custody until an application for a certificate of probable cause to stay the custody pending the appeal from the judgment of conviction had been presented and determined, it would be equally proper in the other.

Succinctly stated, the situation is this: It is the legislative policy that the condemned prisoner awaiting execution is to be kept in the custody of the warden (sections 1217 and 1227); the requirement is no more subject to judicial intervention than is the mode of punishment prescribed by the Legislature. The safe custody of a person condemned to death is second only in importance to the execution itself. It is as necessary to the performance of the duty of the warden as is the warrant for the execution of the judgment. Once condemned every presumption and intentment is in favor of guilt. It is idle to hold that a different rule should not apply to prisoners condemned to death than to those awaiting imprisonment for less grave crimes. The desire to cling to life is an inherent quality in human nature. Hence, with death facing a condemned prisoner, there would be every inducement to plot, to confederate with persons on the outside, to attempt to escape from a county jail lacking the safeguards of a penitentiary, or to accomplish self-destruction.

The question of custody being one of legislative control, and sections 1217 and 1227 prescribing that the warden shall have the custody of the condemned, in the absence of a plain provision that pending proceedings after judgment and before execution the custody must be transferred to the sheriff, there is no warrant for judicial intervention in this regard. Conceivably, the Legislature could have provided for a stay of custody as it did for a stay of execution, but as it has not done so the requirement of sections 1217 and 1227 must be deemed mandatory pending execution.

While the only question presented for decision here is whether the custody of a condemned prisoner in the penitentiary may be stayed pending execution, it may be appropriate to briefly consider whether in the absence of statutory provision there may be a stay of execution pending an appeal from an order before judgment denying a defendant's motion for a new trial. As already indicated, section 1243 would not authorize a stay other than by an appeal from a judgment of conviction. Ordinarily the appeal from the order denying a motion for a new trial and the appeal from the judgment are taken together and determined at the same time. But if, for any reason, the appeals were presented separately, possibly after the judgment had become final, and the appeal from the order could not be seasonably determined, the propriety of granting supersedeas would necessarily arise. There is no statutory provision for staying the execution pending an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and in such a situation the procedure, already described, would be similar to that applicable to appeals from orders after final judgment, and, as in the latter class of cases, should supersedeas be granted the writ would stay the execution alone.

The conclusion in the majority opinion rests primarily upon the assumption that the imprisonment in the penitentiary pending execution "is a part of the punishment for the crime and is in addition to the punishment therefor." Even if this be conceded, for present purposes, it will not be questioned that the Legislature is competent to provide that a capital prisoner shall be confined in the penitentiary pending execution, and that the propriety of such a provision would be beyond judicial review. It was stated in the second Durrant Case, 119 Cal. 201, 208, 51 P. 185, that the Legislature might impose any number of punishments for a crime provided they were not cruel and unusual or applied ex post facto. Therefore, the determinative question here is not whether imprisonment in the penitentiary pending execution is additional punishment, but rather whether the Legislature, acting within its powers, has provided that the custody of a capital prisoner shall be in the warden pending execution. I see no escape from the conclusion, already announced, that the Legislature has so deliberately provided.

In my opinion the writ of habeas corpus should be discharged and petitioner remanded to the custody of the warden.

PEOPLE v. RAPLEE. (Cr. 1260.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 3, 1925. Rehearing Denied Dec. 2, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 31, 1925.)

1. False pretenses — 31, 32—Allegations of facts in information sufficient to allege public offense, under statute.

Information for obtaining money by false pretenses, held sufficient to state a public offense, under Pen. Code, § 532, as against contention that it did not show ownership of money in prosecuting witness or causal connection between pretenses and effect on prosecuting witness.

2. False pretenses — 38—Where defendant represented to prosecuting witness that promissory note was receipt, there was no fatal variance between information and evidence.

In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, there was no fatal variance between information alleging money was obtained for worthless stock and evidence showing defendant gave prosecuting witness his promissory note, which was later exchanged for stock, where defendant represented to the prosecuting witness that note was mere receipt for money paid.

3. False pretenses — 49(1)—Defendant's making of false pretenses held sufficiently corroborated by the evidence.

In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses consisting of representation as to ownership of stock in mine, and worth of mine, and stock, corroboration as to the making of false representations, required by Pen. Code, § 1110, held sufficient.

4. False pretenses — 48—Evidence of profits from operation of adjoining mine inadmissible.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses as to ownership of stock sold and worth of mine, held, that evidence of profits made by adjoining mine was inadmissible.

5. False pretenses ⚡48—Evidence as to value of mine subsequent to making of representations, and at time company had lost rights therein, properly rejected.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses as to ownership of stock and worth of stock and property, held, that evidence as to value of mine subsequent to the making of the representations, and at a time when company had lost rights thereto, was properly rejected.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Wm. H. Raplee, was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses. He appeals. Affirmed.

Myron Harris, of Oakland, Timothy Healy, of San Francisco, and Henry G. Tardy, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Appellant was charged by information with a violation of section 532 of the Penal Code in having obtained by false pretenses the sum of $2,225 from the prosecuting witness, the alleged false pretenses consisting in the misrepresentations that he was the owner of certain shares of stock in a mining company; that the mine was a good, prosperous working one, the shares of which were worth $1 each. He was tried and convicted and this is an appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial and a motion in arrest of judgment. Various grounds of error are assigned, which it is claimed justify the setting aside of the judgment of conviction.

[1] It is first contended that the information is fatally defective in substance as it fails to allege a public offense. In this contention it is claimed that it omits to allege the ownership of the money obtained from the prosecuting witness; that it fails to show any causal connection between the alleged false pretenses and their effect on the prosecuting witness; and that it likewise fails to show any causal connection between the alleged false pretenses and any purpose or object of defendant in making them. We see no merit in this contention.

The information in substance charges defendant on or about the 23d day of April, 1923, at the county of Alameda, Cal., with then and there devising and intending by unlawful ways and means and by false and fraudulent pretenses and representations to obtain and get into his custody and possession the personal property of one Leonora E. Faulkner with intent to cheat and then and thereby cheat and defraud her by stating that he was the owner of 14,000 shares in a certain unincorporated common-law mining company organized and existing under the laws of the state of Nevada, and that the said shares were worth $1 per share; that it was a good, prosperous working mine, whereas, in truth and in fact, each and all of said pretenses and representations so made by defendant were false and fraudulent in the following particulars: That defendant was not the owner of such shares, nor were they worth $1 a share, but, on the contrary, they were without any value whatsoever, and that the mining company was not a good and prosperous one, and that each and all of said pretenses and representations so made by defendant were made for the purpose of inducing the prosecuting witness to pay over to defendant the sum of $2,225; that defendant knew the pretenses and representations so made by him were untrue and fraudulent.

The information proceeding charges that the prosecuting witness believing the false and fraudulent representations, and being deceived thereby, was induced by defendant to enter into an agreement under which she paid to him the sum mentioned for the said shares of stock; that defendant falsely and fraudulently received said sum of money with intent then and there to cheat and defraud the prosecuting witness out of the same.

It is clearly apparent that the information does contain definite recitals showing the ownership of the money in the prosecuting witness which negative any idea that the funds were the property of the defendant or any other person, and that it also shows a causal connection between the alleged false pretenses and their effect on the prosecuting witness, as it specifically recites, she believing the representations, and being deceived thereby, was induced to part with her funds. People v. Hines, 5 Cal. App. 122, 89 P. 858.

It is likewise apparent that the information shows a causal connection between the alleged false pretenses and the object of defendant in making them, as it further recites that they were made for the purpose of inducing the prosecuting witness to pay over to defendant the sum alleged. The allegations of fact, therefore, are amply sufficient to describe and charge a public offense under the statute. Pen. Code, § 532.

[2, 3] It is next claimed that a fatal variance exists between the information and the evidence. This contention is based upon the fact that the record contains testimony to show that defendant at the time he received the money from the prosecuting witness gave to her his promissory note for the sum of $2,500, which note was later given up for the stock. Other evidence, however, shows that the money parted with was paid for the shares of stock, and that defendant represented to the prosecuting witness, who, the record shows, was unfamiliar with business transactions, that the note was a mere receipt to be retained by her until such time as defendant could procure the shares of stock. There is, therefore, no merit in this contention. Lack of corroboration of the making by defendant of the false representations, as required by section 1110 of the Penal Code, is also urged as a ground for reversal. This contention is equally without merit.

As indicated above, three distinct false representations are set forth in the information, namely, that defendant represented himself to be the owner of the stock in question; that the mine was a good and prosperous working one; and that the shares thereof were worth $1 each. The record is a voluminous one, but in our opinion the case does not call for an extensive review of the evidence. Suffice it to say that it shows that defendant did state and represent to the prosecuting witness that the shares of stock in question were worth $1 each. It also appears therefrom that this representation was made in the presence of her sister, who testified fully upon the subject. There was also testimony to show that this statement was untrue and that defendant himself knew it to be so as he had made declarations, at or about the time of the sale of the stock, that it had no value. In regard to the false representation of ownership, there is evidence to show that while defendant claimed to be the owner, as a matter of fact, he had never owned any shares of stock in the company, but had procured the same from its offices at a time when the shares were considered worthless by reason of the company having forfeited its rights in the property, with the avowed purpose of using them as samples for other stock to be issued upon a possible incorporation of a company to be formed by him in the event that he could acquire control of the mining lands. It further appeared that his representation as to the mine being a prosperous and good working one was false, as the company had, at the time the sale was made, forfeited its rights in the property, and did not possess any property whatsoever. There is, therefore, no merit in the contention that the false representations were not corroborated in accordance with the statutory requirement.

[4, 5] The rejection of certain testimony offered for the purpose of showing that a large amount of money had been made in the operation of an adjoining mine is complained of. The offered evidence was properly refused, as it was manifestly incompetent. Other evidence as to the opinion of a witness concerning the character of the property at the time of the trial was rejected and this ruling is complained of. The opinion of the witness as to its value at a time subsequent to the making of the representations and when the company had lost all rights thereto was properly rejected.

Refusal of the trial court to instruct the jury that mere representations of value constitute a mere opinion is assigned as error justifying a reversal of the judgment. The jury was fully and fairly instructed upon this subject.

The judgment is affirmed.

BEYERLE v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(Civ. 5106.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 31, 1925.)

1. Admiralty. ⇐20—Contract of employment held to be of maritime nature, calling for admiralty jurisdiction.

Contract between employee and lumber company, where labor to be performed in running engine and working on raft anchored in navigable waters, held to include matter of a maritime nature; hence admiralty jurisdiction would prevail in action for injuries, and the State Industrial Accident Commission properly dismissed proceedings before it.

2. Admiralty ⇐20—Jurisdiction for injuries sustained held to be in admiralty.

Injuries to employee while engaged in running engine in navigable waters towing logs, and while working on log raft anchored in navigable waters, held to assume aspects comparable with a tort committed in navigable waters; hence jurisdiction would be in admiralty, and not in State Industrial Accident Commission.
